Operas IN ENGLAND. Sir William Davenant introduced a species of opera in London in 1684. The first regularly performed opera was at York buildings, in 1692. The first at Drury-lane was in 1705. Handel's opera Ridamistus was performed in 1720; and others by him were frequently performed a few years after. Gay's Beggar's Opera first performed in 1727, at the Lincoln's Inn theatre. It ran for sixty-three successive nights, but so offended the persons in power that the lord chamberlain refused a license for the performance of a second part of it entitled "Polly." By Gay's friends' subscription, his profits on its publication amounted to 1200*l.*, whereas the Beggar's Opera gained him only 400*l.*; see Theatres.

Ophicleide, the keyed bassoon, said to have been invented by Frichot, a Frenchman, in London, between 1791 and 1800.

Ophthalmic Hospitals, see Hospitals.

Ophthalmoscope, an apparatus for inspecting the interior of the eye, invented by professor H. Helmholtz, and described by him in 1851.

Opium, the juice of the white poppy, was known to the ancients, its cultivation being mentioned by Homer, and its medicinal use by Hippocrates. It is largely cultivated in British India, and was introduced into China by our merchants, which led eventually to the war of 1839, the importation being forbidden by the Chinese government. The revenue derived from opium by the Indian government in 1862 was about 7,850,000*l.*; in 1874, 8,000,000*l.* Laudanum, a preparation of opium, was employed early in the seventeenth century. A number of alkaloids have been discovered in opium: narcotine by Derosne, and morphia by Sertürner, in 1803. A society for suppressing the opium trade held a meeting in London, 17 Jan. 1881.

Oporto (W. Portugal), the ancient Calle, one of the most impregnable cities in Europe, and the mart of Portuguese wine known as "Port." A chartered company for the regulation of the port-wine trade was established in 1756. The French, under marshal Soult, were surprised here by lord Wellington, and defeated in an action fought 12 May, 1809. The Miguelites besieged Oporto, and were repulsed by the Pedreiros, with considerable loss, 19 Sept. 1832. The Oporto Wine Company was abolished in 1834, but re-established by a royal decree, 7 April, 1838. An international exhibition was opened here by the king, 18 Sept. 1865; see Portugal.

Opportunists, a name given to French politicians (especially the ultra-liberals), who suspend agitation for their peculiar opinions till a suitable opportunity comes; among them Gambetta is prominent, 1876-8.

Optic Nerves are said to have been discovered by N. Varole, a surgeon and physician of Bologna, about 1538.—Nour. Dict.

Optimism (from optimus, the best), the doctrine that everything which happens is for the best, in opposition to Pessimism (from pesimus, the worst). The germ of optimism is to be found in Plato, and in St. Augustin and other fathers; and has been especially propounded by Malebranche and Leibnitz, and adopted by Pope, Bolingbroke, Rousseau, and others. Optimism, as expressed in the term "the best of all possible worlds," is ridiculed by Voltaire (1694-1778) in his "Candide." The term meliorism (from melior, better) has been lately introduced; see Pessimism.

"Option," a term given at the time to the permission given to the inhabitants of Alsace and Lorraine by the German government to choose, before 30 Sept. 1872, whether they would quit their country or become German subjects. Great numbers emigrated into the French territories.—The "option" of archbishops respecting their claim on a benefice becoming void on the creation or translation of a bishop was abolished in 1845.

Oracles, a term applied to revelations made by God to man. They were given to the Jews at the Mercy-seat in the tabernacle; see Exod. xxv. 18-22. The Holy Scriptures are the Christian "oracles." Rom. iii. 2; 1 Pet. iv. 11. King Ahaziah sent to consult the oracle of Baal-zebub at Ekron about 856 B.C. The Greeks consulted especially the oracles of Jupiter and Apollo (see Dodona and Delphi); and the Italians those of Faunus, Fortune, and Mars.

Oran, Algeria (N. Africa), a Moorish city several times captured by the Spaniards; definitively occupied by the French in 1831, who have since added docks, etc.

Orange, a principality in S.E. France, formerly a lordship in the ninth or tenth century. It has been ruled by four houses successively: that of Giraud Adhemar (to 1174); of Baux (1182-1393); of Châlons (to 1530); and of Nassau (1530-1713); see Nassau. Philipbert the Great, prince of Orange, the last of the house of Châlons, having been wronged by Francis I. of France, entered the service of the emperor Charles V., to whom he rendered great services by his military talents. He was killed at the siege of Florence, 3 Aug. 1530. He was succeeded by his nephew-in-law, René of Nassau; see Princes of Orange under Holland. The eldest son of the king of Holland is styled the Prince of Orange, although the principality was ceded to France in 1713; see Aratus.

Orange River Territory, a free state of Dutch Boers in South Africa. The British government proclaimed its authority over this territory on 3 Feb. 1848, but transferred (by Sir George Clerk) its powers to a provisional government, 29 March, 1854. A Volksraad (legislative council) and governor were appointed. Disputes arose respecting the ownership of the diamond-fields in 1868. Population about 50,000 (half whites), 1877.

Orangemen. The "Battle of the Diamond," 21 Sept. 1795 (see Diamond), and the treachery experienced by the Protestants on that occasion, convinced them they would become an easy prey to the Roman Catholics, from their small numbers, unless they associated for their defence, and the first Orange lodge was formed in Armagh; but the name of Orangemen already existed. An Orange lodge was formed in Dublin; the members published a declaration of their principles (the maintenance of church and state) in Jan. 1798. After 1813 Orangism declined, but revived again in 1827, when the duke of Cumberland became grand-master; and it is stated that in 1836 there were 145,000 Orangemen in England and 125,000 in Ireland. After a parliamentary inquiry, Orange clubs were broken up in conformity with resolutions of the house of commons, but were revived in 1845. In Oct. 1857, the lord chancellor of Ireland ordered that justices of the peace should not belong to Orange clubs. The Orangemen in Canada were greatly excited during the visit of the prince of Wales in Sept. 1860. Mr. William Johnston, a grand-master, convicted of violating the Party Processions act, was elected M.P. for Belfast, Nov. 1869; see Belfast. The Orangemen's parade in New York, 12 July, 1871, led to a riot, in which 60 lives were lost.

Oranges. The sweet, or China, orange was first brought into Europe from China by the Portuguese in 1547; and it is asserted that the identical tree whence all the European orange-trees of this sort were produced is still preserved at Lisbon, in the gardens of one of its nobility. Orange-trees were first brought to England and planted, with little success, in 1595; they are said to have been planted at Beddington park, near Croydon, Surrey. The duty on imported oranges was repealed in 1860. The culture of oranges in Florida has rapidly grown into a great industry since 1865.

Orator Henley. An eccentric English gentleman of some talents, in 1726, opened his "oratory," a kind of chapel, in Newport market, where he gave lectures on theological topics on Sundays, and on other subjects on Wednesdays, every week. Novelty procured him many hearers, but he was too imprudent to gain any permanent advantage. He removed his oratory to Clare market, and sank into obscurity previously to his death, in 1736.

Oratorians (from the Latin orare, to pray), a regular order of priests established by St. Philip Neri about 1564, and so called from the oratory of St. Jerome at Rome, where they prayed. They had a foundation in France, commenced by Guillaume Ghibeuf and Pierre de Berulle (afterwards cardinal), 1612; approved by pope Paul V. 1613.—The rev. Frederick Faber and others, as "Fathers of the Oratory," established themselves first in King William street, Strand, in 1848, and afterwards at Brompton.

Oratorio, a kind of musical sacred drama, the subject of it being generally taken from the Scriptures. The origin of our oratorios (so named from having been first performed in an oratory) is ascribed to St. Philip Neri, about 1550. The first true oratorio—Emilio del Cavaliere's "Rappresentazione"—was performed at Rome in 1600. He was followed by Giovanni Carissimi, Alessandro Scarlatti, etc. The first oratorio in London was performed in Lincoln's Inn theatre, in Portugal street, in 1732. Handel's oratorio of "Israel in Egypt" was produced in 1738, and the "Messiah" in 1741; Haydn's "Creation" in 1798; Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," 1803; Spohr's "Last Judgment" (properly "Things"), 1825; Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in 1836, and "Elijah" in 1846; Costa's "Eli," 1845; "Naaman," 1864; S. Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," 1867; Benedict's "St. Peter," 1870; Macfarren's "John the Baptist," 1873; "Resurrection," 1876; and "Joseph," 1877; Dr. P. Armes's "Hezekiah," 1878.

Orchomenus, a small Greek state in Boeotia, was destroyed by the Thebans, 368 B.C.; restored by Philip II. of Macedon, 354; and given up by him to Thebes, 346.

Ordeal was known among the Greeks and Jews (Numb. v. 2). It was introduced into England by the Saxons. A prisoner who pleaded not guilty might choose whether he would put himself for trial upon God and his country, by twelve men, as at this day, or upon God only. The trial by ordeal was abolished in 1218.

Order of the Corporate Reunion, virtually a new episcopal church, said to arise out of the Christian Unity Association (which see). It proposed to form four stations (Canterbury, York, Caerleon, and St. Andrews), with rectors and provincials; announced 11 Sept. 1877.

Orders, see Knighthood.

Orders in Council were issued by the British government 7 Jan. and 11 Nov. 1807, prohibiting trade with the ports occupied by the French, being reprisals for Napoleon's Berlin decree (which see). They greatly checked the progress of manufactures in this country, and caused much distress till their removal in 1814.

Ordinances, see Ordinances, Self-denying Ordinances.

Ordination of ministers in the Christian church began with Christ and his apostles; see Mark iii. 14, and Acts vi. and xiv. 23. In England, in 1549, a new form of ordination of ministers was ordered to be prepared by a committee of six prelates and six divines.

Ordinance Office. Before the invention of guns, this office was supplied by officers under the following names: the bowyer, the crossbowyer, the galeater, or purveyor of helmets, the armorer, and the keeper of the tents. Henry VIII. placed it under the management of a master-general, a lieutenant, surveyor, etc. The master-general was chosen from among the first generals in the service of the sovereign. The appointment was formerly for life; but since the Restoration was held durante bene placito, and not unfrequently by a cabinet minister.—Beaton. The letters-patent for this office were revoked 25 May, 1855, and its duties vested in the minister of war, lord Panmure. The last master-general was lord Fitzroy-Somerset, afterwards lord Raglan.

Ordinance Survey. The trigonometrical survey of England was commenced by gen. Roy in 1783, continued by col. Colby, and completed by col. (afterwards sir Henry) James in 1856. The publication of the maps commenced in 1819, under the direction of col. Mudge, and was completed in 1862; a large part of these maps have been colored geologically. The survey of Ireland has been completed and published; that of Scotland is still going on. By the Survey act, passed 12 May, 1870, the Ordinance survey was transferred to the Board of Works. Directors: lieut.-gen. John Cameron, succeeded sir Henry James in 1875, died 30 June, 1878, col. A. C. Cooke.

Ordonnances, the laws enacted by the Capetan kings of France previous to 1789. They began with "In the name of the king," and ended with "Such is our good pleasure." The first in French is dated 1287 (Philip IV.). The publication of these "ordonnances," ordered by Louis XIV., 1706, is still in progress. The "ordonnances" of Charles X., promulgated 26 July, 1830, led to the revolution.

Oregon, one of the United States. A dispute respecting boundaries arose in 1845 between the British government and that of the United States, which was settled by treaty, 12 June, 1846. Oregon was admitted as a state Feb. 1859.

Organ, a development of the pandean-pipes; the "organ" in Gen. iv. 21 should be translated pipe. The invention is attributed to Archimedes, about 220 B.C.; and to Ctesibius, a barber of Alexandria, about 250 B.C. The organ was brought to Europe from the Greek empire, and was applied to religious devotions in churches about A.D. 657.—Bellarmin. Organs were used in the Western churches by pope Vitalianus in 658.—Ammonius. It is affirmed that the organ was known in France in the time of Louis I., 815, when one was constructed by an Italian priest. The organ at Haarlem is one of the largest in Europe; it has 60 stops and 8000 pipes. At Seville is one with 110 stops and 5300 pipes. The organ at Amsterdam has a set of pipes that imitate a chorus of human voices. Of the organs in ENGLAND, that at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, by Mr. Willis, was the largest; next in order, that at York minster; and that in the Music-hall, Birmingham. In London, the largest was, perhaps, that of Spitalfields church; and that in Christ church was nearly as extensive. The erection of the famous Temple organ was competed for by Schmidt and Harris; after long disputes, the question was referred to vote, and Mr. Jefferies, afterwards chief-justice, gave the casting-vote in favor of Schmidt (called Father Smith), about 1682. A monster organ was erected in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, in June, 1857. The organ by Willis, at the Royal Albert Hall, is now said to be the largest in the world, 1871. The largest organ in America is in the Music Hall, Boston. It was built by Walker, and has 4 manuals, 89 stops, and 4000 pipes. Other organs in the United States having from 2500 to 4000 pipes are those in Trinity and St. George's churches, New York; Plymouth Church and the Tabernacle, Brooklyn; Holy Trinity and Temple Emanuel, New York. These are all the work of American builders. A noble organ (by Bryceson), with many appliances, opened in the hall, Primrose Hill road, London, N., Jan. 1876.

Barrel organs are said to have been first made early in the eighteenth century. The finest was the Apollonicon (which see).

Organic Synthesis, see Chemistry.

Oriel College (Oxford), founded in 1326, by Adam de Brome, archdeacon of Stow, and almoner to king Edward II. This college derives its name from a tenement called O'oriole, on the site of which the building stands.

Orientalists. The first International Congress of these scholars was held at Paris, 1 Sept. 1873; M. Léon de Rosny, the founder, president. The second congress met at the Royal Institution, in London, 14-19 Sept. 1874; Dr. S. Birch, president. The third congress met at St. Petersburg, 1 Sept. 1876; the fourth at Florence, Sept. 1878. The fifth to meet at Berlin, 12-17 Sept. 1881; see Asiatic Societies.

Oriflamme, see Auriflamma.

Origenists pretended to draw their opinions from the writings of Origen, who lived 185-253. They maintained that Christ was the son of God no other way than by adoption and grace; that souls were created before the bodies; that the sun, moon, stars, and the waters that are under the firmament have souls; that the torments of the damned shall have an end; and that the fallen angels shall, after a time, be restored to their first condition. They were condemned by councils, and the reading of Origen's work was forbidden.—Burke. These doctrines were condemned by the council of Constantinople in 553.

"Origin of Species, BY MEANS OF NATURAL SELECTION," by Charles Darwin, F.R.S., first published 24 Nov. 1859; see Species.

Orion, STEAMSHIP. On 18 June, 1850, this splendid vessel, bound from Liverpool to Glasgow, struck on a sunken rock, northward of Portpatrick, within a stone-throw of land, and instantly filled. Of two hundred passengers more than fifty were drowned.

Orissa, a province of N.W. Bengal, India, with an area of 74,418 square miles, and a population of 20,000,000. It was conquered by Clive in 1755, and nearly all acquired by the company in 1765. It suffered much by famine in 1770 and 1792-3, and more especially from the end of 1865 to Nov. 1866, when it is said about 750,000 persons perished. The government and officials were censured for neglect and want of forethought. It is also said that during a hurricane in Oct. 1836, 22,500 persons were drowned.

Orkney and Shetland Isles (north of Scotland) were conquered by Magnus III. of Norway, 1099, and were ceded to James III. as the dowry of his wife Margaret, in 1469. The Orkneys were the ancient Orkades; united with Shetland, they now form one of the Scotch counties. The bishopric of Orkney, founded by St. Servanus early in the fifth century—some affirm by St. Colm—ended with the abolition of episcopacy in Scotland, about 1689; see Bishops in Scotland.

Orleans (a city in central France), formerly Aurelianum; gave title to a kingdom, 491, and afterwards to a duchy, usually held by one of the royal family. Attila the Hun, besieging it, was defeated by Aetius and his allies, 451. It was besieged by the English under earls of Salisbury and Suffolk, 12 Oct. 1428; bravely defended by Gaucour (as its fall would have ruined the cause of Charles VI., king of France); and relieved by the heroism of Joan of Arc, afterwards surnamed the Maid of Orleans, 29 April, 1429, and the siege was raised 18 May; see Joan of Arc. (The 439th anniversary was celebrated 10 May, 1868; the emperor and empress being present.) During the siege of Orleans, Feb. 1563, the duke of Guise was assassinated.

After nine hours' severe fighting, Orleans captured by the Germans, under gen. Von der Tann. More than 4000 prisoners were taken. The loss on both sides was heavy. About 35,000 on each side were engaged. The city was made to pay a war contribution of 60,000*l*.

11 Oct. 1870
Von der Tann and the Bavarians defeated by gens. D'Aurelle de Paladines and Pallières, and Orleans retaken. The Germans acknowledged the loss of about 700 men and 1000 prisoners, chiefly wounded. The French asserted the numbers of both to be higher, and were much cheered with their victory. The French loss was heavy. The chief conflict took place between Coulmiers and Baron of Baccon. . . . 9, 10 Nov. Ormulum, a metrical version of the Gospels and Acts, in early English, made by Orm, an ecclesiastic, in the twelfth century, printed at Oxford in 1852, from a MS. in the Bodleian.

Ornithology, see Birds.

Ornithorhynchus, the duck-billed platypus, or water-mole, a singular compound of the mammal and the bird, a native of Australia, was first described by Dr. Shaw in 1819.

Orquieta, Navarre (N. Spain). Here don Carlos—calling himself king Carlos VII.—grandson of don Carlos, brother of Ferdinand VII., commanding about 4000 men, was suddenly attacked by gen. Moriones with about 2000, and defeated after a short conflict, 4 May, 1872. He fled, leaving 757 prisoners and 88 dead.

Orphan-houses. The emperor Trajan first formed establishments for this purpose. Pliny relates in his Panegyric that he had caused 5000 free-born children to be sought out and educated, about A.D. 105. Orphan-houses properly so called are mentioned for the first time in the laws of the emperor Justinian. At the court of Byzantium the office of inspector of orphans, orphano-trophos, was so honorable that it was held by the brother of the emperor Michael IV. in the eleventh century; see Foundling Hospitals.

The Orphanotropheon at Halle, established by August Francke. . . . 1698-9

The Orphan Working Asylum for 20 boys was established at Hoxton in 1758. It is now situated at Haverstock hill, and contains 350 boys and girls.

Orrery, a planetary machine to illustrate and explain the motions of the heavenly bodies, appears to have been coeval with the clepsydra. Ptolemy devised the circles and epicycles that distinguish his system about 130. The planetary clock of Finée was begun 1553. The planetarium of De Rheita was formed about 1650. The planetarium, now termed the Orrery, it is said, was constructed by Rowley, after a pattern devised by the clock-maker George Graham, at the expense of Charles Boyle, earl of Orrery, about 1715. A large "planetarium" was constructed by the rev. William Pearson, for the Royal Institution, London, about 1803. An excellent planetarium, constructed in London by signor N. Perini, was exhibited in Dec. 1879.

Osmium, one of the heaviest known metals, discovered in platinum ore by Tennant in 1803.

Osnaburg (N. Germany) made the seat of a bishopric by Charlemagne, near the end of the eighth century. After the treaty of Westphalia in 1648, the bishop was a Roman Catholic and Protestant alternately, the latter being chosen from the house of Brunswick. Frederick, duke of York, the last bishop, resigned in 1806, when the lands were annexed to Hanover. He died 5 Jan. 1837.

Osney (S.E. Ireland), Bishopric or, was first planted at Saiger about 402; translated to Aghadoc, in Upper Ossery, in 1052; and to Kilkenny about the end of the reign of Henry II. It was united to Ferns and Leighlin in 1533.

Ostend (Belgium) sustained a siege by the Spaniards from July, 1601, to Sept. 1604, when it honorably capitulated. On the death of Charles II. of Spain, the French seized Ostend; but in 1706, after the battle of Ramillies, it was retaken by the allies. It was again taken by the French in 1745, but restored in 1748. In 1756, the French garrisoned this town for the empress-queen Maria Theresa. In 1792, the French once more took Ostend, which they evacuated in 1798, but regained in 1794. The English destroyed the works of the Bruges canal; but, the wind shifting before they could re-embark, they surrendered to the French, 19 May, 1798. The Ostend East India Company, established 1773, was dissolved 1781; see Cuba, note.

Ostracism (from the Greek ostrakon, a potsherd or shell), a mode of proscription at Athens, is said to have been first introduced by the tyrant Hippias; others ascribe it to Cleisthenes, about 610 B.C. The people wrote the names of those whom they most suspected upon small shells, these they put in an urn or box and presented to the senate. Upon a scrutiny, he whose name was oftenest written was sentenced by the council to be banished from his altar and hearth. 6000 votes were required. Aristides, noted for his justice, and Miltiades, for his victories, were thus ostracized. The custom was abolished by ironically proscribing Hyperbolus, a mean person, about 336 B.C.

Ostrich (the struthio of the ancients), a native of Africa (see Job xxxix. 14). Ostriches were hatched and reared at San Donato, near Florence, 1850-60; and at Trecco Abbey, the seat of Augustus Smith, in the Scilly Isles, 1866.

Ostrogoths, or EASTERN GOTHS, were distinguished from the Visigoths (Western Goths) about 330. After ravaging eastern Europe, Thracia, etc., their great leader, Theodoric, established a kingdom in Italy, which lasted from 476 to 553; see Italy.

Ostrolenka (Poland). Near here the French defeated the Prussians 16 Feb. 1807. In another battle here, between the Poles and Russians, the slaughter was immense, but the Poles remained masters of the field, 26 May, 1831.

Oswego, Fort. This fort, at Oswego, on Lake Ontario, was built by the English. It was captured by Montcalm in 1756, and was nearly demolished. There was a small garrison there in the spring of 1813, when on 5 May, 1814, a British fleet, with 8000 men, appeared before it. Of these 1760 landed and attacked the fort. They were repulsed by the garrison, under Hamilton Mitchell.

Otago, see New Zealand, 1848, 1861, 1868.

Otaheite, or TAHITI, an island in the South Pacific ocean, seen by Byron in 1765, and visited in 1767 by capt. Wallis, who called it George III. Island. Capt. Cook came hither in 1769 to observe the transit of Venus, sailed around the whole island in a boat, and stayed three months; he visited it twice afterwards; see Cook. Omai, a native of this island, was brought to England by Cook, and carried back in his last voyage. In 1799, king Pomare ceded the district of Matawai to some English missionaries. Queen Pomare was compelled to put herself under the protection of France, 2 Sept. 1813. She retracted, and Otaheite and the neighbouring islands were taken possession of by admiral Duperre-Thouars in the name of the French king, Nov. 1840. The French imprisoned Mr. Pritchard, the English consul, 5 March, 1844, but the act was annulled in France. Queen Pomare IV. here 26 Feb. 1813, succeeded her brother, Pomare III., in Jan. 1807, died 17 Sept. 1877, having reigned 30 years. By consent of her successor, the island was formally annexed to France, 20 June, 1880.

Othescope (from othes, I propel), apparatus invented by Mr. W. Crookes for studying molecular motion, the effects of radiation; described by him, April, 1877.

Ottawa (formerly Bytown), on the river Ottawa, was appointed to be the capital of Canada by the queen in Aug. 1858. The executive council met here 23 Nov. 1865, and the Canadian parliament was, for the first time, opened here by the governor-general, lord Monck, on 6 June, 1868. Mr. Darcy McGee, M.P. for Montreal (once an Irish agitator, but afterwards exceedingly loyal), was assassinated on his return from parliament, 7 April, 1868. Fenians were suspected, and the town was put in a state of siege. Whelan, convicted of the murder, 15 Sept. 1866, was executed Feb. 1869. A Dominion exhibition was opened here 24 Sept. 1879. Population in 1861, 14,608; in 1871, 21,544.

Otterburn (Northumberland). In 1805, the Scotch besieged Newcastle and were driven off by Henry Percy (Hotspur), son of the earl of Northumberland. Percy pursued them to Otterburn, where a battle was fought on 10 Aug., in which the earl of Douglas was killed and Percy taken prisoner. On this battle the ballad of "Cherry Chase" is founded.

Oudenarde (Belgium). Here the English and allies, under the duke of Marlborough and prince Eugene, thoroughly defeated the French besiegers, 11 July, 1708.

Oulart (S.E. Ireland). Here 6000 Irish insurgents attacked the king's troops, in small numbers, 27 May, 1798. The North Cork militia, after great feats of bravery, were out to pieces, five men only escaping.—Massacre.

Ounce (from uncia), the sixteenth part of the pound avoirdupois and twelfth of the pound troy. Its precise weight was fixed by Henry III., who decreed that an English ounce should be 480 dry grains of wheat; that twelve of them ounces should be a pound; and that eight pounds should be a gallon of wine, 1233.

Ourique (Portugal), where Alfonso, count or duke of Portugal, is said to have encountered five Saracen kings and a great army of Moors, 25 July, 1139, and signally defeated them; and then to have been hailed the first king. Lisbon, the capital, was taken, and he soon after was crowned.

Outlaw, one deprived of the benefit of the law, and out of the sovereign's protection; a punishment for such as being called in law do contemptuously refuse to appear. In the reign of Edward III., all the judges agreed that none but the sheriff only having lawful warrant therefor should put to death any man outlawed.—Conc. Outlawry in civil proceedings was abolished by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, 15 Aug. 1879.

Ouzel Galley Society. In 1700, the case of the Ouzel Galley, a ship in the port of Dublin, excited great legal perplexity, and was referred to an arbitration of merchants, whose prompt decision was highly approved. This led to the present society, founded in 1705.

Ovariectomy. This important surgical operation was devised and first performed by Dr. E. McDowell, of Kentucky, U.S., 1809.

Ovation, an inferior triumph which the Romans allowed those generals of their army whose victories were not considerable. Publius Posthumus Tubertus was the first who was decreed an ovation, 503 B.C. A sheep (oris) was offered by the general instead of a bull.

Overland Mail, see Waghorn. The overland mail travelled first through the Cenis tunnel to Brindisi, saving 24 hours, 5 Jan. 1872.

Overseers of the poor for parishes were appointed in 1601; see Poor-laws.

Owens College, Manchester, founded by means of a bequest of 100,000*l.* by John Owens, merchant, who died in 1846. A new constitution was obtained in 1870; and the duke of Devonshire, president, laid the first stone of the new building, 23 Sept. 1870, and opened it 8 Oct. 1873. Mr. E. R. Langworthy bequeathed 10,000*l.* to develop the chair of experimental physics, 1874. The college proposed as a university, July, 1876-8; see Victoria University.

Whyhee, or HAWAII, an island in the N. Pacific ocean, discovered Dec. 1778 by capt. Cook. On 14 Feb. 1779 he here fell a victim to a sudden resentment of the natives. A boat having been stolen by one of the islanders, the captain went on shore to seize the king, and keep him as a hostage till the boat was restored. The people would not submit to this insult, and their resistance brought on hostilities, and capt. Cook and some of his companions were killed. Great progress has been recently made in civilization here, and an order of nobility and a representative assembly were instituted in 1860. The population then was about 120,000, about 60,000 in 1878; a railway opened in 1878; see Sandwich Isles.

Owners of Land, see Domesday.

Oxalic Acid, which exists in several plants, especially in sorrel, is now abundantly obtained for use in the arts from sawdust acted upon by caustic potash or soda, according to Dr. Dale's process, patented in 1862.

Oxford's Act, BISHOP OF, see District Churches.

Oxford's Assault on the Queen. Edward Oxford, a youth who had been a servant in a public-house, discharged two pistols at queen Victoria and prince Albert, as they were proceeding up Constitution hill in an open phaeton from Buckingham palace, 10 June, 1840. He stood within a few yards of the carriage, but neither her majesty nor the prince was injured. Oxford was tried at the Old Bailey (10 July), and was adjudged to be insane, and sent first to Bethlehem hospital, next to Broadmoor; and set at liberty in 1868, on condition of going abroad.

Oxus (the Persian and Turkish Djihoun; local name, Amou Daryá), a river of Central Asia; supposed to have changed its course before A.D. 1000, and to have resumed its ancient bed in 1878.

Oxygen, a gas (named from the Greek ὀξύς, sharp, as being generally found in acids), is the most abundant of all substances, constituting about one third of the solid earth, and forming about nine tenths of water and one fifth of the atmosphere. It was first separated from red oxide of mercury by Priestley, 1 Aug. 1774, and by Scheele, who was ignorant of Priestley's discovery, in 1775. It is a supporter of animal life (in respiration), and of combustion. An oxygen gas company was announced in Dec. 1864, its object being the cheap manufacture of oxygen for its application to the production of perfect combustion in lamps, stoves, furnaces, etc. Oxygen was liquefied by Raoul Pictet at Geneva (pressure, 820 atmospheres, temp. 140 below zero cent.), 22 Dec. 1877; see Ozone.

A statue of Priestley, by F. J. Williamson, at Birmingham, was unveiled by professor T. H. Huxley, 1 Aug. 1874, the centenary of the discovery of oxygen. This was also celebrated at Northumberland, Pa., where he was buried, Feb. 1804. The following telegram was sent 31 July: "The brethren at the grave to the brethren at the home of Priestley send greeting on this centennial anniversary of the birth of chemistry."

Oyer and Terminer, a commission directed to the judges of the courts, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, felonies, etc., 1285.

O yes! A corruption of the French oyez, hear ye! The ancient term still used by a public crier and by the usher of courts of justice to enjoin silence and attention.

Oyster (the Latin Ostrea edulis). British oysters are celebrated by the Roman satirist Juvenal (Sat. iv. 140), about 100. The robbery of oyster-beds is prohibited by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29 (1827). About 15,000 bushels of oysters were said to be produced from the Essex beds alone. In 1858 M. Coste commenced rearing oysters in great numbers on the coast of Brittany, and his plan has been found successful.

An act for promoting the cultivation of oysters in the United Kingdom passed. Aug. 1866
One for the preservation of oyster-fisheries 3 May, 1867
Certain restrictions of the Oyster-fisheries act, 1862, removed by the Fisheries act 1868
The Fisheries (oyster, crab, and lobster) act forbids the sale of deep-sea oysters between 15 June and 4 Aug.; and the sale of others between 14 May and 4 Aug.; passed 10 Aug. 1877
Oysters, about 1830 the commonest of food, are now becoming scarcer and scarcer, although their reproduction is about half-a-million-fold. A committee recommend a close time for dredging—viz., 1 May to 1 Sept.; deep-sea fishing to be restricted, as at present, from 15 June to 15 Aug.; no oyster to be sold under 2½ inches in diameter. The Whitstable beds, in 1875, are said to have produced about 79,564,000 oysters; value about 55,140*l*.

American and Portuguese oysters are now largely imported (1878).

A special investigation of the oyster-trade of the United States was made in connection with the census of 1880. The industry is very large, the wholesale trade of New York alone amounting to more than $25,000,000 annually. The exportation of American oysters began about 1878, when the value of the exports was $393,063. In 1879 it was $453,306.

Ozokerit, a mineral hydro-carbon found in Moldavia and Wallachia. From it is distilled a substance suitable for making candles; introduced in the autumn of 1871.

Ozone (from the Greek ὀζειν, to yield an odor) was discovered by Schönbein of Basel in 1840, when experimenting with the then newly invented battery of sir William Grove, and was recognized by him successively as a minute constituent of the oxygen gas resulting from the electrolysis of water effected by a current of high tension; of air or oxygen through which electric discharges have taken place; and of air in which moist phosphorus has been undergoing slow oxidation.

Marignac determined the action of ozone on various substances to be due to their oxidation 1845
Ozonometers constructed 1866
M. Schönbein announced his discovery of another modification of oxygen, which he termed antiozone, hitherto found only in the compound state (in peroxides of sodium, potassium, etc.) 1859
The French Academy of Sciences appointed a committee of eminent philosophers to inquire into the nature and relations of ozone 4 Dec. 1865
Andrews and Tait demonstrated ozone to be a condensed form of oxygen 1860, "
This further established by Soré and Brodie, by quantitative reactions (Odling suggested and Brodie proved ozone to be 3 parts of oxygen compressed into the space of 2) 1873
Ozone, generated by a current produced by Wilde's magneto-electric machine, employed to bleach sugar, by Edward Beane's patent Aug. 1868
Liquefied by Hautefeuille and Chappuis Oct. 1880

* The commissioners' statutes propose annexation of St. Alban's to Merton College, New Inn to Balliol, St. Mary's to Oriel; St. Edmund's will probably be annexed to Queen's.

Padlocks are said to have been invented by Beecher at Nuremberg, 1540, but are mentioned much earlier.

Padua, the Roman Patavium, in Venetia, N. Italy, said to have been founded by Antenor soon after the fall of Troy, 183 B.C. It flourished under the Romans. Patavian Latin was considered very corrupt, and is traced in Livy, a native of Padua. After being an independent republic, and a member of the Lombard league, Padua was ruled by the Carrara family from 1318, with a short interruption, till 1405, when it was seized by the Venetians. The university was founded about 1220. It was closed through disturbances, 1848-50.

Pagans, the heathen, worshippers of idols, not agreeing in any set form or points of belief. Constantine ordered the pagan temples to be destroyed throughout the Roman empire, 331. His nephew, J. J. J., attempted their restoration 361, but paganism was renounced by the Roman senate in 388, and finally overthrown in the reign of Theodosius the younger, about 391.

Palaeography, ancient writing; see Diplomatic Writing.

Palaeologi, a family which reigned as emperors of the East from 1260 to 1453. George Palaeologus raised Alexius Comnenus to the throne in 1081, and thereby founded his own family. Andrew, the last Palaeologus, son of Thomas, ruler of the Morea, after the overthrow of his father, became a Mahometan at Constantinople about 1533. A person who called himself John Anthony Palaeologus Lascaris died at Turin, Sept. 1874. His claims were doubted.

Palaeontology (from the Greek palaios, ancient, and ontos, beings) treats of the evidences of organic beings in the earth's strata. It is a branch of geology (which see). Cuvier, Mantell, Agassiz, Owen, Edward Forbes, and Blainville—all of the present century—may be reckoned as fathers of this science. The Palaeontographical Society, which publishes elaborate monographs of British organic remains, was founded in 1847. The journal Palaeontographica (German) began 1851. Professor Owen's "Palaeontology" was published in 1860. "Nearly 40,000 species of animals and plants have been added to the 'Systema Naturae' by palaeontological research."—Huxley. See Man.

Palaeopolis, see Naples.

Palais Royal, Paris, originally Palais Cardinal, built for cardinal Richelieu by Le Mercier, 1620-28, received its present name when occupied by Louis XIII., to whom the cardinal gave it shortly before his death in 1642. Louis XIV., in 1692, gave it to his nephew Philippe, duke of Orleans, and it became the residence of his successors. It was confiscated by the republic in 1793, after the execution of Philippe Egalité. Louis Philippe resided in it, 1814-31. It suffered much injury at the revolution in 1848. Under the second empire it became the residence of prince Jerome and his son Napoleon. The buildings were much injured by fire by the communists, 24 May, 1871.

Palatinate of the Rhine, one of the seven ancient electorates of Germany. It was long united to Bavaria, but was separated in 1594.—Frederick V., the elector palatine in 1610, married in 1613 Elizabeth, the daughter of James I. of England, and thus was an ancestor of queen Victoria; see Hanover. In 1619 he was elected king of Bohemia, but lost all by his defeat by the Austrians at Prague in 1620. The Palatinate was horribly ravaged by Tilly in 1622, and by the French in 1688. Several thousands of the ruined peasantry were sent to America by the British government and people. The elector palatine Charles Theodore inherited Bavaria in 1778; since when the two electorates have been united; see Bavaria.

Palatine. William the Conqueror made his nephew, Hugh d'Abrincis, count palatine of Chester with the title of earl, about 1070. Edward III. created the palatine of Lancaster, 1369; see Lancaster, Duchy of. The bishoprics of Ely (963) and Durham were also made counties palatine. There is also mention made of the county palatine of Hexham in 25 Henry VIII. c. 10, which then belonged to the archbishop of York; but by the 14th of Elizabeth it was dissolved, and made part of the county of Northumberland. The palatine jurisdiction of Durham was separated from the diocese, and vested in the crown, 6 Will. IV. c. 19, 21 June, 1836.

Pale, the name given to the part of Ireland colonised by the English—viz., parts of the counties of Louth, Dublin, Meath, and Kildare. Anglo-Irish rulers were termed Lords of the Pale. Their arbitrary exactions led to a royal commission of inquiry in 1587. The defection of the lords of the Pale in 1641 was followed by a general insurrection, and the royal cause was ruined in 1647. In 1652 Ireland was committed to the rule of four commissioners.

Palermo (N.W. Sicily), the ancient Panormus. It was held by the Carthaginians, 415 B.C.; taken by the Romans, 254 B.C.; by the Saracens, A.D. 832; and by the Normans, 1072. Here Roger II. was crowned king of Sicily, 1130. Palermo was the scene of the Sicilian Vespers (which see), 30 March, 1292. It suffered from earthquakes in 1736 and 1748. The king Ferdinand resided at Palermo from 1806 to 1815, while Naples was ruled by Joseph Bonaparte and Joachim Murat. It revolted against the tyranny of Ferdinand II. 12 Jan. 1848. It was attacked by gen. Filangieri, 29 March, 1849, and surrendered on 14 May. It was taken by Garibaldi, 6 June, 1860. An insurrection against the abolition of the monastic establishments broke out in Palermo on 28 Sept. 1866, and was suppressed by the royal troops with much bloodshed; order was restored by 23 Sept.

Palestine, see Jerusalem. After being several times conquered by the Saracens, and retaken from the seventh to the tenth century, and after being the scene of the wars of the Crusades (which see), and other conflicts, Palestine was united to the Ottoman empire by Selim I. in 1516; see Bible (note), Holy Places, and Syria.

Palestine visited by the prince of Wales.

March and April, 1868
"The Palestine Exploration Fund" was founded by many eminent persons as a society "for the thorough gation of the archæology, topography, geology, and manners and customs of the Holy Land;" at the first meeting the archbishop of York was in the chair, 22 June, 1865

By its means capt. Wilson and a party left England for Palestine in Nov. 1865; they arrived at Damascus, Dec. 20; and in the following spring explored Jezreel, Nazareth, and many other parts of the Holy Land. Excavations in Jerusalem carried on by capt. Warren, 1867-1870

Palestro (N. Italy). Here the Sardinians defeated the Austrians, 30, 31 May, 1859.

Palimpsest (from the Greek πάλιν, again; and ψάω, I efface), parchments written on after the previous writing had been partially effaced. Cardinal Mai, by removing the second writing in some MSS., recovered the original. This was the case with Cicero's "De Republica," published by Mai in 1821. It had been covered by a treatise of Lactantius.

Pall, Pallium, in the Roman Church an ensign of dignity conferred by the pope upon archbishops. By a decretal of pope Gregory XI. (about 1370), no archbishop could call a council, bless the chrism, consecrate churches, ordain a clerk, or consecrate a bishop till he had received his pall from the see of Rome. The pall was first worn by an Irish archbishop in 1152, when Gelasius was recognized as primate of all Ireland.

Palladium, the statue of Pallas, said to have fallen from heaven near the tent of Ilus, as he was building Ilium, which the oracle of Apollo declared should never be taken so long as the Palladium was found within its walls. The Greeks are said to have obtained it by craft during the Trojan war, 1184 B.C.; but some writers assert another statue was taken, and that the real Palladium was conveyed from Troy to Italy by Æneas, 1183 B.C., and preserved by the Romans with the greatest secrecy in the temple of Vesta.—PALLADIUM is a rare metal, discovered in platinum ore by Dr. Wollaston in 1803.

Pallas, the planet, was discovered by Olbers, at Bremen, 28 March, 1802.

Palliser's Chilled Shot, see Cannon.

Pall Mall, a street near St. James palace, London, is named from a French game at ball (paillé-maille, being a wooden mallet), resembling the modern croquet, having been played there about 1621. Among eminent inhabitants were Nell Gwynne and Dr. Thomas Sydenham.—THE PALL MALL GAZETTE, a daily independent political and literary journal, first appeared 7 Feb. 1865, and was edited by Mr. Frederick Greenwood till 1 May, 1880, when it became a liberal paper, edited by Mr. John Morley.

Palmerston Administration.* The resignation of the Aberdeen administration was announced 1 Feb. 1855, but nearly all its members returned to office soon after under lord Palmerston; lord Derby and lord John Russell having each in vain endeavored to form an administration. On 22 Feb. Mr. Gladstone, sir James Graham, and Mr. Sidney Herbert resigned on account of the Sebastopol inquiry. Lord John Russell resigned 18 July. Lord Canning was appointed governor-general of India, 4 July, 1855. This cabinet resigned 20 Feb. 1858, in consequence of a vote of censure upon it for introducing the Foreign Conspiracy bill, and was succeeded by the Derby administration (which see).

First lord of the treasury, Henry viscount Palmerston.

Lord chancellor, lord Cranworth.

President of the council, earl Granville.

Lord privy seal, duke of Argyll; next, earl of Harrowby; afterwards the marquess of Chancarde.

Secretaries—home, sir George Grey; foreign, earl of Clarendon; colonial, Sidney Herbert (resigned Feb. 22); afterwards lord J. Russell (resigned July 13); sir William Molesworth (died 22 Oct. 1855); next, Henry Labouchere; war, lord Panmure.

Chancellor of the exchequer, W. E. Gladstone (resigned 22 Feb.); next, sir G. Cornwall Lewis.

First lord of the admiralty, sir James Graham (resigned 22 Feb.); next, sir Charles Wood.

Public works, sir William Molesworth; next, sir B. Hall (appointed 22 July, 1855).

Postmaster-general, viscount Canning (appointed governor-general of India, 4 July); next, duke of Argyll.

President of the board of trade, lord Stanley of Alderley.

Marquess of Lansdowne, without office.

Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, earl of Harrowby; next, M. T. Baileys (appointed 24 Nov. 1855).

Palmerston-Russell Administration. The second Derby administration (which see) resigned 11 June, 1859. Earl Granville was requested by the queen to form an administration, and obtained the support of lord Palmerston, but not of lord John Russell; the last two then agreed to form a cabinet, which came into office 18 June, 1859. On the decease of lord Palmerston, 18 Oct. 1865, earl Russell became premier; see Russell.

First lord of the treasury, Henry viscount Palmerston.

Lord high chancellor, John lord Campbell (d. 23 June, 1861); succeeded by sir Richard Bethell, made lord Westbury, who resigned 4 July, 1865; succeeded by lord Cranworth.

Lord president of the council, earl Granville.

Lord privy seal, duke of Argyll.

Secretaries: foreign affairs, lord John (afterwards earl) Russell; colonies, duke of Newcastle; succeeded by Edward Cardwell, 8 April, 1864; home, sir G. Cornwall Lewis; succeeded by sir George Grey; war, Sidney (afterwards lord) Herbert; succeeded by sir G. C. Lewis (died 13 April, 1863), and by earl de Grey (1 May); India, sir Charles Wood.

Chancellor of the exchequer, William Ewart Gladstone.

First lord of the admiralty, duke of Somerset.

President of the board of trade, Thomas Milner Gibson.

[This office was offered to Mr. R. Cobden, and declined by him.]

Secretary of state for Ireland, Edward Cardwell; succeeded by sir R. Peel (not in the cabinet).

Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, sir George Grey, bart.; succeeded by Edward Cardwell; and by earl Clarendon, 8 April, 1864.

Postmaster-general, earl of Elgin (proceeded to China in April, 1860); succeeded by lord Stanley of Alderley, appointed Sept. 1860.

Four-law board, T. Milner Gibson; succeeded by Charles P. Villiers (9 July, 1860).

PALMERSTON'S ACT for abatement of smoke nuisance (16 & 17 Vict. c. 128), 20 Aug. 1853.

Palm-Sunday. When Christ made his entry into Jerusalem, multitudes of the people who were come to the feast of the Passover took branches of the palm-tree, and went forth to meet him, 33. It is usual, in some countries, to carry palms on the Sunday before Easter; hence called Palm-Sunday.

Palmyra (Syria) was supposed to have been the Tadmor in the wilderness built by Solomon, but was manifestly Grecian. The brilliant part of the history of Palmyra was under Odenatus and his queen, Zenobia. At the death of Odenatus, Zenobia assumed the title of queen of the East, in 267. Aurelian defeated her at Emesa in 272, and made her captive, 273, and killed Longinus, the philosopher, her friend. Palmyra is now inhabited by a few Arab families. The ruins were visited in 1751 by Mr. Wood, who published an account of them in 1753. Mr. Dawkins and Mr. Bruce also visited Palmyra.

* Henry John Temple was born 20 Oct. 1784; was educated at Harrow, Edinburgh, and Cambridge; succeeded his father, viscount Palmerston, 1802; became M.P. and a junior lord of the admiralty, 1807; was secretary at war, 1809-28; and a secretary for foreign affairs, Nov. 1830-34; April, 1835, to Sept. 1841; and July, 1846, to Dec. 1851; and home secretary, Dec. 1852, to March, 1855, when he became first lord of the treasury. He was created lord warden of the Cinque Ports, 31 March, 1861; and master of the corporation of the Trinity House, 16 June, 1862. He sat for Tiverton, 1835-63. He died 18 Oct., and was buried in Westminster Abbey, 27 Oct. 1865. His statue at Romey, by M. Noble, was uncovered by earl Russell, 21 July, 1868. Lady Palmerston died 11 Sept. 1869, aged 82.

Palo Alto, BATTLE OF. Gen. Taylor, in command of the army of occupation in Texas, marched from Point Isabel on the evening of 7 May, 1846, to the relief of Fort Brown, opposite Matamoras; see Fort Brown. At noon the next day he discovered a Mexican army, under gen. Arista, full 6000 strong, drawn up in battle order upon a beautiful prairie called Palo Alto. Taylor, with little more than 2000 men, attacked him. The contest lasted five hours. At twilight the Mexicans gave way and fled. The Americans lost, in killed and wounded, 53; the Mexican loss was about 600; see Mexican War.

Pampeluna (N.E. Spain, taken by the French on their invasion of Spain) was invested by the British, between whom and the French obstinate conflicts took place, 27 and 29 July, 1813. It surrendered to the British, 31 Oct. in that year.

Pamphlets. Their first appearance among us is generally thought to have been in opposition to the Church of Rome. Those who were first convinced of the reasonableness of the "new learning," as it was then called, propagated their opinions in small pieces, cheaply printed, and (what was then of great importance) easily concealed. Political pamphlets began in Edward VI.'s time, and were very numerous in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries (by Defoe, Swift, Steele, and others).

Paul Louis Courier wrote "Simple Discours" and other pamphlets against the priests and nobles after the restoration of the Bourbons, 1815. His "Pamphlet des Pamphlets," defending the pamphleteer (published 1824), probably led to his murder, 10 April, 1825.

Large collections are in the libraries of the British Museum and the Royal and London Institutions. Certain enactments respecting pamphlets removed by an act passed July, 1869.

Panama, the isthmus which joins the two Americas; see Darien. Across this a ship-canal was proposed by the Bulwer-Clayton treaty, 19 April, 1850. A treaty for the construction of a ship-canal through the isthmus by the United States was signed by representatives of that government and that of Colombia, 26 Jan. 1870. In 1855 a new state, New Granada, was divided into eight federal states, one of which is named PANAMA. A revolution took place in Panama on 9 March, 1865; the government was deposed, and don Jil Colunje became president; succeeded by Vincent Olarte, 1 Oct. 1866. Panama is now subject to Colombia (which see). The government overthrown by Colombian troops without bloodshed, about 12 Oct. 1875.

Pandean-pipes (said to be the Greek syrinx, and the ugab or organ of the Bible, Gen. iv. 21 and Psa. cl.), usually seven tubes, popular in Britain early in the nineteenth century. A "Preceptor" for Davies's "new invented syrinx" was published in 1807.

Pandects, a digest of the civil law, made by order of Justinian, 528. It is stated that a copy of these Pandects was discovered in the ruins of Amalfi, 1187; removed from Pisa in 1415, and preserved in the library of the Medici at Florence as the Pandecta Florentina.

Pandusia (Bruttium, S. Italy). Here Alexander, king of Epirus, was defeated and slain by the Bruttians, 326 B.C. Lævinus, the Roman consul, was defeated at Pandusia, in Lucania, by Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, 280 B.C.

Panæa, or PANIUS (Syria). Here Antiochus the Great defeated Scopas, the Egyptian general, and his Greek allies, 198 B.C.

Pannonia, part of Illyria, now Hungary. Was finally subdued by Tiberius, A.D. 8.

Panopticon of Science and Art, in Leicester square, erected in 1852-3 for a chartered company by Mr. T. H. Lewis, the architect; was opened in 1854 for lectures, musical performances, etc. It had a very large electrical machine, battery, etc. The speculation did not succeed; the building was sold in 1857; and in Feb. 1858 was opened for concerts and horsemanship, and called the Alhambra.

Jeremy Bentham's book "Panopticon, or the Inspection House," an establishment in which persons may be kept under inspection, published 1791; see Milbank.

Panoramas, invented by Robert Barker, are bird's-eye views painted around the wall of a circular building. In 1788 he exhibited at Edinburgh a view of that city, the first picture of the kind. He then commenced similar exhibitions in London in 1789, having adopted the name "Panorama," and was ultimately enabled to build commodious premises in Leicester square for that purpose. (He died in April, 1806.) J. P. Louthembourg, a painter, termed the panoramist, invented the "Eidophusikon," natural phenomena represented by moving pictures, exhibited at Lisle street, Leicester square, 8 April, 1781. "This was certainly not a panorama."—Dr. Rimbauld.

Panormus, see Palermo.

Pantagraph (from the Greek πάντα, all things, and γραφειν, to write, and incorrectly termed Pentagraph), an instrument for copying, reducing, or enlarging plans, etc., invented by Christopher Scheiner, about 1603; improved by prof. Wallace, and called "Eidograph," about 1821.

Pantaleon, a musical instrument (a drum with tuned strings) invented by Pantaleon Hebenstreit about 1755.

Pantechnicon, a range of buildings, Motcombe street, Knightsbridge, London, W., erected by Seth Smith, as a receptacle for paintings, jewelry, furniture, carriages, etc., 1830; was destroyed by fire, 13, 14 Feb. 1874, when much property was lost; rebuilt 1874.

Panthays, Mahometans in the Chinese province Yunan, became independent under a sultan during the Tac-ping revolt, 1851-64. After its suppression, the Panthays, after a severe struggle, were also subdued. Their capital, Talifoo, was captured, and its inhabitants cruelly massacred in Feb. 1873. The Panthays sent an embassy to England in 1872, without effect. Sultan Suleiman committed suicide.

Pantheism, the formula of which is "everything is God, and God is one," was especially taught by Xenophanes, who died 600 B.C. The doctrine is attributed to Spinoza, Kant, Fichte, and other modern philosophers. Amalie of Chartres, censured for holding the doctrine, recanted, thirteenth century. He is said to have asserted that "all is God, and God is all."

Pantheon, at Rome, a circular temple built by Agrippa, the son-in-law of Augustus, 27 B.C. It had niches in the wall, where the image or representation of a particular god was set up; the gates brass, the beams covered with gilt brass, and the roof covered with silver. Pope Boniface III. dedicated it to the Virgin Mary and all the saints by the name of S. Maria della Rotunda, or "ad Martyres," A.D. 604.*—The PANTHEON IN LONDON was erected by subscription, and opened 27 Jan. 1772; formed into an opera-house; burned down 14 Jan. 1792; rebuilt for masquerades in 1795; opened as theatre, 1812, made a bazaar in 1834. The bazaar was closed in 1867, and the premises taken by Gilbey & Co., wine-merchants, who lent the south part for a temporary church.

Pantogen, see Atomic Theory.

Pantomimes were representations by gestures and attitudes among the Greeks, and were introduced on the Roman stage by Pylades and Bathyllus, 22 B.C. Comic masques were introduced here from Italy about 1700. The first regular English pantomime is said to have been Harlequin Executed, produced by John Rich at the Lincoln's-inn-fields theatre, 26 Dec. 1717. Joseph Grimaldi (1779-1837) was the most eminent clown.

PAOLI, MASSACRE AT. On the night of 20 Sept. 1777, a corps of 1500 Americans, under gen. Wayne, were attacked in their camp, near the Paoli tavern, in Pennsylvania, by a party of British and Hessians under gen. Greig, and about 300 of them were killed or mortally wounded in the gloom. Fifty-three of them were found upon the ground the next morning, and were buried in one grave. A marble monument stands over the sepulchre.

"Papal Aggression." In a consistory held in Rome, 30 Sept. 1850, the pope (Pius IX.) named fourteen new cardinals, of whom four only were Italians. Among them was Dr. Nicholas Wiseman, vicar-apostolic of the London district, who was at the same time nominated lord archbishop of Westminster.

Dr. Briggs, created Roman Catholic bishop of Beverley, was enthroned in St. George's chapel at York. 13 Feb. 1851
Dr. Browne created bishop of Clifton, and Dr. Burgess bishop of Shrewsbury; both consecrated in St. George's cathedral, Southwark. 27 July, "

It was not acted upon, and was repealed. 24 July, 1871

Papal Infallibility. This dogma, maintained by one party in the Roman church, tolerated by another, and utterly rejected by a third, was adopted and promulgated at the general council at Rome, 18 July, 1870, a great many bishops having withdrawn. The doctrine was inculcated by the false decretals of Isidore and others, but not adopted by the council of Trent; see Councils, XXI. Professor Dollinger, the historian, was excommunicated at Munich for rejecting this dogma, 18 April, 1871: he was made a D.C.L. at Oxford about 16 June following; see Old Catholics. The doctrine was strenuously attacked by Mr. W. E. Gladstone in his pamphlet "The Vatican Decrees," Nov. 1874.

Papal States, see Rome and Popes.

Paper, see Papyrus. Paper was probably made in Egypt, and centuries before the Christian era. It was made of cotton about A.D. 600, and of rags about 1300.* White coarse paper was made by sir John Speilman, a German, at Dartford, in England, 33 Eliz. 1590; and here paper-mills were erected.—Storr. Paper for writing and printing manufactured in England, and an act passed to encourage it, 2 Will. III. 1690; before this time we paid for these articles to France and Holland 100,000*l*. annually. The French refugees taught our people; we had made coarse brown paper almost exclusively until they came among us; we made white paper first in 1690.—Anderson. Paper-making by a machine was suggested by Louis Robert, who sold his model to Didot, the great printer, who brought it to England, and, conjointly with Fourdrinier, perfected the machinery. The latter obtained a patent for paper-making machinery in 1801, and for manufacturing paper of an indefinite length in 1807. The machinery was improved by Bryan Donkin. A sheet of paper 13,800 feet long and 4 feet wide was made at Whitehall mills, Derbyshire, in 1830; and one 21,000 feet long and 6 feet 3 inches wide was made at Colyton, in Devon, in 1860. Esparto, a Spanish grass, first imported in 1857, has been largely employed in the paper-manufacture since 1864. In 1866 wood was largely manufactured into paper at Philadelphia; and at the Paris exhibition, 1867, fine specimens of wood-paper were shown; see Parchment (note). The paper-duty, imposed in 1694 (producing, latterly, about 1,400,000*l*. annually), after having been the subject of agitation for several years, was repealed in 1861. Hop-stalks said to be used for paper-making in France, 1873.

Paper mills in Great Britain, 1877, about 385 (England, 300; Scotland, 65; Ireland, 20); annual produce about 360,000 tons; value, 16,000,000*l*.

Paper Exhibition at Berlin, Aug. 1878: contained not only great varieties of paper, but a paper house, tables, chairs, carpets, barrels, boats, etc.

The first paper-mill in America was built by William Rittinghousen and William Bradford, near Philadelphia, in 1690. A second was built in Germantown in 1710. In 1870 there were in the United States 650 paper-factories, exclusive of those engaged in making paper-hangings, with an aggregate capital of $34,360,914. The annual products were valued at $14,576,938.

* Mr. Joseph Hunter (in the Archæologia, xxxvii.) states that the earliest paper which he had seen was a MS. account-book, dated 1392, probably of Bordeaux manufacture. He gives engravings of manufacturers' marks, French and English, the dates of which range from 1330 to 1431. He also gives an extract from a work by Bartholus, a writer of the middle of the fourteenth century, in which mention is made of a paper-manufacture in the Marches of Ancona. At the end of Wynkin de Worde's edition of Bartholomæus "De Proprietatibus Rerum," 1494, its thin paper, made by John Tate in England, is commended.

Paper Money, see Banks.

Paper-hangings, etc. Stamped paper for this purpose was first made in Spain and Holland about 1665. Made of velvet and flims, for hanging apartments, about 1820. The manufacture of this kind of paper rapidly improved in this country during the present century.—PAPER BUCKS have been made in America; and paper tubing for water and gas, made by M. Jalouzeau, of Paris, was shown in 1860.

Papier-maché. This manufacture (of paper-pulp combined with gum and sometimes with china clay) has existed for above a century. Martin, a German snuff-box-maker, is said to have learned the art from one Leferre about 1740. In 1745 it was taken up by Backer-ville, the printer at Birmingham, and soon spread over that district. Papier-maché is now largely employed in ornamenting the interior of buildings, etc.

Papin's Digester (see Steam), invented about 1691. Denis Papin, a French philosopher, assisted Boyle in his experiments about 1678.

Papista, see Roman Catholics.

Papua, see New Guinea.

Papyrus, the reed from which was made the paper of Egypt and India, used for writings until the discovery of parchment, about 190 a.c. Ptolemy prohibited the exportation of it from Egypt, lest Eumenes of Pergamus should make a library equal to that of Alexandria, 268 a.c. Many papyri were discovered at Herculaneum in 1754; and many were collected by the French in Egypt, 1798. A manuscript of the "Antiquities" of Josephus on papyrus, among the treasures seized by Bonaparte in Italy, and sent to the National Library at Paris, was restored in 1815.

Fac similes of the largest known papyrus, found in 1855, behind Shediad Kaba, on the Nile, and now in the British Museum, were published with translations by the trustees in 1874.

Parable, see Fable.

Parachute, see Balloon, 1785, 1802, 1837, 1874.

Paraclete (Greek for comforter), a name given by Abélard to the convent which he founded in Champagne in 1122, of which Héloïse became the first abbess.

Paradise Lost, the great English epic by John Milton, appeared first in ten books in 1667; in twelve books in 1674.

Paradox (Greek, pará, beyond, and dóxa, opinion), something contrary to common opinion. Professor De Morgan's "Budget of Paradoxes" (of all kinds) was published in 1872. John Paget's "Paradoxes and Puzzles, Historical, Judicial, and Literary," published 1874.

Paraffine (from parum affinis, from its having little affinity with anything), also called photogen, a solid substance, somewhat like spermaceti, produced by distillation of coal, and first obtained by Reichenbach in 1830, and by Dr. Christison about the same time. It was procured from mineral oil by Mr. James Young about 1846 at Alfreton, in Derbyshire. Soon after it was largely obtained from Boghead coal. It is also obtained from Irish peat. It makes excellent candles. Much litigation ensued through interference with Mr. Young's patent-right.

Paraguay, a republic in South America, discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1526; conquered by Alvarez Nuñez in 1535, and civilized by the Jesuits, who in 1600 commenced their missions there and held it till their expulsion in 1768. Paraguay rose against the Spanish yoke in 1811. In 1814 Dr. José G. R. Francia was elected dictator; he ruled vigorously, but tyrannically; he was succeeded, on his death in 1840, by Vibal. From 1814 to 1844 the country was rigidly closed against foreigners. The president, C. A. Lopez, elected in 1844, was succeeded by his son, Francis S. Lopez, Sept. 1862 (see below). Paraguay was recognized as an independent state by the Argentine Confederation, 14 July, 1852, and by Great Britain in 1856. Population in 1867, 1,867,481; in 1873, 221,079; in 1874, 238,344.

Parasols were used by the ancient Egyptians. A new form (said to have been devised by the duchess of Rutland) came into general use about 1820.

Paro aux Cerfs, a deer-park at Versailles, near Paris, made by Louis XII., and kept as such till 1694, when Louis took the land for building. The name was given to a house erected on it by madame Pompadour, popularly said to form a seraglio for Louis XV. in 1765. It was closed by madame De Barry in 1771.

Parchment. Invented for writing books by Eumenes (some say by Attalus) of Pergamus, the founder of the celebrated library at Pergamus, formed on the model of the Alexandrian, about 190 a.c. Parchment books from this time became those most used, and the most valuable as well as oldest in the world are written on the skins of goats. It should be mentioned that the Persians and others are said to have written all their records on skins long before Eumenes's time.

Parchment paper (or vegetable parchment) was invented and patented in 1851 by Mr W. E. Gaine, C.E., who discovered that when paper is exposed to a mixture of two parts of concentrated sulphuric acid and one part of water for no longer time than is required to draw it through the fluid, it is immediately converted into a strong, tough, skin-like material. It must be instantly washed with water. Its great strength points out many applications of this material, e.g., maps, school and account books, and drawing-paper. In 1866 it appeared that a similar invention had been made in Paris by Fiquet and Fommarade in 1866.

Pardons. General pardons were proclaimed at occasions, first by Edward III. in 1327. The king's power of pardoning is said to be derived à legs non dignité; and no other person has power to remit treason or felonies, stat. 27 Hen. VIII. 1535.—Blackstone. A pardon cannot follow an impeachment of the house of commons: stat. Will. III. 1700.

Parga, a city in European Turkey; retained its civil independence under the protection of Venice till 1797, when that state was conquered by the French. It resisted various attempts to capture it, and in 1806 was garrisoned by Russians. It was given up to the French in 1807; taken by the English, 22 March, 1814; surrendered to the Turks, 1817; and abandoned by above 8000 of its inhabitants, who retired to the Ionian Isles, May, 1819.

Parian Marble, see Arundelian Marble.

Paris (formerly Latetia Parisiorum), the capital of France, situated on the river Seine, which cuts it into two unequal parts, the strongest being towards the north, and in which are three isles: la ville (the city), the île St. Louis, and the île Louviers. In the time of Julius Cæsar, Latetia comprised the city only. It was greatly improved by the emperor Julian, who made it his residence while he governed Gaul, 355-361. It became successively the capital of the kingdoms of Paris, Soissons, and Neustria, and eventually of all the kingdom. Many ecclesiastical councils were held at Paris, 800-1598. The representative of the house of Orleans is styled count of Paris. Population of Paris in 1856, 1,178,262; in 1873, estimated population, 1,851,792; in 1876, 1,988,606; see France.

- Parishes. Their boundaries in England were first fixed by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, 686. They were enlarged, and the number of parishes was consequently reduced in the fifteenth century, when there were 10,000. Parish registers were commenced in 1588.
 Acts were passed in 1844 and 1866 by which new parishes may be formed out of too extensive ones; acts amended in 1869. The appointment of parish constables was made unnecessary by an act passed Aug. 1872; see Registers and Benefices.

Parisienne, La, popular song by Casimir Delavigne, celebrating the defeat of the troops of Charles X. by the Parisians, 1 Aug. 1830; the music (an old air) was arranged by Auber.

Park, Central, NEW YORK. In the centre of New York city is the Central Park, intended for the benefit of all the inhabitants of the city. It begins at Fifty-ninth street, and is extended to One Hundred and Tenth street—a distance of 13,507 feet. Its breadth, from Fifth to Eighth avenue, is 2718 feet; thus giving an area of 843 acres. It contains the great Croton reservoir for the use of New-Yorkers. The water surface of the reservoir is 96 acres, and the depth of water when full is about 38 feet; its capacity more than 1,000,000,000 gallons. The cost of the reservoir was nearly $600,000. The park was laid out in 1858. It contains the American Museum of Natural History, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art and Archæology; of which the Ceanola collection of Cypriote antiquities is a chief feature.

Parker Museum, see Sanitary.

Parkeesine. A new substance, composed of gun-cotton, obtained from various vegetable bodies and oil. It can be formed with the properties of ivory, tortoise-shell, wood, india-rubber, gutta-percha, etc. It is the invention of Mr. Alexander Parkes of Birmingham, and was shown by him at the Exhibition in 1862. In Dec. 1865, at the Society of Arts, parkeesine was proved to be an excellent electric insulator, and therefore likely to be suitable for telegraphic purposes.

Park-lane Murder, see Trials, 1872.

Parks. The Romans attached parks to their villas. Fulvius Lupinus, Pompey, and Hortensius, among others, had large parks. In England, the first great park of which particular mention is made was that of Woodstock, formed by Henry I. 1125. Queen Caroline, consort of George II., inquired, it is said, of the first Mr. Pitt (afterwards earl of Chatham), how much it would cost to shut up the parks as private grounds. He replied, "Three crowns, your majesty." The design was never afterwards entertained; see Finsbury, Southwark, Green, Hyde, James's (St.), Regent's, Victoria, Alexandra, Battersea, and People's Parks, and Yellowstone Park, U. S. The Parks Preservation Society, established by Mr. F. G. Heath and others..... 1871

By new regulations, Hyde, Battersea, Regent's, and Victoria parks are the only metropolitan parks in which public addresses may be given, under certain restrictions..... Oct. "
These regulations (much objected to; broken, and offenders fined) were modified by the home secretary, Feb. 1873
Acts for the establishment of public parks in England and Ireland were passed, 12 July, 1869; for Scotland, 18 March, 1878

Park's Travels. Mungo Park set sail on his first voyage to Africa under the patronage of the African Society, to trace the source of the river Niger, 22 May, 1795; and returned 22 Dec. 1797, after having fruitlessly encountered great danger. He again sailed from Portsmouth on his second voyage, 30 Jan. 1804, appointed to a new expedition by government; but never returned. His murder at Broussa on the Niger was well authenticated.

Parliament (from the French parlement, discourse) derives its origin from the Saxon general assemblies, called Witenagemotes. The name was applied to the assemblies of the state under Louis VII. of France, about the middle of the twelfth century; but it is said not to have appeared in our law till its mention in the statute of Westminster I., 3 Edw. I., 1272; and yet Coke declared in his "Institutes," and spoke to the same effect when speaker (1592), that this name was used even in the time of Edward the Confessor, 1041. The first clear account we have of the representatives of the people forming a house of commons was in the 49d Hen. III., 1258, when it was settled by the statutes of Oxford that twelve persons should be chosen to represent the commons in the three parliaments, which, by the sixth statute, were to be held yearly.—Burton's Annals. The general representation by knights, citizens, and burgesses took place 49 Hen. III., 1255.—Dugdale's Summons to Parliament, edit. 1685. See Commons and Lords. The power and jurisdiction of parliament are so transcendent and absolute that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in making and repealing laws. It can regulate or new-model the succession to the crown (as was done in the reigns of Henry VIII. and William III.). It can alter and establish the religion of the country, as was done in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth.—Sir Edward Coke.* The fourth edition of May's "Practical Treatise on Parliament" was published in 1859; see Triennial and Septennial. Return of the names of members of parliament from the earliest period to the present time ordered by the house of commons, 4 May, 1876, and 9 March, 1877. Part I. (1218–1702) published 1879.

* When the royal assent is given to a public bill, the clerk says, "Le roi (or la reine) le veut." If the bill be a private bill, he says, "Soit fait comme il est désiré." If the bill have subsidies for its object, he says, "Le roi (or la reine) remercie ses loyaux sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et aussi le veut." If the king do not think proper to assent to the bill, the clerk says, "Le roi (or la reine) s'avisera;" which is a mild way of giving a refusal. It is singular that the French language should still be used.

* Termed the "Palace of Westminster." The first contract for the embankment of the river was taken in 1837 by Messrs. Lee; this embankment, faced with granite, is 886 feet in length, and projected into the river in a line with the inner side of the third pier of old Westminster bridge. Sir Charles Barry (born 1795, died 1860) was the architect of the sumptuous pile of buildings raised since 1840. The whole stands on a bed of concrete twelve feet thick; to the east it has a front of about 1000 feet, and covers an area of nine statute acres. It contains 1100 apartments, 100 staircases, and two miles of passages or corridors. The great Victoria tower at the southwest extremity is 346 feet in height, and towers of less magnitude crown other portions of the building.

Parliament of SCOTLAND consisted of barons, prelates, and abbots, and occasionally of burgesses. A great national council was held at Scone by John Balliol, 9 Feb. 1292, and by Robert Bruce at Cambuskenneth in 1326. A house of commons was never formed in Scotland. The parliament of Scotland sanctioned the act of union on 16 Jan. 1707, and met for the last time on 22 April, same year.

Parricide. There was no law against it in Athens or Rome, such a crime not being supposed possible. About 172 B.C., L. Ostius having killed his father, the Romans scourged the parricide; sewed him up in a leathern sack made air-tight, with a live dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thus cast him into the sea. Miss Blandy was executed at Oxford for the murder of her father, April, 1752.

Parsees, or GUEBRES, the followers of Zerdusht, dwelt in Persia till 638, when, at the battle of Kadesah, their army was decimated by the Arabs, and the monarchy annihilated at the battle of Nâhârand in 641. Many submitted to the conquerors, but others fled to India, and their descendants still reside at Bombay (where they are termed Parsees), and where they numbered 114,698 in 1849. Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, the 8d baronet, was elected president of the community there, July, 1877. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, a Parsee merchant, was for several years professor of Gujarati at University College, London; see Bombay.

"Partant pour la Syrie," popular French song; words by comte Alexandre de Laborde; music by Hortense Beauharnois, wife of Louis Bonaparte, king of Holland, about 1809. The music became very popular after her son became emperor, in 1852, as Napoleon III.

Parthenon (from Greek παρθενος, virgin), a temple at Athens dedicated to Minerva, erected about 442 B.C. In it Phidias placed his renowned statue of that goddess, 438 B.C. The roof was destroyed by the Venetians in 1687; see Elgin Marbles.

Parthenopean Republic was established by the French at Naples (anciently called Parthenope), 23 Jan. 1799, and overthrown in June same year.

Parthia (Asia). The Parthians were originally a tribe of Scythians who, being exiled, as their name implies, from their own country, settled near Hyrcania. Arsaces laid the foundation of an empire which ultimately extended over a large part of Asia, 250 B.C.; the Parthians were never wholly subdued by the Romans. The last king, Artabanus V., was killed A.D. 226; and his territories were annexed to the new kingdom of Persia founded by Artaxerxes, who had revolted against Parthia.

Particularists. The name given to those Germans who desire the maintenance of the independence of the German states, and oppose their absorption into the empire. M. Gasser, one of them, failed in an attempt to form a ministry in Bavaria, Sept. 1872.

Partition Act, relative to the division of property sold by direction of the court of chancery, passed 25 June, 1688.

Partition Treaties. The first treaty between England and Holland for regulating the Spanish succession (declaring the elector of Bavaria next heir, and ceding provinces to France) was signed 19 Aug. 1698; and the second (between France, England, and Holland, declaring the archduke Charles presumptive heir of the Spanish monarch, Joseph Ferdinand having died in 1699), 13 March, 1700. Treaty for the partition of Poland; the first was a secret convention between Russia and Prussia, 17 Feb. 1772; the second between the same powers and Austria, 5 Aug. same year, the third was between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, 24 Oct. 1795.

Partnership. The laws respecting it were amended in 1863; see Limited Liability.

Party, see Processions.

Pasigraphy (from Greek πᾶσι, for all): a system which professes to teach people to communicate with each other by means of numbers which convey the same ideas in all languages. A society for this purpose was established at Munich; and the president, Anton Bachmaier, published a dictionary and grammar for German, French, and English, 1868-71; 4334 mental conceptions may be thus communicated.

Pasquinades. Small satirical poems obtained this name about 1533.

At the stall of a cobbler named Pasquin, at Rome, idle persons used to assemble to listen to his sallies, to relate anecdotes, and rail at the passers-by. After the cobbler's death, his name was given to a statue to which lampoons were affixed.

Passarowitz Treaty, concluded 21 July, 1718, between Germany and Venice, and the Turks, by which the house of Austria ceded certain commercial rights, and obtained from Turkey the Temeswar, Belgrade, and part of Bosnia, Servia, and Wallachia. The Turks gained the Morea.

Passau (Germany). TREATY OF, whereby religious freedom was established, was ratified between the emperor Charles V. and the Protestant princes of Germany, 31 July, 1552. In 1662 the cathedral and great part of Passau were consumed by fire.

Passengiers—by public vehicles, are protected by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 22 (1831), 1 & 2 Vict. c. 79 (1838), and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 33 (1853). Mr. Cleghorn, under whom the front seat on the near side of one of the general omnibus company's carriages had given way, recovered 400*l.* damages against the company, in a verdict by consent, in the Queen's Bench, 10 Dec. 1856. The Ships' Passenger act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119, passed in 1855, was amended in 1863; see Campbell's Act.

Passionists, a congregation of Clerks of the Holy Cross, founded by St. Paul of the Cross, who died 1775, and was canonized by the pope, 1867. A home was set up in England in 1841, and others since. The monastery, Highgate, London, N., solemnly blessed by cardinal Manning, and opened 16 July, 1876.

Passion-play, see Drama.

Passion-week, the name given since the Reformation to the week preceding Easter, was formerly applied to the fortnight. Archbishop Laud says the two weeks were so called "for a thousand years together," and refers to an epistle by Ignatius, in the first century, in which the practice is said to have been "observed by all." The week preceding Easter is now by some termed "Holy-week," the previous week "Passion-week."

PASSION MUSIC. Gregory Nazianzen (A.D. 330-90) is said to have first set forth the history of the Passion in a dramatic form.

Guidetti, in 1586, published music for this subject, which has been treated since by many composers.

J. S. Bach's great "Passion-Musik," first performed on Good Friday, 1729, has been revived with great success in this country, beginning with that "according to St. Matthew," 6 April, 1854.

Passover, the most solemn festival of the Jews, instituted 1491 B.C. (Exod. xii.) in commemoration of their coming out of Egypt; because the night before their departure the destroying angel, who put to death the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the houses of the Hebrews without entering them; the door-posts being marked with the blood of the Paschal lamb killed the evening before. The Passover was celebrated in the new temple, 18 April, 515 B.C.—Usher.

Passport System forbids subjects to quit one country or enter another without the consent of the sovereign thereof. In 1858 the system was somewhat changed in this country, and the stamp-duty on passports was reduced from 5*s.* to 6*d.* Passports were abolished in Norway in 1859; in Sweden in 1860; and (with regard to British subjects) in France, 16 Dec. 1860; in Italy, 26 June, 1862; in Portugal, 23 Jan. 1863; and are falling into disuse in other countries. The passport system was established in the United States on 19 Aug. 1861, and maintained during the continuance of the civil war. The United States government issues passports to its citizens travelling abroad, but except during the civil war no domestic passport system has ever existed in the republic. The passport system, revived in France on account of the war, 1 Aug. 1870, was abolished by M. Thiers, 10 April, 1872, in compliance with the wish of the British government.

Paston Letters, the correspondence of a Norfolk family, 1422-83, giving a picture of social life in England, were edited by sir John Fenn, and published in five volumes, quarto, 1797-1823. Their authenticity was questioned Sept. 1865, but was satisfactorily vindicated by a committee of the Society of Antiquaries in May, 1866. Part of the MS. was soon after purchased by the trustees of the British Museum. The publication of a new edition, by James Gairdner, with additional letters, 1872-5. The MS. of the second series, with other letters, was found in 1875, by Mr. Frere, of Roydon Hall, near Diss, Norfolk.

Patay (France), where Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, was present when the earl of Richemonte signally defeated the English, 18 June, 1429. Talbot was taken prisoner, and the valiant Fastolf was forced to flee. In consequence, Charles VII. of France entered Rheims in triumph, and was crowned 17 July, following year, Joan of Arc assisting in the ceremony in full armor, and holding the sword of state; see Joan of Arc.

Patents (from pateo, I lie open), licenses and authorities granted by the king. Patents granted for titles of nobility were first made 1344, by Edward III. They were first granted for the exclusive privilege of printing books in 1591. The property and right of inventors in arts and manufactures were secured by letters-patent by an act passed in 1623. The later laws regulating patents are very numerous; among them are 5 & 6 Will. c. 83 (1835), and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83 (1852). By the latter COMMISSIONERS OF PATENTS were appointed—viz., the lord chancellor, the master of the rolls, the attorney-general for England and Ireland, the lord advocate, and the solicitors-general for England, Scotland, and Ireland. In 1853, a journal was published under their authority, and indexes of patents, from March, 1617, to the present time. Specifications of patents may be consulted by the public at the Free Library and Reading-room, in Southampton buildings, opened 5 March, 1854. A museum containing models, portraits, etc., was established in 1859 at South Kensington, mainly by the exertions of Mr. Bennet Woodcroft.

An international congress for the protection of patents met at Vienna.....Aug. 1873
2974 patents granted in.....1873
New patent bills introduced into parliament withdrawn, 1875, 1876, 1879; Mr. Anderson's bill read...15 June, 1881
In 1864, the alleged defalcations of Mr. Edmunds, a clerk in the patent office and an official of the house of lords, led to his retirement. He obtained a pension of 800*l.*, which was taken from him by a vote of the house of lords on 9 May, 1865. Much litigation ensued. In an action against Mr. Gladstone, the prime minister, and others, for a libel, Mr. Edmunds was nonsuited, 21. 22 June, 1872; and he failed in actions against several newspapers for printing a treasury minute. His appeal to the house of lords failed, 16 June, 1873.

Patents in the UNITED STATES. A larger number of patents are granted than in any other country, and under the same general laws as in Great Britain. The commissioner of patents is appointed by the president, by and with the consent of the senate, and has a numerous and thoroughly qualified staff of assistants, who occupy, in Washington, D.C., one of the finest buildings in the country, now filled almost to its capacity with thousands of models of every kind and description. The commissioner of patents makes a yearly report to the secretary of the interior, published at public expense. The number of patents granted by the United States government up to 18 March, 1861, was 31,070. In the years from 1840 to 1849 the average number of applications for patents was 1000; of patents granted, 550. For the succeeding seven years the average number of applications was 3800; of patents granted, 1750. In 1858 the number of patents granted was 3710; in 1859, 4538; in 1860, 4819; in 1875, 16,288; in 1876, 17,026; in 1877, 13,619; in 1878, 12,935. The fees received leave a large surplus (£132,292.66 in 1878) after paying all expenses, which in 1878 amounted to £593,082.89.

Patna (N. India). Near here the English, under major Carnac, defeated the emperor Shah Alum on 15 Jan. 1761. The town was acquired by the British by their defeat of the sanguinary Meer Cassim, 23 Oct. 1764.

Patriarchs (a name given to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his sons). The ecclesiastical historian Socrates gives this title to the chiefs of Christian dioceses, about 440. It was first conferred on the five grand sees of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. The Latin church had no patriarchs till the sixth century. The first founders or heads of religious orders are called patriarchs.

Nectarius, bishop of Constantinople, as ex-officio chief of the eastern bishops, was nominated patriarch of Constantinople at the second general council of Constantinople, 9 July, 381. This led the way to the schism between the Eastern and Western churches.

Patricians, the senators of Rome; their authority began with the city itself; see Rome.

Patrick, St. KNIGHTS OF, an order instituted by king George III., 5 Feb. (the statutes were signed 28 Feb.) 1783. The number, originally fifteen, was increased in 1821, 1831, and 1833, and is now twenty-two. The prince of Wales was installed as knight, 18 April, 1868.—St. Patrick's Benevolent Society, London, instituted 1784.

Patrick's Cathedral, St. (Dublin), was founded in 1190 by archbishop Comyn, on the site of an old church. The cathedral was desecrated in 1546, and used as a law court; restored 1553. After renovation by the munificence of the late sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, it was reopened 24 Feb. 1865; see Dublin.

Patriotic Association, formed to aid in upholding the honor and interest of the British empire. A meeting was held at St. James's Hall, London, 27 March, 1880. England, a weekly paper, was published same day. The duke of Abercorn, earl Stanhope, and others, were supporters.

Patriotic Funds, established to encourage the army and navy in times of war.

1. Founded by the subscribers to Lloyd's, "to animate the efforts of our defenders by sea and land" by providing a fund for the relief of themselves when wounded, and of their widows and orphans, and for granting pecuniary rewards and badges of distinction for valor and merit, 20 July, 1803; 24 Aug. 1809, 424,832*l.* had been received, and 331,611*l.* expended.

From 1803 to 1826 the total sum received was 629,823*l.* 1*l.* 1*d.*

2. A commission (headed by prince Albert) was appointed to raise and distribute a fund bearing this name, for the relief of the families of those who might fall in the Russo-Turkish war, June; a great meeting held Nov. 1854.

Large sums were collected from this country and the colonies, amounting to 1,171,270*l.* in July, 1855; to 1,296,282*l.* on 16 Nov. 1855; finally to 1,460,861*l.* In Jan. 1874, 1,303,388*l.* expended.

200,000*l.* appropriated to founding an asylum for 300 orphan girls (the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum) on Wandsworth common; the first stone of which was laid by the queen, 11 July, 1857.

The royal family and many of the aristocracy contributed drawings, sold for high prices, in May, 1855.

3. A large fund contributed for the relief of the sufferers by the Indian mutiny, Aug. 1857; 434,729*l.* collected up to Nov. 1858. An act for its administration was passed 12 Aug. 1867; see India, 1857.

16th report of commissioners of the Patriotic Fund; receipts to 31 Dec. 1876, 1,460,861*l.*; expenditure, 1,472,159*l.* (capital, 400,000*l.*; annual income, 33,935*l.*).

The alleged maladministration of the Patriotic Fund was brought before the house of commons by baron de Worms, 9 Aug. 1880, and in Jan. 1881.

Patriotic Funds in the UNITED STATES. On account of the distress of the Continental army in 1780, the ladies of Philadelphia made a successful effort to collect a fund for their relief, in the purchase of clothing. Some of the leading women were at the head of the movement, among them Mrs. Bache, Dr. Franklin's daughter. All ranks of society seem to have joined in the liberal effort, from Phillis the colored woman, with her humble seven shillings and sixpence, to Mrs. Washington, who gave $20,000 in Continental money—equivalent at that time to about $350—and Lafayette $500, in the name of his wife, the marchioness. In Philadelphia and vicinity nearly $8000 was subscribed; and Robert Morris made the princely donation of the contents of a ship just captured by one of his privateers, fully laden with clothing and military stores. During the civil war of 1861–5 enormous sums were given by private individuals, together with every sort of clothing, comfort, and luxury, for the relief of the wounded troops, the care of Union refugees from the South, and the emancipated blacks. It has been estimated that not less than $500,000,000 in money was given in small sums, as voluntary contributions, by all classes of people during the war.

Patronage of Livings by laymen in England is very ancient; in Scotland was opposed by the books of discipline, 1560 and 1578; abolished 1649; restored 1660. The system led to the disruption of the established church, and the foundation of the free church, 18 May, 1843. The abolition of lay patronage was earnestly advocated by the authorities of the established church in March, 1870; and the duke of Argyll volunteered to resign his patronage in May. Of 1109 livings 319 belonged to the crown, and about 600 to private persons. An act (37 & 38 Vict. c. 82) for abolishing patronage in Scotland, brought in by the duke of Richmond, 18 May, passed 7 Aug. 1874.

Paul Jones, John, a Scotchman, born 1742; died at Paris, 1792. He commanded an American privateer during the Revolutionary war, and made daring depredations on British commerce. He pillaged the house of lord Selkirk, near Kirkcudbright, and at Whitehaven burned shipping in the harbor, April, 1778. The Dutch permitted Paul Jones to enter their ports with two British ships of war which he had taken, and which the stadtholder peremptorily refused to deliver up, 1779; see Battles and Naval Battles.

Paulianists, or PAULINIANS, followers of Paul, bishop of Samosata, afterwards patriarch of Antioch, 260, who are said to have denied Christ's divinity and the trinity; he was excommunicated (269) by a council at Antioch.

Paulicians, a sect of Christian reformers, arose about 652. Although they were severely persecuted, they spread over Asia Minor in the ninth century, and finally settled at Montford, in Italy, where they were attacked by the bishop of Milan in 1028. Severe decrees against them were made in 1163, and they gradually dispersed; very probably sowing the seeds of the great reformation of the sixteenth century.

Paul's Cathedral, St. (London). For details of its history, see Dugdale's "History of St. Paul's," 1658 and 1716; Dean Milman's "Annals of St. Paul's," 1868; and Mr. William Longman's "History of the Three Cathedrals, dedicated to St. Paul," 1878.

Paul's Cross, St. (London), which stood at the north side of the cathedral, was a pulpit formed of wood, mounted upon steps of stone, and covered with lead, from which the most eminent divines were appointed to preach every Sunday in the forenoon. To this place the court, the mayor, the aldermen, and principal citizens used to resort. It was in use as early as 1259, and was appropriated not only to preaching, but to political and ecclesiastical discourses, etc. The cross was demolished in 1643, by order of the parliament.

Paul's School, St., was endowed in 1512 by John Colet, dean of St. Paul's, for 153 boys, "of every nation, country, and class," in memory of the number of fishes taken by Peter (John xxi. 11). The first schoolhouse was burned in 1666; the second, by Wren, was taken down in 1824, and the present building erected by George Smith. William Lilly was the first master, and his grammar is still used by the school.—Timbs. The claim of the Mercers' Company to be owners instead of trustees of Colet's estate was set aside by the vice-chancellor, 11 Feb. 1870. The school ordered to be removed to West Kensington; site bought June, 1878. The number of scholars has been increased.

Paulus's Hook, CAPTURE OF. The British had a small garrison at Paulus's Hook (now Jersey City), opposite the city of New York, in the summer of 1779. The post was attacked at 3 o'clock in the morning of 19 Aug. by major Henry Lee. Thirty of the garrison were killed, and 160 made prisoners. The post fell into the hands of the Americans, and Congress rewarded Lee with thanks and a gold medal.

Paupers, see Poor.

Pavan, PAVANE, or PAVIN, was a slow dance of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, sometimes accompanied by singing.

Pavement. The Carthaginians are said to have been the first who paved their towns with stones. The Romans, in the time of Augustus, had pavement in many of their streets; the Appian Way, a paved road, was constructed 312 B.C. In England there were few paved streets before Henry VII's reign. London was first paved about 1533. It was paved with flagstones between 1815 and 1825. Wood and asphalt paving were tried in 1839, and have been disused since 1847; see Wood Paving. Asphalt has been much used since 1869. Wood reported to be the best for London, May, 1876.

Pavia (N. Italy), the ancient Ticinum or Papii. Its university, founded by Charlemagne, is said to be the oldest in Europe. Pavia was built by the Gauls, who were driven out by the Romans, and these in their turn were expelled by the Goths. In 568 it was taken by the Lombards, and became the capital of their kingdom. In the twelfth century it was erected into a republic, but soon after was subjected to Milan and followed its fortunes. On 24 Feb. 1525, a battle was fought near here between the French and the Imperialists, when the former were defeated, and their king, Francis I., after fighting with heroic valor, and killing seven men with his own hand, was at last obliged to surrender himself a prisoner. It was long asserted that Francis wrote to his mother, Louisa of Savoy, regent of the kingdom during his absence, saying, Tout est perdu, madame, fors l'honneur (All is lost, madam, except honor). The words are now said to have been, L'honneur et la vie qui est saulvée.

Pawnbroking. The Roman emperors lent money upon land. The origin of borrowing money by means of pledges deposited with lenders is referred to Perugia, in Italy, about 1462. The institutions were termed monti di pietà (which see). Soon afterwards, it is said that the bishop of Winchester established a system of lending on pledges, but without interest. The business of pawnbrokers was regulated in 1756, and licenses issued in 1783. The rate of interest on pledges was fixed in 1800. In London there were, in 1851, 334 pawnbrokers; and in England, exclusively of London, 1127. The number is increasing more than in proportion to the population. In 1860 an act was passed enabling pawnbrokers to charge a half-penny for every ticket describing things pledged for a sum under 5*z*. The acts relating to pawnbrokers were amended in 1856, 1859, 1860. Pawnbrokers in Great Britain: 1851, 1873; in 1861, 2578; in 1871, 3840.

The law was consolidated in the Pawnbrokers' act passed 10 Aug. 1872.

Pax, a small tablet, generally silver, termed tabula pacis or osculatorium; kissed by the Roman Catholic priests and laity; substituted for the primeval kiss of peace in the early church. The Pax is said to have been introduced about the twelfth century.

Paymaster-general. In 1836 the army and navy pay departments were consolidated into the paymaster-general's office, sometimes held by a cabinet minister.

Pea Ridge (Ark.), BATTLE OF, fought 7, 8 March, 1862, between national and confederate forces. The first day's fighting was indecisive, but on the second day the victory rested with the national troops.

Peabody Fund. Mr. George Peabody, an American merchant (born 18 Feb. 1795; died 4 Nov. 1869), who had made his fortune in London, gave, on 12 March, 1862, 150,000*l.*; on 21 Jan. 1866, 100,000*l.*; on 5 Dec. 1868, 100,000*l.*; and by his will directed his trustees to pay 150,000*l.*—in all, 500,000*l.*, to ameliorate the condition of the London poor.

Peace. A temple was dedicated to peace by Vespasian, 75; see Fireworks, Treaties, Justices, etc.—"PEACE OF RELIGION" (between Catholics and Protestants) was signed at Augsburg, 15 Sept. 1555.

A PEACE SOCIETY, founded 1816, for the promotion of universal peace, held its 50th anniversary in May, 1874. A congress of the friends of peace, from all parts of the world, commenced its sittings at Paris, 22 Aug. 1849. It met in London at Exeter Hall, 30 Oct. following; and at Frankfurt, in St. Paul's church, 22 Aug. 1850; at Birmingham, 28 Nov. 1850; and at Exeter Hall, 22 July, 1851. A meeting was held at Manchester, 27 Jan. 1853; and at Edinburgh. . . . 12 Oct. 1853

Mr. Bright and Mr. Cobden were among the most conspicuous members of the society. A deputation from the Peace Society, consisting of Messrs. J. Sturge, Pease, and another Quaker friend, stated their views to the emperor of Russia at St. Petersburg, at an interview granted them in. . . . Feb. 1854

Peace Preservation Acts (IRELAND): one passed 4 April, 1870, was continued in 1876 to 31 June, 1880. A new act to last till 1 June, 1886, passed 21 March, 1881; see Arms Bills.

Peaches are said to have been introduced into this country from Persia about 1562.

Pearls, mentioned Job xxviii. 18. M. Réaumur, in 1717, alleged that pearls are formed like other stones in animals. An ancient pearl was valued by Pliny at 80,000*l.* sterling. One which was brought, in 1574, to Philip II., of the size of a pigeon's egg, was valued at 14,400 ducats. A pearl named the Incomparable, spoken of by De Boote, weighed thirty carats, equal to five pennyweights, and was about the size of a muscadine pear. The pearl mentioned by Tavernier as being in possession of the emperor of Persia was purchased of an Arab in 1633, and is valued at a sum equal to 110,400*l.* Value of pearls imported into Great Britain, 1856, 56,162*l.*

Peasants' War, see Jacquerie.

Peat, see Bogs. A peat coal and charcoal company established in 1873, when coal was 41*s.* a ton.

"Peculiar People," a small sect in Essex and other parts of England, formed about 1845. Two members, Thomas and Maryanne Wagstaffe, were tried and acquitted of manslaughter, 29 Jan. 1868. They had neglected getting medical assistance for their sick child, and depended on the efficacy of their elders' prayers and anointing it with oil (James v. 14). The child died. On 8 May, 1872, a father was convicted for neglecting to get medical advice for his child who died of small-pox; and the sect agreed to modify their practice. Establishments for healing diseases by prayer exist in Germany.

At another trial, Thomas Hines was acquitted, in accordance with the opinion of the court; baron Pigott held that the case did not amount to criminal neglect because the prisoner had not called in a doctor to his sick child, 19 Aug. 1874; similar cases since, 1875-6.

John Robert Downes (for neglect respecting scarlet fever) sentenced to 3 months' imprisonment, 21 Sept. 1876.

Pedestrianism. Eucidas, a citizen of Platea, went thence to Delphi to bring the sacred fire. This he obtained, and returned with it the same day before sunset, having travelled 125 English miles. No sooner had he saluted his fellow-citizens and delivered the fire, than he fell dead at their feet. After the battle of Marathon, a soldier was sent from the field to announce the victory at Athens. Exhausted with fatigue and bleeding from his wounds, he cried out, "Rejoice, we are conquerors!" and immediately expired.

Foster Powel, the English pedestrian, performed many astonishing journeys on foot. His expedition from London to York and back again, in 1788, is said to have been completed in 140 hours.

Capt. Barclay, for a wager (on which many thousands of pounds depended), walked 1000 miles in 1000 successive hours, each mile in each hour, in forty-two days and nights (less 8 hours). His task was accomplished on 10 July, 1809. Thomas Standen, aged 60, of Salehurst, walked 1100 miles in 1100 hours (1 mile in 1 hour); finished July, 1811.

Richard Manke, a native of Warwickshire, undertook (in imitation of capt. Barclay) to walk 1000 miles in 1000 hours: the place chosen was the Barrack tavern cricket-ground in Sheffield; he commenced on Monday, 17 June, 1850, and completed the 1000 miles 29 July following, winning a considerable sum.

On 7 Oct. 1861, a 12-mile foot-race was held, when Lovett, the champion of England, ran 7 miles in 37 minutes 27 seconds; Deerfoot, a Seneca Indian, ran 12 miles in 65 minutes 5 seconds; and Mills ran 10 miles in 54 minutes 10 seconds; other races followed.

On 11 May, 1863, Deerfoot was beaten by White, who ran 10 miles in 52 minutes 14 seconds.

Miss Richards walked 1000 miles in 1000 hours,

Peel Acts. Among the most important were the Bank acts of 1819 and 1844; the acts amending the criminal laws, 1827; dividing parishes into districts, 1843, and the act repealing the corn-laws in 1846.

Peel Administrations.* The FIRST succeeded the Melbourne administration, which was broken up on the retirement of lord Althorpe, the chancellor of the exchequer, in Nov. 1834. Sir Robert Peel, then in Italy, was summoned home, the duke of Wellington holding the seals of office in the interim. They both resigned in April, 1835. In May, 1841, sir Robert Peel carried a vote of want of confidence in the Melbourne cabinet, but did not take office; and in Sept. of that year he became again premier. He lost the support of the conservative party by obtaining the repeal of the corn-laws, and resigned 29 June, 1846.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION (Dec. 1834).

Sir Robert Peel, first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer.
 Lord Lyndhurst, lord chancellor.
 Earl of Rosslyn, lord president.
 Lord Wharcliffe, privy seal.
 Henry Goulburn, duke of Wellington, and earl of Aberdeen, home, foreign, and colonial secretaries of state.
 Earl De Grey, first lord of the admiralty.

* Sir Robert Peel was born 5 Feb. 1788; entered parliament in 1809; became under-secretary of the colonies in 1811; chief secretary for Ireland in 1812; M.P. for Oxford in 1818 (when he resigned his office); secretary for home department in 1822; resigned office and reappointed in 1827; resigned again in 1830; became premier in 1834 and 1841 (see above). He was thrown from his horse 29 June, and died 2 July, 1850. He greatly relaxed the severity of our criminal code in 1827 et seq.; established the new police; and carried the Catholic Emancipation bill in 1829, and the repeal of the corn-laws in 1846. Statues have been erected to him: at Salford in 1852; at Tamworth, Leeds, Bury, and Manchester in 1853; and in London and Birmingham in 1855.

Lord Ellenborough and Alexander Baring, board of control and trade.

Sir Edward Knatchbull, paymaster of the forces.

J. C. Herries, secretary of war.

Sir George Murray, master-general of the ordnance, etc.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION (Sept. 1841).

Sir Robert Peel, first minister.

Duke of Wellington in the cabinet without office, afterwards commander-in-chief.

Lord Lyndhurst, lord chancellor.

Lord Wharcliffe, lord president.

Duke of Buckingham, lord privy seal (succeeded by duke of Buccleuch).

Sir James Graham, earl of Aberdeen, and lord Stanley, home, foreign, and colonial secretaries.

Henry Goulburn, chancellor of the exchequer.

Earl of Haddington, first lord of the admiralty.

Earl of Ripon, board of trade (succeeded by W. E. Gladstone).

Lord Ellenborough, India board (succeeded by lord Fitzgerald; succeeded by earl of Ripon).

Sir Henry Hardinge, sir Edward Knatchbull, sir George Murray, etc.

[Terminated 29 June, 1846, by sir Robert's resignation.]

Peel Pictures. The family collection (70) were purchased for the National Gallery for 75,000*l.*, 1871.

Peelites, a name given to gentlemen, whigs and Tories, who adhered to sir Robert Peel, after his defeat by the conservative party, on account of his free-trade measures carried in 1846. The principal were Henry Goulburn, W. E. Gladstone, Sidney (afterwards lord) Herbert, sir James Graham, Edward Cardwell, sir George Clerk, lord Lincoln (afterwards duke of Newcastle), and lords Canning and Elgin, and others. Several of them became members of the Palmerston and Aberdeen administrations (which see).

Peep-o'-Day Boys, insurgents in Ireland who visited the houses of their antagonists at break of day in search of arms. They first appeared 4 July, 1784, and were long the terror of the country; see Defenders.

Peeresses of the United Kingdom (in their own right): seven in 1878, countess of Cromartie (duchess of Sutherland), baronesses Berners, Burdett-Coutts, Le Despencer, North, Willoughby D'Eresby, and Bolsover.

Peers, see Lords.

Pegu, a province of the Burmese empire, discovered by the Portuguese in 1520. Pegu, the capital, was taken by major Cotton, with 300 men, in June, 1852, without loss; and afterwards abandoned. It was again occupied by the Burmese and strongly fortified, with a garrison of 4000 men. It was recaptured by gen. Godwin with 1200 men and two guns, in two hours, with the loss of six killed and thirty-two wounded. The province was annexed to our Indian possessions, by proclamation, 20 Dec. 1852, and has since prospered. In Feb. 1862, it was united with Arracan and Tenasserim as British Burmah.

Peiho, see Chiuu, 1859, 1860.

Peishwa, the prime-minister of the Mahrattas; seized the sovereign power and settled at Poonah, 1749. The title was abolished in 1818.

Peiwar Pass (Kotul), in the Khoorun valley, Afghanistan. Here gen. Roberts, with the 72d Highlanders and the Ghooraks, defeated the Afghans, 2 Dec. 1878. Major Anderson and capt. Kelso were killed, and about 80 men were killed and wounded. The enemy's loss was very great.

Pekin, the capital of China, was built by Kachilai-Khan, grandson of Genghis-Khan, about 1267. Here was held the court of the Mongol or Yuen dynasty, 1280-1368. In 1369 Hung-wu, of the Ming dynasty, removed to Nankin, which was the capital till Yung-lo removed his court to Peking in 1410; and by him and his successors the city was enlarged, fortified, and beautified. It was visited by lord Macartney, Sept. 1793; surrendered to the allied English and French armies, 12 Oct. 1860; and evacuated by them 5 Nov., after peace had been signed, 24 Oct. It was described as being in a very desolate state, and the inhabitants scattered and indigent. The population in 1864 was estimated at 1,600,000. English and French representatives were settled at Peking, March, 1861.

Pelagians, followers of Pelagius, a Briton, appeared at Rome about 400. Their doctrines were condemned by councils at Jerusalem, Carthage, and other places, 415, 530. They maintained:

1. That Adam was by nature mortal, and, whether he had sinned or not, would certainly have died.
2. That the consequences of Adam's sin were confined to his own person.
3. That new-born infants are in the same condition with Adam before the fall.
4. That the law qualified men for the kingdom of heaven, and was founded upon equal promises with the Gospel.
5. That the general resurrection of the dead does not follow in virtue of Christ's resurrection.

Pelasgi, the primitive inhabitants of Greece and Italy, appear to have belonged to the Indo-Germanic race. They were in Greece about 1900 B.C., and in Italy about 1600 B.C. They have been termed Tyrrheni, Sicani or Siculi, Apuli, etc. From the Pelasgi came the Dorians, Æolians, and Ionians; all three being Hellenes, or Greeks.

Pelew Islands (N. Pacific ocean), discovered by the Spaniards in the seventeenth century. The East India Company's packet Antelope, capt. Wilson, was wrecked here in 1783. The king, Abba Thulle, allowed capt. Wilson to bring prince Le Boo, his son, to England, where he arrived in 1784, and died of the small-pox soon after. The East India Company erected a monument over his grave in Rotherhithe churchyard.

Pelham Administration. Mr. H. Pelham replaced the earl of Wilmington as premier, 25 Aug. 1743; see Wilmington. In Nov. 1744, the following ministry was formed (termed "the broad-bottom administration," because it comprehended a grand coalition of the parties). It was dissolved by the death of Mr. Pelham, 6 March, 1754.

Henry Pelham, first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer.

Lord Hardwicke, lord chancellor.

Duke of Dorset, president of the council.

Earl Gower, lord privy seal.

Duke of Newcastle and the earl of Harrington, secretaries of state.

Duke of Montagu, master-general of the ordnance.

Duke of Bedford, first lord of the admiralty.

Duke of Grafton, lord chamberlain.

Duke of Richmond, master of the horse.

Duke of Argyll, keeper of the great seal of Scotland.

Marquess of Tweeddale, secretary of state for Scotland.

All of the cabinet.

The duke of Devonshire and duke of Bolton were not of the cabinet.

Pells (from pellis, skin), receipts on parchment rolls deposited in the court of exchequer. By an act passed in 1834, the office of clerk of the pells was abolished, and a comptroller-general appointed. "Pell records," or "issues of the exchequer," or payments made out of his revenue by James I., were published by the government in 1836.

Pelopium, see Niobium.

Peloponnesus (the island of Pelops), S. Greece, termed Morea in the thirteenth century, said to have been settled by Pelops about 1283 B.C.—PELOPONNESIAN WAR continued for twenty-seven years between the Athenians and the people of the Peloponnesus, with their respective allies, and is the most famous of the wars of Greece. It began by an attempt of the Boeotians to surprise Plataea, 431 B.C., on 7 May, and ended 404 by the taking of Athens by the Lacedæmonians.

Pelusium (now Tinah), formerly Sin, the key of Egypt. Here, in 525 B.C., Psammetichus III. was defeated by Cambyses, the Persian, who thereby obtained possession of the kingdom. Pelusium surrendered to Alexander, 333; was taken by the Persians, 309; by Antiochus, 173; by Augustus, 30 B.C., and after a protracted resistance by Amrou, the Saracen, A.D. 638.

Pembroke (S. Wales). A county palatine till 1536. The royal dockyard at Milford was moved to Pembroke in 1814.—PEMBROKE COLLEGE and HALL, see under Oxford and Cambridge.

Penal Laws, see Criminal Laws and Roman Catholics. Penal servitude was substituted for transportation by acts passed in 1853 and 1857, and amended in 1864. A penal servitude commission appointed, 22 Jan. 1878.

Penance, a sacrament in the Roman Church, arose out of the practice of auricular confession (which see). The council of Trent, in its 14th session (1551), decreed that every one is accused who shall affirm that this sacrament was not instituted by Christ.

Penang, or PRINCE OF WALES'S ISLAND, was given up to the East India Company in 1786 by capt. F. Light, who received it as a marriage portion with the daughter of the king of Keddah. After several changes it became one of the Straits Settlements (which see).

Pendulums. The isochronous property of the pendulum is said to have been applied to clocks by Galileo about 1639, and by Richard Harris about 1641. Christian Huyghens claimed this discovery, 1658; see Clocks. George Graham invented the compensating pendulum, 1715. Experiments were made to determine the density of the earth by pendulums by Mr. G. B. Airy (afterwards astronomer royal) and others, in a mine in Cornwall, in 1826 and 1828, and at Horton colliery in 1854. In 1851, M. Foucault demonstrated the rotation of the earth by the motion of a pendulum.

Penge Mystery, Surrey, see Trials, Sept. 1877.

Peninsular Campaign (Virginia). In July, 1861, gen. McClellan had succeeded M'Dowell as commander of the army of the Potomac. On 18 Nov., upon the retirement of gen. Scott, he was made general-in-chief. After the battle of Bull Run, Beauregard was succeeded by gen. Joseph E. Johnston. On 10 March, 1862, this latter general evacuated Manassas Junction. McClellan's command on 11 March was confined to the army of the Potomac, gen. Halleck assuming the duties of general-in-chief. The plan of the Peninsular campaign, already determined upon, now began to be carried into execution. The peninsula of Virginia, from which this campaign receives its name, lies between the James and York rivers, which empty into Chesapeake Bay. Fortress Monroe occupies the extremity of the peninsula, and is connected with the main portion only by a narrow sand-beach. The extreme length is about 60 miles; the average breadth about 12. At Yorktown, 20 miles up, it is narrowed to 8, which width it preserves 10 miles to Williamsburg; then the rivers begin to diverge. The shores of the lower portion of the peninsula are deeply indented with creeks, some of which extend half-way across. The land is flat and low, covered with swampy forests, through which sluggish streams flow lazily, expanding after every rain into miry ponds. Gen. Magruder, at Yorktown—which had been strongly fortified—covered the approaches to Richmond with 11,000 men. He held a line 13 miles long, following the course of the Warwick river. The following are the most remarkable events of the Peninsular campaign in their chronological order:

Heintzelman's corps landed at Fortress Monroe.	23 March, 1862
M'Clellan reached Fortress Monroe, preceded or followed by the main bulk of his army.	2 April, "
M'Dowell's corps detached to cover Washington.	4 April, "
Attempt made to pierce Magruder's lines.	5 April, "
Confederate evacuation of Yorktown.	4 May, "
Battle of Williamsburg.	5 May, "
M'Clellan landed four divisions at West Point.	6, 7 May, "
Evacuation of Norfolk.	10 May, "
Naval repulse at Fort Darling (Drury).	15 May, "
M'Clellan's headquarters established at the White House, on the Pamunkey.	16 May, "
Fast-day in Richmond.	16 May, "
M'Clellan crossed the Chickahominy with a part of his forces, dividing his army.	20-28 May, "
Battle of Hanover Court-house, in which gen. Martindale was attacked by a superior force, but, being reinforced by Fitz John Porter, defeated the confederates, capturing 730 prisoners.	27 May, "
Battles of Seven Pines and Fair Oaks. Johnston attacked M'Clellan's force south of the Chickahominy and drove Keyes's and Heintzelman's corps. Sumner crossed with his corps and came up in time to fight the battle of Fair Oaks. Here Johnston was disabled by a wound, and was succeeded by gen. G. W. Smith. The confederates were repulsed and forced to retreat.	31 May, 1 June, "

R. E. Lee assigned to command the confederate army, 3 June, 1862

Stuart's ride around M'Clellan's army, and destruction of provisions depots at the White House, 13, 14 June, 1862

Battle of Mechanicsville. Lee, joined by Jackson, attacked M'Clellan's right, north of the Chickahominy, and was repulsed, 26 June, 1862

Battle of Cold Harbor. The confederates, 56,000 strong, attacked the national forces (33,000), and, after several repulses and severe loss, drove them from their position. Night and the opportune arrival of reinforcements prevented a rout, 27 June, 1862

M'Clellan's entire army south of the Chickahominy, 28 June, 1862

Retreat to the James River, 28 June, 1862

Battle of Savage's Station (indecisive), 29 June, 1862

Battle of Frazier's Farm. Lee attempted to break the centre of M'Clellan's column, extending from the Chickahominy Swamp to Malvern Hill on the James, but failed. The national troops disputed the ground inch by inch, till night, when they concentrated on the James, 30 June, 1862

Battle of Malvern Hill. The confederates, attacking the national troops in their strong position (both flanks covered by gunboats) on the James, were defeated with great loss, 1 July, 1862

M'Clellan established his base at Harrison's Landing, 1, 2 July, 1862

With the retreat to Harrison's Landing the Peninsular campaign terminated. On 16 Aug. M'Clellan's army was withdrawn from Harrison's Landing by order of Gen. Halleck. In this campaign the national loss was, killed, 1582; wounded, 7709; missing, 5958—total, 15,249; the confederate, killed, 3151; wounded, 15,255; missing, 999—total, 19,405.

Peninsular War, see under Spain, 1808-14.

Penitentiaries. The London Female Penitentiary, Pentonville road, was established in 1807; and the British Penitent Female Refuge at Cambridge Heath, Hackney, in 1829. The Church Penitentiary Association, founded 1851; see Milbank.

Penitents, see Magdalen. The penitents of the name of Jesus in Spain were a congregation of persons who had led a licentious life, formed about 1550. The penitents of Orvieto were formed into an order of nuns about 1662.

Pennsylvania (North America), the first state in the Union in regard to mineral wealth. Sir Walter Raleigh was the first adventurer who planted a colony on these shores, in the reign of Elizabeth. Pennsylvania was granted by Charles II. to the duke of York, 1664; and it was sold to the Penn family, 1681. Pennsylvania was afterwards purchased from the Indians by the celebrated William Penn (son of admiral Penn), who went out from England with a number of colonists, from which period the settlement gradually increased. Mr. Penn granted a charter in May, 1701, but the emigrants from the Low Countries refused it, and separated themselves from the province of Pennsylvania. They afterwards had their own assembly, in which the governor of Pennsylvania presided. This state adopted an independent constitution in 1776, and established the present in 1790. It was strongly Unionist during the civil war, 1861-5; see United States of America and Petroleum. Population in 1860, 2,906,370; in 1870, 3,521,791; in 1880, 4,282,786.

Penny. The ancient silver penny was the first silver coin struck in England, and the only one current among the Anglo-Saxons. The penny until the reign of Edward I. was struck with a cross, so deeply indented that it might be easily parted into two for half-pence, and into four for farthings, and hence these names, Copper penny and twopenny pieces were coined by Boulton and Watt, at Soho, Birmingham, in 1797, and were accounted the finest of our copper currency; see Coins, etc.—PENNY-POST, see Post-office.—THE PENNY MAGAZINE began in 1832, the PENNY CYCLOPEDIA in 1833 (supplements in 1846 and 1858).—THE PENNY RECEIPT stamp was appointed in 1853, and in 1850 a penny stamp was directed to be placed on bankers' checks.—PENNY BANKS (in 1861 about 200) were established about 1850. They have become numerous, and in 1878 were authorized to invest their funds.—PENNY READINGS, for the working-classes, became general in 1859. Carpenter's "Penny Readings," published in 1865-7.

The value of the Roman penny (mentioned Matt. xx. 2), or denarius, was estimated at 7½d. of our money.

Death of rev. Thomas Thurlow, nephew of the lord chancellor, whereby pensions for abolished offices, said to amount to 11,759*l.*, ceased, 26 Sept. 1874

Pensions in the United States, with few exceptions, have been granted only in return for military or naval service. In 1879, the amount paid for pensions was $29,642,430.13; but the Arrears of Pensions bills, passed 25 Jan. and 3 March, 1879, have caused an enormous increase in the yearly pension payments. The estimate for the fiscal year ending 30 June, 1882, is $70,000,000. The commissioner of pensions estimates the total additional payments made necessary by those bills at $235,000,000.

Perekop, an isthmus, five miles broad, connecting the Crimea with the mainland. It was called by the Tartars Orkapou, "gate of the isthmus," which the Russians changed to its present name, which signifies a barren ditch. The lines across the isthmus were forced by the Russian marshal Munich, May, 1736, and the fortress was taken by Lacy, July, 1738. It was again strongly fortified by the khan, but was again taken by the Russians in 1771, who have since retained it.

Perfection, see Illuminati.

Perfumery. In Exod. xxx. (1490 B.C.), directions are given for making the holy incense. Philip Augustus of France granted a charter to the master perfumers in 1190. Perfumes became fashionable in England in the reign of Elizabeth. In 1860 there were about forty manufacturing perfumers in London; in Paris about eighty. No such trade as a perfumer was known in Scotland in 1763.—Creech. A stamp-tax was laid on various articles of perfumery in England, and the vendor was obliged to take out a license in 1786. At the corner of Beaufort buildings, in the Strand, resided Lilly, the perfumer, mentioned in the Spectator.—Leigh.

Perjury. The early Romans threw the offender headlong from the Tarpeian precipice; and the Greeks set a mark of infamy upon him. After the empire became Christian, any one who swore falsely upon the Gospels was to have his tongue cut out. The canons of the primitive church enjoined eleven years' penance; and in some states the false swearer became liable to the punishment he charged upon the innocent. In England perjury was punished with the pillory, fine, and imprisonment, 1562. By the Abolition of Oaths bill, persons making a false declaration are deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; Act 5 & 6 Will. IV. cc. 60 and 61, 9 Sept. 1835. Perhaps the greatest perjurer in modern times was Titus Oates, see Oates. A woman named Alice Grey was convicted of many perjuries in 1856. See Trials, 1873.

Perkins's Metallic Tractors, see Animal Magnetism.

Permanent Committees. One was appointed, 15 Sept. 1871, by the French national assembly to watch over the proceedings of the government during a recess. It consisted of 25 persons of various parties. A similar committee of the Spanish cortes, appointed 22 March, 1873, was peremptorily dissolved by the government 22 April following.

Permissive Prohibitory Bill (which would give power to two thirds of the rate-payers of a parish to refuse licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors), advocated by the United Kingdom Alliance party, was rejected by the house of commons, 8 June, 1864; 12 May, 1869 (193-87); 17 May, 1871 (206-124); 8 May, 1872 (369-15); 7 May, 1873 (321-81); 17 June, 1874 (301-75); 16 June, 1875 (371-86); 14 June, 1876 (299-81); withdrawn, 25 July, 1877; (278-84) 26 June, 1878. It is strongly advocated by sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P. for Carlisle; resolution rejected (252-164) 11 March, 1879.

His resolution to give local option (that is, power to the inhabitants of any place to stop licensing public-houses) was rejected by the commons (248-134) 5 March, 1880; but adopted (249-203) 18, 19 June, 1880, (196-164) 14 June, 1881.

"Local Option," an Americanism, is said not to work satisfactorily in the United States.

Pernambuco, a province of Brazil, with a city of the same name, comprising Recife and other towns, founded in 1530; seized by the British, and retained for a month, 1594; insurrections here, 1661, 1710, 1817, 1821, and 1829.

Peronne (N. France). Louis XI. of France, having placed himself in the power of the duke of Burgundy, here was forced to sign a treaty, confirming those of Arras and Conflans, and recognizing the duke's independence; 14 Oct. 1468. The notables declared the treaty invalid and the duke a traitor, Nov. 1470.

Perpetual Motion. For this purpose machines have been constructed by the marquess of Worcester and many others, although the impossibility of attaining it was demonstrated by sir Isaac Newton and De la Hire, and affirmed by the Academy of Sciences at Paris, 1775. It is still the object of experiment by half-taught persons.

Perryville (Kentucky). BATTLE OF, fought 8 Oct. 1862. Kirby Smith had entered Kentucky in August, and was followed by the bulk of Bragg's army. In this march northward, threatening Louisville and Cincinnati, there was an encounter at Richmond, Ky., 30 Aug., and the garrison at Munfordsville, Tenn., was surrendered, 17 Sept. Smith and Bragg joined their forces and inaugurated a provisional governor at Frankfort. But, in the meantime, Buell had succeeded in reaching Louisville with his army. Bragg commenced to retreat, followed leisurely by Buell. On 8 Oct. gen. A. M'Dowell M'Cook touched the enemy's rear and brought on a battle, against the express orders of Buell. M'Cook was attacked with great strength, and with difficulty maintained his position. Here gen. Jackson and col. Webster were killed. Rousseau's division alone lost 2000 men. The Confederate loss was also severe.

Perugia, a city of central Italy; as Perousia, anciently one of the Etruscan confederation. It allied itself with the Samnites, but was ruined by two defeats by the Romans, 309 and 295 B.C. It was taken by Octavius Caesar from the adherents of Antony; many of whom were immolated on altars by their victor, 41

Leo X. took Perugia from the rival families Oddi and Baglioni in A.D. 1520. An insurrection here against the pope was put down by the Swiss with great cruelty, 20 June, 1859. Perugia was taken by the Sardinian gen. Fanti, in Sept. 1860, when the cruel papal gen. Schmidt and 1600 men were made prisoners.

Peruke, or Wig. The ancients used false hair, but the present peruke was first worn in France and Italy about 1620; and introduced into England about 1660, and prevailed more or less till about 1810.

It is said that either bishop Blomfield (of London) or Tomline (of Lincoln) obtained permission for the bishops to discontinue wearing their wigs in parliament, of which they gradually availed themselves. On account of the heat, sir J. P. Wilde, and other judges and several counsel, appeared in court without wigs, 22, 23 July, 1868.

Peruvian Bark, see Jesuit's-bark.

Peschiera, a strong Austrian fortress, on an island in the Mincio, near the Lago di Garda, N. Italy. It has been frequently taken by siege—by the French, 1796; by the Austrians and Russians, 1799; by the French again, 1801; given up by them, 1814; taken by the Sardinians, May, 1848; retaken by Radetzky, March, 1849. The Sardinians were preparing to besiege it in July, 1859, when peace was made. It was given up to the Italians, 9 Oct. 1866; see Quadrilateral.

Pessimism (from pessimus, the worst), the opposite doctrine to optimism (which see). Mr. James Sully's "Pessimism, a History and a Criticism," was published in 1877. Arthur Schopenhauer (1788-1860), an eminent pessimist, says, "All life is effort; all effort is painful; the pains of life must predominate."

Pestalozzian System of education was devised by John Henry Pestalozzi, born at Zurich in Switzerland, in 1746; died 17 Feb. 1827. In 1775 he turned his farm into a school for educating poor children in reading, writing, and working; but he did not succeed. In 1798 he established an orphan school, where he began with the mutual instruction, or monitorial system, since adopted by Lancaster; but his school was soon after turned into a hospital for the Austrian army. In 1802, in conjunction with Fellenberg, he established his school at Hofwyl, which at first was successful, but eventually declined through mismanagement.

Pesth (Hungary), built about 889, on the east bank of the Danube, opposite Buda, was repeatedly taken and besieged in the wars of Hungary, particularly with the Turks. The great insurrection broke out here, and the minister, count Lamberg, was killed, 28 Sept. 1848. Buda-Pesth was taken by the imperialists, 5 Jan. 1849. The Hungarians afterwards defeated the Austrians, who were obliged to evacuate it, 18 April, same year. see Hungary. Buda-Pesth formally constituted capital of Hungary, Nov. 1873.

Pestilence, see Plague.

Petalism (from the Greek πέταλον, a leaf), a mode of deciding upon the guilt of citizens of Syracuse, similar to the Athenian ostracism, the name being written on a leaf (generally of an olive) instead of a shell, about 460 B.C. If guilt were established, the sentence was usually banishment.

Petard, or PETAR, an invention ascribed to the Huguenots in 1579. Petards of metal, nearly in the shape of a hat, were employed to blow up gates or other barriers, and also in countermines to break through into the enemy's galleries. Calors was taken by Henry IV. by means of petards, in 1580, when it is said they were first used. "Hoist with his own petar."—Shakespeare, "Hamlet," iii. 4.

Peter the Great's Will, see under Wills.

Peter the Wild Boy, a savage creature found in the forest of Hertswood, electorate of Hanover, when George I. and his friends were hunting. He was found walking on his hands and feet, climbing trees like a squirrel, and feeding on grass and moss, Nov. 1725. At this time he was supposed to be thirteen years old. He died, while under the care of an English farmer, Feb. 1785.

The king caused him to taste of all the dishes at the royal table; but he preferred wild plants, leaves, and the bark of trees, which he had lived on from his infancy. No efforts of the many philosophic persons about court could entirely vary his savage habits, or cause him to utter one distinct syllable. Lord Monboddo represented him to be a proof of the hypothesis that "man in a state of nature is a mere animal."

Peterborough, anciently Medeshamstede (Northamptonshire); obtained its present name from a king of Mercia founding an abbey and dedicating it to St. Peter, about 655. The church, destroyed by the Danes, was rebuilt with great beauty. The bishopric was erected by Henry VIII., out of the lands of dissolved monasteries in the diocese of Lincoln. The first bishop was John Chambers, the last abbot of Peterborough, 1541. The see was valued in the king's books at 419*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* Present income 4500*l.*

Petersburg, St., the modern capital of Russia, founded by Peter the Great, 27 May, 1703. He built a small hut for himself, and some wooden hovels. In 1710, the count Golovkin built the first house of brick; and the next year the emperor, with his own hands, laid the foundation of a house of the same material. The seat of empire was transferred from Moscow to this place in 1711. Here, in 1736, a fire consumed 2000 houses; and in 1780 another fire consumed 11,000 houses; this last fire was occasioned by lightning. Again in June, 1796, a large magazine of naval stores and 100 vessels were destroyed. The Winter Palace was burned to the ground, 29 Dec. 1837. The railway to Moscow was finished in 1851, to Berlin, opened 5 May, 1862. The university was closed in Oct. 1861, on account of the riotous conduct of the students. On 10 June, 1862, property to the amount of nearly a million sterling was destroyed by fire, see Russia, 1879-81.

Peter's Church, St. (Rome), originally erected by Constantine, 306. About 1450, pope Nicholas V. commenced a new church. The present magnificent pile was designed by Bramante; the first stone laid by pope Julius II. in 1506. In 1514, Leo X. employed Raphael and two others to superintend the building. Paul III. committed the work to Michael Angelo, who devised the dome, in the construction of which 80,000 lbs. of iron were used. The church was consecrated 18 Nov. 1626. The front is 400 feet broad, rising to a height of 180 feet, and the majestic dome ascends from the centre of the church to a height of 324 feet; the length of the interior is 600 feet, forming one of the most spacious halls ever constructed. The length of the exterior is 669 feet; its greatest breadth within is 412 feet; and the entire height from the ground 482 feet.

Peter's Pence, presented by Leo, king of the West Saxons, to the pope at Rome, for the endowment of an English college there, about 725; so called because agreed to be paid on Peter mass, 1 Aug. The tax was levied on all families possessed of thirty pence yearly rent in land, out of which they paid one penny. It was confirmed by Offa, 777, and was afterwards claimed by the popes as a tribute from England, and regularly collected, till suppressed by Henry VIII, 1534.—Camden. A public collection (on behalf of the pope) was forbidden in France in 1680.

Peterswalden (Germany), CONVENTION OF, between Great Britain and Russia, by which a firm and decisive alliance between these powers was made against France, and the course of action against Napoleon Bonaparte was planned; signed 8 July, 1815. This alliance led to the overthrow of Bonaparte in the next year.

Peterwaradein (in Austria) was taken by the Turks, July, 1526. Here prince Eugene of Savoy gained a great victory over the Turks, 5 Aug. 1716.

Petitions. The right of petitioning the crown and parliament for redress of grievances is a fundamental principle of the constitution. Petitions are extant of the date of Edward I. In the reign of Henry IV. petitions began to be addressed to the house of commons in considerable numbers. In 1587 there were presented to parliament 10,881 petitions, signed by 2,906,906 persons; in 1659, 24,596, signed by 2,290,579; in 1667, 12,744, signed by 1,145,216; see Abhorrence and Rights.

A petition from Boulogne for a canal was brought in, but not received by the commons. . . . April, May, 1676.

The right of petition is secured by the constitution of the United States; but in Jan. 1800, great excitement and rancorous debate were induced in Congress by the presentation of a petition from free negroes. John Quincy Adams, who was a champion of the right of petition, presented a petition in congress purporting to come from slaves—the first of the kind ever offered—Feb. 1837. C. G. Atherton of New Hampshire offered a resolution, which was adopted by congress 11 Dec. 1838, that all papers and petitions relating to slavery should be "laid on the table without being debated, printed, or referred." The rule was rescinded in 1845. It is known as the Atherton gag.

Peto's Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26 (1850), renders more simple and effectual the titles by which religious bodies hold property.

Petra, the ancient Seia, in Mount Seir, near Mount Her, in the land of Edom. In the fourth century a.c. it was held by the Nabathians, who successfully resisted Antiochus. About a.d. 70 it was the residence of the Arab prince named Aretas. It was conquered by Cornelius Palma, and annexed to the empire under Trajan, 105, to which period its remarkable monuments are ascribed. It was an important station for commercial traffic with Rome. It has been described by Burchardt and other travellers.

Petrarch and Laura, celebrated for the refined passion of the former for the latter, began in 1327, and the chief subject of his sonnets. He was born 1304; crowned with laurel, as a poet and writer, on Easter-day, 8 April, 1341, and died at Arquà, near Padua, 18 July, 1374. Laura died 6 April, 1348. A commemoration of his death at Avignon and other places, 18 July, 1874.

Petro-Brusians, followers of Pierre de Bruys, an early reformer, who was burned at St. Gilles, Langue-doc, as a heretic, in 1120.

Petroleum, rock oil or mineral oil, has been found in many parts of the world, especially at Bangoon and in the United States. In 1859-61 a number of oil-springs were discovered in the bituminous coal regions of N. W. Pennsylvania, now termed "Petrolia;" and others have been since discovered in Ohio and other states, and also in Canada. Numerous artesian-wells were sunk, manufactories erected, and an almost unlimited supply obtained; between 1859-77, 2,302,500,000 gallons; in 1898, 6,907,945 gallons; in 1877, 33,596,511 cwt. The exports of petroleum from the United States during the fiscal year ending 30 June, 1890, were valued at $34,308,011. In consequence of the importation of this oil into this country, and many accidents having taken place through its inflammability at low temperature, acts for "the safe keeping of petroleum" were passed 23 July, 1862; July, 1868; Aug. 1871, and 1879. Petroleum became an awful weapon in the hands of the insurgents in Paris, 28-27 May, 1871. About fifty killed by explosion at a petroleum manufactory near Rheims, 16 July, 1871. The Petroleum Association test petroleum, with the view of preventing the importation of that which is dangerous. Refined petroleum imported: 1872, 6,570,674 gallons; 1877, 33,474,955 gallons.

Pétroleuses, a name given to women charged with throwing petroleum on the burning houses in Paris during the siege by the government, May, 1871.

Petropaulovski, a fortified town on the east coast of Kamtschatka, was attacked by an English and French squadron, 30 Aug. 1854. They destroyed the batteries, but failed in taking some Russian frigates, except the Sibol, a store-ship taken by the President, and a schooner taken by the Pique. Admiral Price was killed, it is supposed by the accidental discharge of his own pistol. A party of 700 sailors and marines landed to assault the place, but fell into an ambuscade, many were killed, including capt. Parker and M. Bourmest, English and French officers. The objects of the attack were not attained, it is thought from want of stores. After this the Russians greatly strengthened their defences; but on 30 May, 1855, the allied squadron in the Pacific arriving here found the place deserted. The fortifications were destroyed, but the town was spared. The Russian ships escaped.

Petty Bag, Clerk of the. Power was given to the treasury, with consent of the lord chancellor and master of the rolls, to abolish this office, by the Great Seal Office act, 1874.

Pevensey (Sussex), said to be the site of the Roman Anderida, on which a Norman castle was erected. Here William of Normandy landed, 28 or 29 Sept. 1066. The duke of York, in the reign of Henry IV., was for some time confined within the walls of this castle; as was also queen Joan of Navarre, the last wife of Henry IV., who, with her confessor, friar Randal, was accused of a design to destroy Henry V., her stepson.

Pews in Churches. "In a London will we read of sedile vocatum pew" (a seat called pew), 1458. Pews were consecrated by Latimer and Bradford, 1558.—Walton. The church of Geddington St. Mary, Northamptonshire, long contained a pew dated 1602. The rev. W. M. H. Church (vicar 1844-6) restored and renovated the church, and preserved the panel with the date in the door of the surplice press. Another pew in the chancel was dated 1604.

Pfaffendorf and Idognitz (Silesia). Near them two places was fought a battle between the Imperialists and Prussians, 18 Aug. 1760. The Austrians were defeated by Frederick of Prussia, who thus prevented the junction of the Russian and Austrian armies.

Phalanstery, see Fourierism.

Phalanx. The Greek phalanx consisted of 6000 men in a square battalion, with shields joined, and spears crossing each other. The battalion of Philip of Macedon, called the Macedonian phalanx, was formed by him about 360 a.c.

Phalabourg (PALATINO, Palatine city), a strong town of Alsace-Lorraine, was founded in 1570 by the elector-palatine, George John. It was ceded to France in 1661, and its fortress erected by Vauban, 1679. It checked the progress of the victorious armies of the allies both in 1814 and 1815, and withstood the Germans from 16 Aug. to 12 Dec. 1870, when it capitulated unconditionally. It was retained at the peace in Feb. 1871.

Pharaoh's Serpents, a dangerous chemical toy, composed of sulphocyanide of mercury, appeared in Paris in the summer of 1865.

Pharisees, a sect among the Jews; so called from pharush, a Hebrew word for separated, because they pretended to a greater degree of holiness than the rest of the Jews (Luke xviii. 9-12). The Talmud enumerates seven classes of Pharisees.

Pharmacopœia, a book of directions for the preparation of medicine, published by colleges of physicians; the earliest in England, 1618. In 1862 the General Medical Council were empowered to prepare and sell a new pharmacopœia, to supersede those of the colleges of London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, which was published in June, 1864; succeeded by a new one in May, 1867; reprinted 1874.

Pharmacy, the knowledge of the chemical and medical properties of drugs and other things employed medicinally. The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, founded 1 June, 1841, mainly by Mr. Jacob Bell, obtained its charter in 1843. It publishes a weekly journal.—The Pharmacy act, 1852, regulates the qualifications of pharmaceutical chemists. It was amended by the Pharmacy act of 1868, which required all sellers of poisons to be registered after 31 Dec. 1868; act amended in 1869.

Pharos, of Ptolemy Philadelphus of Alexandria, was esteemed as one of the wonders of the world. It was a tower built of white marble, completed about 283 B.C. On the top fires were constantly kept to direct sailors in the bay. The building cost 800 talents, which are equivalent to above 165,100*l.* English, if Attic; or, if Alexandrian, double that sum. It is said that there was this inscription upon it—"King Ptolemy to the gods, the saviours, for the benefit of sailors;" but Sostratus the architect, wishing to claim all the glory, engraved his own name upon the stones, and afterwards filled the hollow with mortar, and wrote the above inscription. When the mortar had decayed, Ptolemy's name disappeared, and the following inscription became visible: "Sostratus the 'nidian, son of Dexiphanes, to the gods, the saviours, for the benefit of sailors;" see Light-houses.

Pharsalia, a strong city in Thessaly, N. Greece. Near it Julius Cæsar defeated his rival Pompey, 9 Aug. 48 B.C., and became virtually master of the known world. Pompey fled to Egypt, where he was treacherously slain, by order of Ptolemy the younger, then a minor, and his body left naked on the strand, till it was burned by his faithful freedman, Philip.

Phenophthalmoscope, an apparatus for investigating the movements of the eyeball: invented by Donders of Utrecht, and announced in 1870.

Phereæ (Thessaly, N. Greece), see Thessaly.

Phigalian Marbles, in the British Museum, were purchased for it by the prince regent in 1815. They consist of portions of the frieze taken from the temple of Apollo Epicurus at Phigaleia in Arcadia, and are reputed to be works of the earlier school of Phidias, who died 432 B.C. The bass-reliefs represent the conflicts of the Greeks and Amazons, and of the Centaurs and Lapithæ.

Philadelphia (Asia Minor), see Seven Churches.—PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, was planned by William Penn in 1682. The American congress assembled here in 1774, and promulgated the declaration of independence on 4 July, 1776. It was the capital of the Union from 1790 to 1800, when Washington was selected in its place.

The National Union Convention held its first meeting here 14 Aug. 1866. Population, 1880, 846,984; see United States.

Philiphaugh, near Selkirk, S. Scotland, where the marquess of Montrose and the royalists were defeated by David Leslie and the Scotch Covenanters, 13 Sept. 1645.

Philippi (Macedonia), so named by Philip II. of Macedon. Here Octavius Cæsar and Marc Antony, in two battles, defeated the republican forces of Cassius and Brutus, who both committed suicide, Oct. 42 B.C. Paul preached here, A.D. 48, and wrote an epistle to the converts, 64.

Philippica, the term applied to the orations of Demosthenes against Philip II. of Macedon, 352-341 A.C., and also to the orations of Cicero against Marc Antony (one of which, called divine by Juvenal, cost Cicero his life), 44-43 B.C.

Philippine Isles (in the Malay Archipelago), discovered by Magellan, in March, 1521, who here lost his life in a skirmish. They were taken possession of in 1565 by a fleet from Mexico, which first stopped at the island of Zebu, and subdued it. In 1570 a settlement was effected at the mouth of the Manila river, and Manila became the capital of the Spanish possessions in the Philippines; see Manilla and Earthquakes. The Philippine commercial company was unsuccessful, 1786.

Philippium, a metal of the yttrium series, found in Samarskite earth (in Russia, North Carolina, etc.) by M. Marc Delafontaine by means of the spectroscope; announced Oct. 1878. Also said to have been found by Mr. Lawrence Smith, and named Mosandrium, July, 1878.

Philistines, a people of Palestine, conquered Israel, 1156 B.C., and ruled it forty years. They were defeated by Samuel, 1120; and by Saul and Jonathan, 1067. They again invaded Israel, about 1063, when David slew their champion, Goliath. After David became king he thoroughly subdued them, 1040. In common with Syria, their country was subjugated by the Romans, under Pompey, about 63.—In Germany, about 1830, Heine and the liberal party applied the term "Philistines" to the opponents of progress, or conservative party.

Philobiblon Society was instituted in 1858 by Mr. R. Monckton Milnes (since lord Houghton), M. Sylvain Van de Weyer, the Belgian minister, and others. It publishes volumes of "Miscellanies," etc.

Philosophy (love of wisdom), the knowledge of the reason of things (distinguished from history, the knowledge of facts, and from mathematics, the knowledge of the quantity of things); the hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.—Locke. Pythagoras first adopted the name of philosopher (such men having been previously called sages) about 528 B.C. Philosophers were expelled from Rome, and their schools suppressed, by Domitian, A.D. 83. Philosophy is now divided into—1. Moral or Ethical; 2. Intellectual; 3. Natural or Physical.

MORAL AND INTELLECTUAL PHILOSOPHY.

ANCIENT SCHOOLS.—Pythagorean, about 500 B.C.; Platonic (the Academy), by Plato, 374; Peripatetic (the Lyceum), by Aristotle, 334; Stoic, by Pyrrho, 334; Cynic, by Diogenes, 330; Epicurean, by Epicurus, 306; Stoic, by Zeno, 290; Middle Academy, by Arcesilaus, 271; New Academy, by Carneades, 160; New Platonists (who attempted to combine Platonism with Christianity): Ammonius Saccas, died A.D. 243; Plotinus, died about 270; Porphyry, died about 305; Jamblichus, died about 333; Julian the emperor, died 363.

MODERN SYSTEMS.—Nominal, Jean Roscellin, about 1092; Abelard, etc.; Rational, Bacon, about 1624; Cartesian, Descartes, about 1590; Reflective or Perceptive, Locke, 1690; Idealistic, Berkeley, 1710; Elective, Leibnitz, 1710; Common-sense, Reid, 1750-70; Transcendental, Kant, Hamilton, etc., 1770-1860; Scientific, Fichte, 1800-14; Absolute Identity, Schelling, 1800-20; Absolute Idealism, Hegel, 1810-30; Utilitarian, Bentham, Mill, etc., 1790-1873; Positive, Comte, 1830; Realism and Evolutionary Materialism, prevalent, Darwin, Herbert Spencer, etc., 1873.

NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

Greek and Latin.—Thales, about 600 B.C.; Pythagoras, 530; Aristotle and Plato, 350; Euclid, 300; Archimedes, 287; Hipparchus, 150; Lucretius, about 100; Julius Cæsar, 60; Ptolemy, A.D. 150.

Middle Ages.—Arabians: Ben Musa, 800; Alhazen, etc., 1100 Gerbert, Decimals, 959 Roger Bacon, "Opus Majus," 1266.

Inductive Philosophy:
Copernicus's system published. 1543
Tycho Brahe 1546-1601
Gilbert's researches in electricity and magnetism. 1600
Kepler's Laws 1609-18
Bacon's "Novum Organum" 1620
Galileo's "Dialogues" 1632
Royal Society begins (which see) 1645
Otto Guericke—air-pump and electric machine. 1654
Huyghens on pendulums 1658
Newton—Fluxions, 1665; Analysis of Light, 1669; Theory of Gravitation, 1684; "Principia" published, 1687; death 1727
Bradley discovers aberration. "
Euler on Perturbation of the Planets 1748
Black on Heat 1762
Laplace on Tides 1775
Lagrange, "Mécanique Analytique" 1788
Galvani and Volta's researches 1791
Laplace, "Mécanique Céleste" 1799
Crested discovers electro-magnetism 1819
Faraday, magneto-electricity 1831
(See Acoustics, Astronomy, Optics, Chemistry, Electricity, etc.)

Phipps's Expedition. The hon. capt. Phipps (afterwards lord Mulgrave) sailed from England in command of the Sea-horse and Carcass ships to make discoveries as near as possible to the North Pole. In Aug. 1773, he was for nine days environed with barriers of ice in the Frozen ocean, north of Spitzbergen, 80° 48' N. lat. All progress or retreat was impossible, and all on board gave themselves up for lost; but a brisk wind in two or three days accomplished their deliverance. They returned to England without having made any discoveries, 20 Sept. 1773. Nelson was coxswain to the second in command.

Phlogiston, a term employed by Stahl to designate the matter or principle of fire; the "inflammable principle" of bishop Watson, near the close of the seventeenth century. The chemical theory based upon it, considered to have been totally refuted by Lavoisier, 1790, has been recently revived in a modified form.

Phocia, a state in N. Greece. The Phocians seized Delphi 357 B.C., and commenced the second Sacred War. They were opposed by Thebes and other states, and were utterly subdued by Philip II. of Macedon in 346.

Phoenicia, on the sea-coast of Syria. The natives were the most eminent navigators and traders of antiquity; their cities or allied states being Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, Tripoli, Byblos, and Ptolemais, or Acre. From the nineteenth to the thirteenth century before Christ, they established colonies on the shores or isles of the Mediterranean—Carthage, Hippo, Utica, Gades, Panormus—and are said to have visited the British isles. Phœnicia was conquered by Cyrus, 537 B.C.; by Alexander, 332; by the Romans, 47; and, after partaking of the fortunes of Palestine, was added to the Ottoman empire, A.D. 1516.

Phoenix Clubs, of a treasonable character, were formed in Ireland in 1858. They met at night to drill. Several persons were arrested and tried in March, 1859, at Tralee; but the jury could not agree on their verdict. Daniel Sullivan was condemned to penal servitude for ten years, April, 1859. Eventually some of the prisoners pleaded guilty, and were discharged on being bound over to keep the peace.

Phonēdoscope, an instrument for observing the color-figures of liquid films under the action of sonorous vibrations, being a visible demonstration of the vibratory and molecular motion of a telephone plate; invented by Mr. Sedley Taylor, 1877, manufactured by S. C. Tisley & Co., London, 1878.

Phonograph, a machine proposed to be attached to pianofortes and other keyed instruments, by which any music that is played may be written down on blank paper, since it rules and prints the notes simultaneously. It was patented by Mr. Fenby, 13 June, 1863. The motive-power is electro-magnetism. Machines with a similar object were projected by Mr. Creed in 1747; Mr. J. F. Unger in 1774, and by Mr. Carreyre in 1827.

A new phonograph by Thomas Elvey Edison, electrician, of New Jersey, U. S., was announced. Dec. 1877
Linear indentations are made by means of a pin in a sheet of tinfoil by speaking or singing, and from these casts may be taken. When these are placed upon the diaphragm of a telephone connected with revolving apparatus, the sounds may be reproduced with a weird-like effect. Improved by Mr. Shelford Bidwell, 1879 (see Telephone).

Phonography (from the Greek φωνή, sound), suggested by Franklin, 1768. The Phonetic Society, whose object was to render our mode of writing and printing more consonant to sound, was established 1 March, 1843; sir W. C. Trevelyan president, and Mr. Isaac Pitman secretary, the latter being the inventor of the system, which was made known in 1837. Among other works published by the promoters of the system was the "Phonetic News," in 1849; see Visible Speech.

Phonoscope, an apparatus for testing the quality of musical strings, invented by M. Koenig, and exhibited at the International Exhibition in 1862.

Mr. Edmunds's phonoscope, exhibited to the British Association, Aug. 1878, is an instrument for producing figures and light from the vibrations of sound.

Phosphor-bronze, an alloy of copper, tin, and phosphorus, invented by Messrs. Montefiore-Levi and Künzel, of Belgium, in 1867. It is very hard, ductile, and elastic, with a color resembling gold.

Phosphorescence. The property possessed by some bodies of retaining luminosity after exposure to light, observed by the ancients; especially noticed by Vincenzo Cascariolo (1602), Boyle, Canton, Wilson, and others; and especially studied by Edmond Becquerel and Balmain; see Luminous Paint.

Phosphorus was discovered in 1667 by Brandt, of Hamburg, who procured it from urine. The discovery was prosecuted by John Kunckel, a Saxon chemist, about 1670, and by the hon. R. Boyle about the same time.—Nour. Dict. Phosphoric acid is first mentioned in 1743, but is said to have been known earlier. Gahn pointed out its existence in bones in 1769, and Scheele devised a process for extracting it. Canton's phosphorus is so called from its discoverer, 1768. Phosphuretted hydrogen was discovered by Gengembre in 1812. The consumption of phosphorus has immensely increased since the manufacture of lucifer matches. In 1845, Schröter, of Vienna, discovered allotropic or amorphous phosphorus, which ignites more slowly and is less unwholesome in working than ordinary phosphorus.

Photography. The action of light on chloride of silver was known as early as the sixteenth century. The phenomenon was studied by Scheele (1777), Senebier (1790), Ritter and Wollaston (1801). From the results of these investigations, experiments were made by Thomas Wedgwood and Humphry Davy, in the Royal Institution, London, which were published in its Journal, 1802. Wedgwood may be regarded as the first photographer. His paper was entitled "An Account of a Method of Copying Paintings upon Glass, and of Making Profiles by the Agency of Light upon Nitrate of Silver."

Further discoveries were made by Niepce in 1811, and sir J. Herschel in 1819.

Lou s J. M. Daguerre commenced his experiments in 1824; and in 1826 joined Joseph Nicéphore Niepce, and worked with him till the death of the latter in 1833. The production of Daguerreotype plates was announced in Jan. 1839, and the French chamber of deputies granted a pension to Daguerre and to Niepce's son Isidore.

In 1839 Mr. Henry Fox Talbot first published the mode of multiplying photographic impressions by producing a negative: photograph (i. e. with the light and shades reversed) from which any number of positive copies may be obtained. His patent for producing the Talbotype or Calotype (on paper) is dated Feb. 1841.

In 1851, collodion (which see) was applied to photography by Mr. F. Archer.

The Photographic Society of London was established in 1853. It publishes a journal. On 22 Dec. 1852, 774 specimens of photography were exhibited at the rooms of the Society of Arts, Adelphi.

Carte de visite portraits (which see) taken by M. Ferrier at Nice, 1857.

In 1861 Mr. Thompson of Weymouth photographed the bottom of the sea.

Photography was successfully applied to the transfer of works of art to wood blocks by Mr. John Leighton in his illustrated edition of "Lyra Germanica," 1861.

In 1861 professor O. M. Rood suggested the application of photography to the microscope.

The tannin process introduced by major Russell about 1861. The copyright of photographs is secured by an act passed in 1862.

Dr. Henry Wright photographed objects of surgical interest in Jan. 1863.

The Wothlytype process, in which nitrate of silver and albumen are discarded and a double salt of tritium and collodion substituted, invented by Wothly, was announced in the autumn of 1864.

The light of ignited magnesium was employed for photographs by Mr. Brothers of Manchester in the spring of 1864.

Mr. H. Van der Weyde, an American artist, succeeded in making electric light very effective in photography, 1873-8.

Photographs of the first page of the Times, containing many French advertisements (14 inch long by 1 inch wide), sent to Paris from Bordeaux by balloons, Jan. 1871.

Criminals ordered to be photographed (by the act for Prevention of Crime) from 2 Nov. 1871.

Composite portraits in which sometimes nine components were used, formed by Mr. Francis Galton by means of photography, 1877.

The Autotype process for transferring and printing reported successful, April, 1873.

Celestial Photography began with prof. Bond the astronomer, of Cambridge, U. S., who exhibited a photograph of the moon in 1851. In 1859 Dr. Henry Draper of New York made a photograph of the moon 70 inches in diameter, the largest and best ever made. In 1872 Dr. Draper, with a telescope and apparatus constructed by himself for the purpose, photographed the spectra of the stars for the first time in the history of celestial photography, succeeding in showing the dark lines of a star's spectrum. In 1880 and 1881 he photographed the nebula in Orion, and made valuable photographs of comets. Mr. Warren De la Rue of London has produced excellent photographs of the moon and other heavenly bodies, and on 18 July, 1860, photographed the solar eclipse.

PHOTOHELIOGRAPH. an apparatus for registering the position of the sun's spots by means of clockwork and photography; erected at the suggestion of sir John Herschel at Kew observatory about 1857. It was used by Mr. Warren De la Rue to photograph the disc of the sun during the eclipse of 18 July, 1860.

PHOTOGRAPHY. the art of producing engravings by the action of light and electricity. The earliest specimens were produced by Nicéphore Niepce, and presented by him in 1827 to the great botanist, Robert Brown. Great advances have since been made in this art by MM. Niepce de St. Victor (who published a treatise on it in 1856), Vitry, W. R. Grove, H. Fox Talbot, etc. In 1853 Paul Preteux patented a process which he called "Photogalvanography."

PHOTOGLYPHIC ENGRAVING (a process by which the light actually etches a picture on a plate that may be and has been printed from) was patented by Mr. Fox Talbot in 1858, and is described and exemplified in the Photographic Notes, v and 16 Sept. 1859, a specimen being given in the latter number.

PHOTOZINCGRAPHY (a process by which photographs are transferred to zinc plates which may be printed from) was devised by sir Henry James, chief of the Ordnance Survey, and made known in 1860. By it maps, charts, and engravings may be printed at a small cost.

PHOTO-SCULPTURE. M. Villème's employment of photographs in the formation of sculpture was announced in 1863.

Photometer (light-measurer); one was constructed by Dr. W. Ritchie in 1825. Many improvements have been made recently in connection with photography.

Photophone. In this apparatus, constructed by prof. Graham Bell and Mr. Sumner Tainter of Washington, in 1880, a thin plane mirror is thrown into vibration by the voice; a beam of light is reflected from this mirror and received at a distance by a cell of the metal selenium; when, by arrangement, this is connected with a telephone, the sounds are reproduced.

Photophere, see Sun, note.

Phrenology, see Criminology.

Phrygia (now Karamania), a province in Asia Minor, became part of the Persian empire in 537 B.C., and partook of its changes. It became a Roman province in 47 B.C., and a Turkish one A.D. 1392.

Phylloxera, see Vine.

Physic appears to have been first practised by the Egyptian priests. Pythagoras endeavored to explain the philosophy of disease and the action of medicine, about 529 B.C. Hippocrates, the father of medicine, flourished about 422 B.C., and Galen, born A.D. 131, was the oracle of medical science. About 980, Avicenna, an Arab, wrote a system of medicine; see Medical.

The dogmatic age of medicine lasted till the Reformation, when it was attacked by Paracelsus (1493-1541) and Vesalius (1514-64). Since 1800 medical practice has been completely transformed by physiological and chemical research.

The discovery of the circulation of the blood by Dr. Harvey furnished an entirely new system of physiological and pathological speculation, 1628; see Medical and Societies.

PHYSICIAN TO THE KING—John, the king's chaplain and physician (afterwards bishop of Bath and Wells), mentioned 1680.

The earliest mandate or warrant for the attendance of a physician at court is dated 1464, and 33 Henry VI., a reg. fertile in the patronage which was afforded to practitioners in medicine; but no appointment existed which can justly be called physician to the royal person. By this warrant, the king, with the consent of his privy council, deputed to three physicians and two surgeons the regulation of his diet, and the administration of such medicines and remedies as might be sufficient for his cure, without any allusion to the previous existence or permanency of the office which they were authorized for a time to fill, or to a remuneration for their services.—Life of Linacre.

Miss Garrett (afterwards Mrs. Anderson) licensed at Apothecaries' Hall, London, to practise medicine, 28 Sept. 1863.

At a meeting of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, 3 May, 1869, it was resolved that the "Royal Society of Medicine" (including the various sections) be founded; the resolution was affirmed 22 Feb. 1870, but in 1871 the project dropped.

School of Medicine for Women in London (council, profs. Burdon-Sanderson and Huxley, Mrs. Garrett Anderson, M.D., Mrs. Blackwell, M.D., and others), opened Oct. 1874.

Registration of medical women, permitted by Medical act, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 41, 11 Aug. 1876.

Physic Gardens. The first cultivated in England was by John Gerard, surgeon of London, in 1567; that at Oxford was endowed by the earl of Danby, in 1632; that at Cambridge was commenced about the middle of the last century, and that at Chelsea, originated by sir Hans Sloane, was given to the Apothecaries' Company in 1721: this last act was very much admired by the illustrious Linnaeus.

Physiocal Society, established 14 Feb. 1874; Dr. J. H. Gladstone first president.

Physicians, ROYAL COLLEGE OF, of London (of England since 1858), was projected by Dr. Linacre, physician to Henry VIII., who, through his interest with cardinal Wolsey, obtained letters-patent, constituting a corporate body of physicians in London, with peculiar privileges, 23 Sept. 1518. Linacre was elected the first president of the college. Dr. W. Harvey was a great benefactor to this institution, 1653. He built a library and public hall, which he granted forever to the college, with his books and instruments. The college was afterwards held in a building in Warwick lane, erected by sir C. Wren, where it continued till 1825, when the present elegant stone edifice in Trafalgar square was erected from designs by sir R. Smirke.—The College of Physicians, Dublin, was founded by charter of Charles II., 1667, and was reincorporated in 1692. The Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, 29 Nov. 1691.

Physica, see under Philosophy.

Physiognomy, a science which affirms that the dispositions of mankind may be discovered from the features of the face. The origin of the term is referred to Aristotle; and Cicero was attached to the science. It became a fashionable study from the beginning of the sixteenth century; and in the last century, the essays of Le Cat and Permetty led to the modern system. Lavater's researches in the pursuit arose from his having been struck with the singular countenance of a soldier who passed under a window at which he and Zimmerman were standing; his "Fragment" on this subject appeared in 1776.

Physiology is that part of physics which treats of the inner constitution of animals and plants, and the several functions and operations of all their organs and tissues. The works of Muller, Milne-Edwards, Huxley, and Carpenter are much celebrated, and Todd's "Cyclopædia of Physiology" (1836-59) is a library in itself. Physiological Society, in London, founded by Dr. Burdon-Sanderson and others, early in 1876; see Royal Institution.

Pianetto, a small upright piano introduced by Bood of Paris in 1857.

Pianoforte.* The invention is attributed to Cristo-

* The nucleus of the instrument was a little box over which were stretched strings such was the cithole, the dulcimer, and the psaltery. The clavichord had keys: the clavichord (about 1500) had dampers, successive improvements were the virginals (on which queen Elizabeth played), the spinet (about 1500), and the harpsichord (with two rows of keys), said to have been used in the fifteenth century for which Bach and Handel composed in the seventeenth century. A collection of harp chords (one dated 1556) is in the South Kensington

Galli (or Cristofori), an Italian, J. C. Schröter, a German, and Maria, a Frenchman, early in the eighteenth century. The strings are struck by small hammers, and not by quills as in harpsichords. Schröter is said to have presented a model of his invention to the court of Saxony in 1717, and G. Silbermann manufactured pianofortes with considerable success in 1772. Pianofortes were made in London by M. Zumpe, a German, 1768, and have been since greatly improved by Clementi, Broadwood, Collard, Kirkman, Erard, Pleyel, Chickering & Sons of Boston, Mass., Steinway & Co. of New York, and others.

Upright pianos, first made in this country, were suggested by Isaac Hawkins in 1800, and Thomas Loud in 1802. William Southwell patented "cabinet pianos" in 1807; superadded, from about 1840, by the cottage, piccolo, and other pianos. A keyed instrument at Modena was named "piano e forte," 1808.

A "stone pianoforte," formed of a series of flints and other stones of various sizes, collected in France and arranged by M. Baudre, was played on by him at the Royal Institution, on 16 March, 1846.

(See Grove's "Dictionary of Music," article "Pianoforte.")

Picardy (N. France) was conquered by the English in 1346, and by the duke of Burgundy in 1417, to whom it was ceded by the treaty of Arras, 21 Sept. 1483, and annexed to France by Louis XI., 1463.

Piccadilly, a fine street, W. London. The name, of uncertain origin, was Pickadilla and Pigudello, about 1660, when a house of entertainment existed near the Haymarket, termed Pickadilly hall, after which buildings were gradually extended westwards.

Piccolo, a small piano introduced by Robert Wornum in 1829.

Picentina, a Sabine tribe, subdued by the Romans, and their capital, Asculum, taken, 268 a.c. They began the Social war in 90, and were conquered in 89 B.C.

Pictegru's Conspiracy, see Georges, etc.

Picketing, see Trials, Aug. 1867.

R. Reed and four other cabinet-makers imprisoned for picketing, May, 1878

Picquet, a game with cards, invented, it is said, by Jochermin for the amusement of Charles VI. of France, then in feeble health, 1390.—Métrogy.

Picts (from Picti, painted), Scythians, who landed in Scotland much about the time that the Scots began to seize upon the Hebrides, or Western Isles (Hebudes). They afterwards lived as two distinct nations—the Scots in the highlands and isles, and the Picts in that part now called the lowlands. Between 838 and 842, the Scots under Kenneth II. totally subdued the Picts, and seized all their kingdom. Their incursions in England led to the Saxon invasion; see Roman Wall.

Pictures, see Painting.

Piedmont (Latin, Pedemontium, foot of the mountain), a region in N. Italy, formerly the seat of government of the kingdom of Sardinia (which see, and Savoy).

Pie-poudre Court (the Court of Dusty-foot), whose jurisdiction was established for cases arising at fairs and markets, to do justice to the buyer and seller immediately upon the spot. By stat. 17 Edw. IV., it had cognizance of all disputes in the precincts of the market to which it might belong, 1477.

Pier and Harbor Act, to facilitate the formation, management, and maintenance of piers and harbors in Great Britain and Ireland, was passed in 1862.

Pietists, a Lutheran sect, instituted in Leipsic by Philip James Spener, a professor of theology, about 1686, with the view of reforming the popular religion. He established "colleges of Pietists," with preachers resembling those of the Society of Friends and the Methodists in Britain, about 1760. A body resembling the Pietists, Museum. A double pianoforte (with two keyboards reversed), giving remarkable effects (patented by M. M. Mengoni), played on at Covent Garden theatre, 21 Oct. 1878.

named Chasidim, arose among the Jews in the Ukraine, and spread through Poland and European Turkey.

Pietro Barsanti Club, see Italy, 1878.

Piezameter (Greek, πιεζω, I compress), an apparatus for measuring the compressibility of liquids, invented by Ersted (died 1851); improved by Despretz and Saigey.

Pigeons were employed as carriers by the ancients. Hirtius and Brutus corresponded by means of pigeons at the siege of Modena. The pigeons of Aleppo served as couriers at Alexandretta and Bagdad. Thirty-two pigeons liberated from London at 7 o'clock in the morning, 22 Nov. 1819; at noon one of them arrived at Antwerp; a quarter of an hour afterwards a second arrived; the remainder on the following day.—Phillips. At a pigeon race, 25 July, 1872, from Spalding to London, the speed allowed was 90 seconds a mile; see Post-office, 1870.

National Peristeronic Society (originating from the Columbarian Society, founded in 1750), has annual shows.

Pilgrim Fathers, the name given in North America to a party of 74 English Puritans and 28 women, members of John Robinson's church, who sailed in the Mayflower from Leyden to North America, and landed on Plymouth Rock, where they founded a colony, 25 Dec. 1620.

Pilgrimage of Grace, a name assumed by religious insurgents in the north of England, who opposed the dissolution of the monasteries. The movement, which commenced in Lincolnshire in Sept. 1536, was suppressed in Oct., but soon after revived in Yorkshire; and an expedition bearing the foregoing name, having banners on which were depicted the five wounds of Christ, was headed by Aske and other gentlemen, and joined by priests and 40,000 men of York, Durham, Lancaster, and other counties. They took Hull and York, with smaller towns. The duke of Norfolk marched against them, and by making terms dispersed them. Early in 1537 they again took arms, but were promptly suppressed, and the leaders, several abbots, and many others were executed.

Pilgrimages began with the pilgrimage of the empress Helena to Jerusalem, 326. They became very frequent at the close of the tenth century. Robert II. of France made several pilgrimages; among others one to Rome about the year 1016, perhaps in 1020, when he refused the imperial dignity and the kingdom of Italy. The pilgrimage to Canterbury is described by Chaucer in his "Canterbury Tales" about 1383. The pilgrimage of Mahometans to Mecca, the birthplace of the prophet, is commanded in the Koran. Pilgrimages to shrines of the Virgin Mary in France revived in 1873, and since, in consequence of miracles alleged to have taken place at La Salette in 1846 and at Lourdes, 11 Feb. 1858; those of La Salette discredited by Pope Leo X., 1879; see Sacred Heart.

100 American pilgrims received by the pope. . . . 9 June, 1874
About 100 agricultural laborers (locked out for being unionists) traversed England as pilgrims, receiving hospitality and money; beginning . . . 30 June et seq. . .
English Roman Catholic pilgrimage to shrine of St. Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury, at Pontigny. . . Sept. . .
English pilgrimage to Lourdes directed by the "Catholic Union of Great Britain;" start proposed; given up. Aug. 1880
(See Boulogne.)

"Pilgrim's Progress FROM THIS WORLD TO THAT WHICH IS TO COME." written by John Bunyan, in Bedford jail, where he was imprisoned twelve years, 1650-72. The first part was published in 1678. A Hebrew version appeared in 1851; see Bedford.

Pillar Saints, see Monachism.

Pillory, a scaffold for persons to stand on, to render them publicly infamous. This punishment was awarded against persons convicted of forgery, perjury, libelling, etc. In some cases the head was put through a hole, the hands through two others, the nose slit, the face branded with one or more letters, and one or both ears were cut off. There is a statute of the pillory, 41 Hen. III., 1256. Many persons died in the pillory by being struck with stones by the mob, and pelted with rotten eggs and putrid offal. It was abolished as a punishment except for perjury, 1815, and totally abolished in 1837. The last who suffered at the Old Bailey was Peter James Bossy, for perjury, 24 June, 1830.

Pilnitz (near Dresden, Saxony). The convention of Pilnitz took place between the emperor Leopold and the king of Prussia, 20 July, 1791. On 27 Aug. the treaty of Pilnitz, or, as some style it, the Partition treaty, was finally agreed upon at Pavia by the courts in concert. It was to the effect "that the emperor should retake all that Louis XIV. had conquered in the Austrian Netherlands, and, uniting these provinces to the Netherlands, give them to his serene highness the elector palatine, to be added to the palatinate; Bavaria to be added to the Austrian possessions," etc.

Pilot. The act relating to pilots, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 129 (1853), with other acts, is embodied in the Merchant Shipping act; see Trinity House.

Pilpay, see Fables.

Pinchbeck, an alloy of 25 per cent. of zinc and 75 copper, used for watch-cases, etc., named after Mr. Christopher Pinchbeck, a toy-seller in Cockburn street, London, who died March, 1873.

Pine-trees. The stone pine (Pinus Pinea), brought to these countries before 1518. The cluster pine (Pinus Pinaster), brought from the south of Europe before 1596. The Weymouth pine (Pinus Strobus), from North America, 1705. Frankincense pine (Pinus Taeda), from North America, before 1713. There are other varieties.

Pinkie (near Edinburgh), where the English under the earl of Hertford, protector, totally defeated the Scots under the regent Arran, 10 Sept. 1547. There fell less than 200 of the English, but above 10,000 of the Scots. Above 1500 were taken prisoners.

Pins are mentioned in a statute of 1483. Brass pins were brought from France in 1540, and first used in England, it is said, by Catherine Howard, queen of Henry VIII. Pins were made in England in 1543.—Stow. They were first manufactured by machinery in England in 1824, under a patent of Lemuel Wellman Wright, of the United States.

Piombino, a principality, Italy, previously ruled by the Apiani family, was acquired by the Spaniards, 1589. It was ceded to France, 1801, and given by Napoleon to his sister Elise, wife of prince Bacciocchi, who held it from 1805 to 1815, when it was restored to the Buoncampagni family, subject to Tuscany. It became part of the kingdom of Italy, 1860.

Piracy was severely suppressed by the Romans. Pompey destroyed the Cilician pirates, 67 B.C.; see Buccaneers. Many acts of parliament have been passed for the suppression of piracy; the latest in 1837.

Piræus, the port of Athens, was united to the city by two long walls, one erected by Themistocles and the other by Pericles, 456 B.C., which were destroyed by Alexander, 404 B.C. It was fortified by Conon, 393 B.C. The Piræus was able to contain 400 Greek vessels. It was occupied by the French during the Russian war in 1854.

Pirmasens (Bavaria). Here Moreau and the French were defeated by the duke of Brunswick and the Prussians, 14 Sept. 1793.

Pisa, an ancient city in Tuscany, was founded about six centuries before Christ, and was favored by the early Roman emperors as a flourishing republic. The citizens took an active part in the Italian wars of the middle ages, but became subject to Florence, after a long siege, 1405-6. In 1494 Pisa became independent under the protection of Charles VIII. of France, but was retaken by the Florentines in 1509. The university was founded in 1343, and revived by the Medici in 1472 and 1542. The rival popes, Benedict XIII. and Gregory XII., were deposed at a council held at Pisa in 1409, and Alexander V. elected in their room. The Campanile or leaning tower was built about 1154,* and the Campo Santo about the same time.

Pisciculture, see Fisheries.

Pistols, the smallest fire-arms, said to have been invented at Pistoia in Italy; were first used by the cavalry of England about 1544. Of late years they have been made with a revolving cylindrical breech, in which are formed several chambers for receiving cartridges, and bringing them in succession into a line with the barrel ready for firing. The earliest model of this kind of arm is to be found in the museum of the United Service Institution, and is supposed to date from the reign of Charles I. An eight-chambered matchlock revolver of the sixteenth century is placed in the Royal Artillery Museum, Woolwich. The manufacture of pistols by machinery was first introduced into England from the United States, in the year 1853, by col. Colt, who invented the Colt revolving pistol, 1851. This system of manufacture induced the British government to establish the Enfield armory, in 1855; see Fire-arms.

Pitcairn's Island, in the Pacific ocean, said to have been discovered by Pitcairn in 1768, seen by Cook in 1773, and since colonized by ten mutineers from the ship Bounty, captain Bligh, in 1789; see Bounty.

The mutineers remained unknown to England until discovered accidentally in 1814. A ship nearing the island was hailed by a swarthy youth in the English language, when it appeared that the mutineers, soon after settling there, had married some black women from a neighboring island, and had become a well-conducted community under the care of Adams, the principal mutineer. He died in 1829, when Nobbs, an Englishman, who arrived a few years before, became chief. In Aug. 1852 admiral Moresby spent a few days on the island. By his means Nobbs was sent to England and obtained ordination. As their numbers increased, the island proved incapable of their support. The English government removed them, with all their property, in the ship Morayshire, on 3 May, 1856, and landed them, after a boisterous passage, on Norfolk Island, prepared previously for their reception, 8 June. The government stocked Norfolk Island with 2000 sheep, 450 head of cattle, and twenty horses, and gave them stores to last twelve months; their numbers were 96 males and 102 females.

The island, visited by H. M. S. Peterel, was found to be prosperous, Dec. 1875; 86 inhabitants, 2 March, 1878; 93, 15 Aug. 1879.

Pitt Administrations.† The first administration was formed on the dismissal of the coalition ministry (which see) 18 Dec. 1783, and terminated by resignation in 1801. The second was formed 12 May, 1804; and terminated (after various changes) by Mr. Pitt's death, 23 Jan. 1806. A public funeral was decreed to him, and 40,000*l.* to pay his debts.

ADMINISTRATION OF 1783.

William Pitt, first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer.

Earl Gower, lord president.

Duke of Rutland, privy seal.

Marquess of Carmarthen, and earl Temple (immediately succeeded by lord Sydney), secretaries.

Lord Thurlow, lord chancellor.

Viscount Howe, admiralty.

Duke of Richmond, ordnance.

William Wyndham Granville, Henry Dundas, etc.

[Mr. Pitt continued minister until 1801. Many changes occurred in the ministry in the long period of seventeen years.]

* The Campanile was erected to contain bells, and stands in a square close to the cathedral. It is built entirely of white marble, and is a cylinder of eight stories, each adorned with a round of columns, rising one above another. It inclines so far on one side from the perpendicular, that in dropping a plummet from the top, which is 188 feet in height, it falls sixteen feet from the base. Some thought this was done purposely by the architect: others attributed it to an accidental subsidence of the foundation. From this tower Galileo made his observation on gravitation (about 1636).

† William Pitt, second son of the great earl of Chatham, was born 28 March, 1759; became M. P. 23 Jan. 1782; moved for a reform in parliament, 7 May, 1782; became chancellor of the exchequer, July, 1782; died 23 Jan. 1806.

ADMINISTRATION OF 1804.

William Pitt, first lord of the treasury.

Lord Eldon, lord chancellor.

Duke of Portland, succeeded by lord Sidmouth (late Mr. Adington), lord president.

Earl of Westmoreland, lord privy seal.

Lord Hawkesbury, lord Harrowby (succeeded by lord Mulgrave), and earl Camden (succeeded by viscount Castlereagh), home, foreign, and colonial secretaries.

Viscount Melville (succeeded by lord Barham), admiralty.

Duke of Montrose, Mr Dundas, etc.

Pittsburg, see Fort Duquesne.

Pittsburg Landing (near Corinth, Tenn.). On Sunday, 6 April, 1862, a great battle was fought between the American national troops under Grant and Prentiss, and the confederates under Albert Sydney Johnston and Beauregard. The latter began the attack and were successful on the first day, but lost their able general Johnston. The national forces were reinforced by gen. Buell the next day, and renewed the attack, the confederates maintained a stout resistance, but were worsted, and soon after retired in good order to Corinth. This engagement is also named the battle of Shiloh.

Pius IV., CREED OF, see Confessions.

Placentia (now Piacenza), N. Italy, founded by the Romans about 220 B.C. It suffered in all the convulsions attending the fall of the empire, and the wars of the middle ages. In 1254 it fell under the rule of the family of the Scotti. In 1302 Alberto Scottio was overcome, and Placentia was united to Milan, then ruled by the Visconti. On their extinction in 1447, Placentia revolted, but was taken by Sforza duke of Milan, and treated very cruelly. In 1513 it was given to pope Leo X. In 1545, Paul III. gave it with Parma as a duchy to his son Peter Louis Farnese. The French and Spaniards were defeated by the Austrians and Sardinians near Placentia, 16 June, 1746; see Parma.

Plague. The plagues of Egypt (1491 B.C.) are described in Exod. ix., etc. The first recorded general plague in all parts of the world occurred 767 B.C.—Petartius. At Carthage a plague was so terrible that people sacrificed their children to appease the gods, 584 B.C.—Baronius. At Rome a desolating plague prevailed, 453 B.C. The devastating plague at Athens, which spread into Egypt and Ethiopia, 430 B.C., is admirably described by Thucydides. Another which raged in the Greek islands, Egypt, and Syria, destroyed 2000 persons every day, 187 B.C.—Pliny. See Cattle.

At Rome, a most awful plague; 10,000 persons perished daily, A. D. 80.

Again ravaged the Roman empire, 167, 169, 189.

Another in the Roman empire. For some time 5000 persons died daily at Rome, many towns entirely depopulated, 250–265.

In Britain, a plague swept away such multitudes that the living were scarcely sufficient to bury the dead, 430.

A long-continued dreadful one began in Europe in 558, extended all over Asia and Africa.

At Constantinople, when 200,000 of its inhabitants perished, and in Calabria, Sicily, and Greece, 746–749.

In London, 962.

At Chichester, in England, an epidemical disease carried off 34,000 persons, 772.—Will. Malm.

In Scotland 40,000 persons perished, 964.

In London, great mortality, 1094; and Ireland, 1095.

Again, in London; it extended to cattle, fowls, and other domestic animals, 1111.—Holinshed.

In Ireland; after Christmas this year, Henry II. was forced to quit the country, 1172.

Again, in Ireland, when a prodigious number perished, 1204.

The "Black Death" in Italy, 1340.

A plague raged throughout Europe, causing extensive mortality. Britain and Ireland suffered grievously. In London alone 200 persons were buried daily in the Charterhouse yard, 1348–9. (That at Florence described by Boccaccio.)

In London and Paris a dreadful mortality prevailed in 1361–2, 1367, 1369, and in Ireland in 1370.

A great pestilence in Ireland, called the Fourth, destroyed a great number of the people, 1383.

30,000 persons perished of a dreadful pestilence in London, 1407.

Again, in Ireland, superinduced by a famine; great numbers died, 1466; and Dublin was wasted by a plague, 1470.

An awful pestilence at Oxford, 1471; and throughout England, a plague which destroyed more people than the continual wars for the fifteen preceding years, 1478.—Rapin; Salmon. The Sudor Anglicus, or sweating sickness, very fatal in London, 1485.—DeLaune.

The plague in London so dreadful that Henry VII. and his court removed to Calais, 1493-1500.—Stow.

The sweating sickness (mortal in three hours) in London, 1506; and in 1517. In most of the capital towns in England half the inhabitants died, and Oxford was depopulated, 9 Henry VIII.—Stow.

Limerick was visited by a plague, when many thousands perished, 1522.

The sweating sickness again in England, 1528; and in North Germany in 1529; and for the fifth time in England, in 1531. 30,578 persons perished of the plague in London alone, 1603-4. It was also fatal in Ireland.

200,000 perished of a pestilence at Constantinople in 1611. In London a great mortality prevailed, and 35,417 persons perished, 1625.

In France a general mortality; at Lyons, 60,000 persons died, 1632.

The plague brought from Sardinia to Naples (being introduced by a transport with soldiers on board), raged with such violence as to carry off 400,000 of the inhabitants in six months, 1656.

THE GREAT PLAGUE OF LONDON began Dec. 1664, which carried off 68,596 persons; some say 100,000. Fires were kept up night and day to purify the air for three days; and it was thought the infection was not totally destroyed till the great conflagration of Sept. 1666.

[Graphically described by De Foo in his partially imaginative "History of the Plague."]

60,000 persons perished of the plague at Marseilles and neighborhood, brought in ship from the Levant, 1720.

One of the most awful plagues that ever raged, prevailed in Syria, 1760.—Abbé Mariti.

In Persia, a fatal pestilence, which carried off 80,000 of the inhabitants of Bassora, 1773.

In Egypt, about 800,000 persons died of plague, 1792.

In Barbary, 3000 died daily; and at Fez 247,000 perished, 1799; in the east, 1800, 1840, 1873; many deaths in Bagdad, etc., April-May, 1876.

In Spain and at Gibraltar immense numbers were carried off by a pestilential disease in 1804 and 1805.

Again at Gibraltar, an epidemic fever much resembling the plague caused great mortality, 1828.

The Asiatic cholera (see Cholera) made its first appearance in England at Sunderland, 26 Oct. 1831; in Scotland, at Haddington, 23 Dec. same year; and in Ireland, at Belfast, 14 March, 1832.

The cholera again visited England, etc., 1845 and 1849; see Cholera.

The cholera raged at Smyrna and Constantinople, and appeared in Paris, Marseilles, Naples, July-Dec. 1865.

A great cattle-plague (which see) in England, resembling typhus, near London, begins June, 1865.

A new, and hitherto an incurable disease, named black death, on account of purple blotches coming out on the skin, appeared in Dublin; many persons of all ranks died a few hours after the seizure, March et seq. 1866.

Plague in Astracan, Jan.-April, 1879.

Plane. A true plane, so important in machinery, has been most successfully obtained by sir Joseph Whitworth. Fine specimens were exhibited at the Royal Institution in 1873.

Planetarium. David Rittenhouse, the eminent mechanic and mathematician, of Philadelphia, constructed a planetarium in 1768 which has elicited the highest praise. It was superior to anything that had been previously constructed, and was purchased by the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, where it remains. Upon it is this inscription: "Invented by David Rittenhouse, A.D. 1768; repaired and extended by Henry Voight, 1806; both of Philadelphia." It is said that when Cornwallis took possession of Princeton, after Washington left it on the morning of 3 Jan. 1777, he intended to carry off this planetarium and send it as a trophy to England, but the Americans kept him too busy to allow him to plunder; see ONKERY.

Planets. Jupiter was known as a planet to the Chinese and the Chaldeans, and inserted in a chart of the heavens made about 600 B.C., and in which 1460 stars are accurately described; this chart is said to be in the national library at Paris. The four satellites of Jupiter discovered by Galileo, 7 Jan. 1610; see Mars, Saturn. We now know 9 primary planets, termed major—Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Vulcan (doubtful); and 220 secondary or minor, situated between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. The numerical order differs in the lists of English, German, and French astronomers. In the French and German lists, Aglaua to Pandora are numbered 47 to 55; Melete is 56.

Uranus, formerly called Georgium Sidus and Herschel; discovered by W. Herschel (see Georgium Sidus), Neptune, discovered by Galle (in consequence of the calculations of Le Verrier and Adams (see Neptune), 23 Sept. 1846

13 March, 1781

Fulcan (between Mercury and the Sun), said to have been discovered by M. Lescaubault, a physician (not seen since), 26 March, 1859, said to have been seen by Watson during the solar eclipse (doubted by Peters),

29, 30 July, 1878

* Atropos said to have been discovered by R. Luther, 14 Apr. 1, 1869. Not observed since.

Planimeter, a machine for measuring the area of any figure by the passage of a tracer round about its perimeter. Amder's planimeter (in use for several years) was described at the British Association meeting at Brighton, Aug. 1872.

Planing-machine. One for wood was constructed by Bramah, about 1802, and one for iron by Joseph Clement in 1825.

Plantagenet,† House of, to which belonged fourteen English kings, from Henry II., 1154, to Richard III., killed at the battle of Bosworth, 1485; see England, Kings.

Plantations, see Trade.

Plassey, in Bengal, India, the site of a battle fought between the British under Clive, and the Hindoos under Surajah Dowlah, 23 June, 1757. The nabob, although at the head of about 68,000 men, was vanquished by 1000 British and about 2000 sepoy. The victory laid the foundation of our empire of India; see India.

Plaster of Paris. Gypsum, sulphate of lime, used for moulds, statuary, etc., first found at Montmartre, near Paris, whence its name. The method of taking likenesses by its use was first discovered by Andrea del Verrochio, about 1466.

Plata, La, see Argentine Republic.

Platæa (Bœotia, N. Greece), site of the battle between Mardonius, commander of the army of Xerxes of Persia, and Pausanias, commander of the Lacedæmonians and Athenians, 22 Sept. 479 B.C.; the same day as the battle of Mycale. Of 300,000 Persians, scarce 3000 escaped with their lives. The Grecian army, about 110,000, lost but few men. The Greeks obtained immense plunder, and were henceforth delivered from the fear of Persian invasions. Platæa, as an ally of Athens, was destroyed by the Thebans, 372, and rebuilt by Philip II. after his victory at Chæronea, 338.

† Fulko Martel, earl of Anjou, having contrived the death of his nephew, the earl of Brittany, in order to succeed to the earldom, his confessor sent him, in atonement for the murder, to Jerusalem, attended by only two servants, one of whom was to lead him by a halter to the Holy Sepulchre, the other to strip and whip him there, like a common malefactor. Broom, in French genet, in Latin genista, being the only tough, plant shrub in Palestine, the noble criminal was smartly scourged with it, and from this instrument of his chastisement he was called Planta-genista, or Plantagenet; other accounts are given.—Skinner and Mézeray.

Plate. In England, plate, with the exception of spoons, was prohibited in public-houses by statute 8 Will. III. (1696). The celebrated Plate act passed in May, 1756. This act was repealed in 1780. The act laying a stamp duty upon plate passed in 1784; see Goldsmit's Company. By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96 (1854), gold wares were allowed to be manufactured at a lower standard, but a later act excepted marriage rings.—The art of covering baser metals with a thin plate of silver, either for use or for ornament (PLATING), said to have been invented by a Birmingham spur-maker, who began with making the branches of a pair of spurs hollow, and filling the hollow with a slender rod of steel. He continued to make the hollow larger and the iron thicker, till at last he merely coated the iron spur with silver; see Electrotype.

Mr. Wilfred Joseph Cripps's "Old English Plate," a valuable work, containing the researches of Mr. O. Morgan, published 1878. His "Old French Plate," 1880.
Duty on silver plate to be reduced gradually till abolished, from 1 June, 1881.

Platinum, the heaviest of all the metals, except iridium. The name originated with the Spaniards on account of its silvery color; Plata, signifying silver. It was found in the auriferous sand of the river Pinto, in South America, and was unknown in Europe until 1741, when don Antonio Ulloa announced its existence in the narrative of his voyage to Peru.—Greig. In its ore have been found the metals palladium, rhodium, osmium, iridium, and ruthenium (which see). In 1859, M. H. Ste.-Claire Deville made known a new method of obtaining platinum from its ore, in great abundance and purity; and at the international exhibition of 1862 was shown a mass worth 3840*l.*, weighing 266½ lbs., of a metal hitherto considered infusible, obtained by his process, employing the oxy-hydrogen flame; see Philosophical Lamp. Dodo's process for coating iron with platinum to prevent rust, shown at Johnson & Matthey's, 11 Jan. 1879.

Platonic Philosophy, the most popular of all systems (see Philosophy). Plato's dialogues have been termed "Philosophy backed by example." He was a disciple of Socrates, 409 B.C., and died 347. The leading feature of his mind was comprehensiveness.

Platonic Year, the period of time which the equinoxes take to finish their revolution, at the end of which the stars and constellations have the same place with regard to the equinoxes that they had at first. Tycho Brahe says that this year or period requires 25,816 common years to complete it; Ricciolus computes it at 25,920, and Cassini at 24,900; at the end of which time some imagined that there would be a total and natural renovation of the whole creation.

Plattsburg. A British expedition against this place, a town of New York, on Lake Champlain, was designed under Gen. Sir George Prevost, but was abandoned after the land and naval force of England had suffered a defeat in an engagement with the Americans, 11 Sept. 1814, when the British squadron in Lake Champlain was captured. The loss of the British land force in the action was 1500 men; that of the Americans 102; see United States.

Playgrounds. In 1858 a society was established by the earl of Shaftesbury and other benevolent persons to provide playgrounds for the recreation of adults and the children of the humble classes. Ground was liberally offered by the government, and by the marquess of Westminster and others; and in 1859 an act of parliament was passed to facilitate grants of land for this purpose, for which part of Smithfield was to be reserved. The scheme was not successful.

Plays, see Drama and Theatres.

Pleadings. Clothaire held a kind of movable parliament called placita, whence came the word pleas, A.D. 616.—Hennault. In the early courts of judicature in England, pleadings were made in the Saxon language in 786; and in Norman-French from the period of the Conquest in 1066 until 1362. Pleadings were ordered to be in English by 36 Edward III. 1362, and Cromwell extended the rule to all legal proceedings, 1650. In English law the proceedings are the mutual statements of the plaintiff's cause of action and the defendant's ground of defence.

Plebeians, plebes, the citizens of Rome, as distinguished from the patricians; see Rome, 494-366 B.C.

Plebiscitum, a term given to a law passed by the comitia tributa, an assembly of the Roman people in their tribes, first established in 491 B.C. The term has been recently revived in France and Italy, and applied to Universal Suffrage (which see).

Plevna (Bulgaria), 27 miles N.N.W. of Nicopolis, near the river Vid; the site of very fierce conflicts during the Russo-Turkish war, 1877.

Occupied by the Russians 6 July, but retaken by Osman Pacha 18 July, and held by him after severe combats with Schildner-Schuldner, 19, 20 July; with Krudener, 29-31 July, 1877

[The Russians lost about 2000 killed, 4000 wounded. The Russian attack was considered rash, like that at Balaklava, and a disastrous check.]
Osman Pacha defeated in desperate sortie, about 30 Aug. "
Gen. Scobelev gained a great advantage by capturing Lovatz (or Lofcha) 3 Sept. " Siege began 7 Sept., with an artillery duel lasting to 10 Sept. "
Fruitless sanguinary conflicts. 11, 12 Sept. " Chefket Pacha carried in reinforcements to Plevna, about 22 Sept. " Todeben takes command of the staff. 28 Sept. "
Plevna completely invested; reported. 8 Nov. "
Russian attacks repulsed. 12, 15 Nov. "
Osman Pacha, reduced by want of supplies, desperately endeavors to break out at night, 9 Dec.; surrounded and defeated with great slaughter; surrenders unconditionally (30,000 prisoners, 128 officers, 100 guns), 10 Dec. "

Plots, see Conspiracies and Rebellions.

Plough. "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together" (Deut. xxii. 10) (1451 B.C.). The Roman plough is minutely described by Virgil, about 81 B.C. Engines to plough grounds, whether inland or upland, were patented by David Ramsay and Thomas Wildgoose, in 1618; and many improvements in ploughs have been patented since. The application of steam-power to ploughing was patented by John Upton in 1837, and by others since, more especially by Lord Willoughby D'Eresby, the marquess of Tweeddale, and the earl of Cathness; see Steam-plough.

International trial of ploughs, etc., at Haarlem; prizes won by English makers (Howard, Ransomes, etc.), 17-19 Sept. 1879.

Plough Monday, in January, the first Monday after the Epiphany. It received the appellation from its having been fixed upon by our forefathers as the day upon which they returned to the duties of agriculture after enjoying the festivities of Christmas.—Ishe. On Plough Monday, too, the ploughmen of the north country used to draw a plough from door to door and beg plough-money to drink.—Bailey.

Plum. We have two native plums; our finer kinds came from Italy and Flanders about 1522. The Diospyros Lotus, the date plum, was brought from Barbary before 1596; the Pishamin plum, Diospyros Virginiana, from America before 1629. Formerly damsons, apricots, and peaches went by this name, as raisins do to this day.

Plumbago, see Graphite.

Pluralities. Clergymen have been restrained from holding more than one benefice by several statutes; the first being 21 Henry VIII. 1529. In 1838 an act was passed prohibiting the holding of more than two benefices except they were at a distance less than ten miles; and the law on this subject was still further amended in 1850 and 1855, provisions being made for the amalgamation of neighboring benefices.

Plural Number, see Wz.

Plus (+) and Minus (-). Prof. De Morgan attributes these signs to either Christopher Rudolf, who published a book on algebra about 1522, or Michael Stifelius, about 1544.

Plymouth, a fortified seaport in Devonshire, originally Sutton, was incorporated as Plymouth in 1439. It was in 1588 the rendezvous of the English fleet of 120 sail under Howard, Drake, etc., which pursued the Spanish armada. The fine hotel and assembly rooms were burned 6 Jan. 1863; loss about 50,000*l.*; see Breakwater and Dockyards. The National Association for Social Science met here, Sept. 1872.

The new guildhall was opened by the prince of Wales, 13 Aug. 1874
New wing to British female orphan asylum (established about 1834), founded by the duke of Edinburgh, 7 Oct. "
Art and industrial exhibition opened. 23 May, 1881

Plymouth (Mass.), UNITED STATES.

Landing of the Pilgrims. (O.S.) 11 Dec. 1620
Corner-stone of national monument to the Pilgrims, laid. 1 Aug. 1859

Plymouth Brethren, a body of Christians calling themselves "the Brethren," first appeared at Plymouth about 1830. In 1851 they had 132 places of worship in England and Wales. They object to national churches as too latitudinarian, and to other dissenters as too sectarian. They receive into communion all who confess Christ, and own the Holy Ghost as his vicar. Their doctrines agree with those of most evangelical Protestant churches, but they recognize no order of ministers. Mr. Darby, regarded as their founder, afterwards separated from them with some adherents.

Pneumatic Despatch Company, to convey letters and parcels through tubes by means of atmospheric pressure and a vacuum. The company's act was passed 13 Aug. 1859, and tubes were laid down in Threadneedle street on 12 Sept. 1860, and on 20 Aug. 1861, successful experiments were performed at Battersea. In 1862 tubes were laid down from the Euston railway-station to the N.W. post-office in Camden town, and on 21 Feb. 1863, the conveyance of the mail-bags began. In Oct. 1865, tubes had been laid down between Euston railway and Holborn; and on 7 Nov. several persons travelled in them. Engineer, Mr. Rammell. The company stopped through insufficient support, 1876. A pneumatic tube by Siemens, employed to transmit telegraphic messages, began to be used about Jan. 1871.

Pneumatic Loom, in which compressed air is the motive power, invented by Mr. Harrison, was exhibited in London in Dec. 1864. A company was formed to bring it into general use.

Pneumatics, the science which treats of the mechanical properties of air and gases; see Air and Atmospheric Railways.

Podestà (from potestas, power), an Italian governor, afterwards a judge; one with supreme authority was appointed at Milan by the emperor Frederick I., when he took the city in 1158.

Podoll (Bohemia), the site of a severe conflict between the Austrians and a part of the army of prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, 26 June, 1866. The Prussians had the advantage.

Podoscaphæ, see Cunoe.

Poet-laureate. Selden could not trace the precise origin of this office.

Warton, in his "History of English Poetry," states that in the reign of Henry III. there was a Versificator Regis, to whom an annual stipend was first paid of one hundred shillings.

Chaucer, on his return from abroad, assumed the title of poet laureate; and in the twelfth year of Richard II., 1389, he obtained a grant of an annual allowance of wine.

In the reign of Edward IV., John Kay was laureate; Andrew Bernard was laureate, temp. Henry VII.; and John Skelton, temp. Henry VIII.

James I. in 1615, granted to his laureate a yearly pension of 100 marks; and in 1630 this stipend was augmented by letters-patent of Charles I. to 100*l.* per annum, with an additional grant of one tierce of Canary Spanish wine to be taken out of the king's store of wine yearly. We believe that on Southey's appointment the tierce of Canary wine was commuted for 27*l.*

Laurence Eusden commenced a series of Birthday and New-year's Odes, which continued till the death of Pyc, in 1813.

On the death of Warton its abolition was recommended by Gibbon, whose elegant compliment on the occasion still more forcibly applied on Wordsworth's death, in 1850: "This is the best time for not filling up the office, when the prince is a man of virtue, and the poet just departed was a man of genius."

POETS-LAUREATE.

Edmund Spenser, died 1599.
Samuel Daniel, died 1619.
Ben Jonson, (born 1574), died 1637.
Sir William Davenant, 1637; died 1668.

William Wordsworth, 1843; died 23 April, 1850.
Alfred Tennyson (born 1809), installed 1850.

Poetry. The song of Moses on the deliverance of the Israelites, and their passage through the Red Sea, 1491 B.C. (Ex. xv.), is the most ancient poetry extant. Orpheus of Thrace is deemed the inventor of poetry (at least in the western part of the world) about 1397 B.C.; see Epics, Odes, Satire, Comedy, Tragedy, Sonnets, Ballads, Hymns, and Verses.

Poitiers (W. France), near which was fought the battle between Edward the Black Prince, and John, king of France, in which the English arms triumphed, 19 Sept. 1356. The standard of France was overthrown, many of her nobility slain, and her king was taken prisoner, and brought to London, see Tours and Vouglé.

Poisoning. A number of Roman ladies formed a conspiracy and poisoned their husbands. A female slave denounced 170 of them to Fabius Maximus, who ordered them to be publicly executed, 331 B.C. It was said that this was the first public knowledge of poisoning at Rome. Poisoning was made petty treason in England, and was punished by boiling to death (of which there are some remarkable instances), 23 Hen. VIII. 1531; see Boiling to Death. The frequency of cases of poisoning by means of arsenic, in England, caused the British legislature to pass a law rendering the sale of arsenic difficult (14 Vict. c. 18, 6 June, 1851). The sale of poison is now regulated by the Pharmacy act of 1868. The Poisoned Grain Prohibition act was passed 28 July, 1868.

A deadly poison freely administered by Italians in the seventeenth century was called aqua tofana, from the name of the woman Tofania, who made and sold it in small flat vials. She carried on this traffic for half a century, and eluded the police, but, on being taken, confessed that she had been a party in poisoning 600 people. Numerous persons were implicated by her, and many of them were publicly executed. All Italy was thrown into a ferment, and many fled, and some persons of distinction, on conviction, were strangled in prison. It appeared to have been chiefly used by married women who were tired of their husbands. Four or six drops were a fatal dose; but the effect was not sudden, and, therefore, not suspected. It was as clear as water, but the chemists have not agreed about its real composition. A proclamation of the pope described it as aquafortis distilled into arsenic, and others considered it as a solution of crystallized arsenic.

Between 1666 and 1676 the marchioness de Brinvilliers poisoned her father and two brothers and many others. She was executed 16 July, 1676.

W. Palmer was executed in 1856, and Miss M. Smith tried in 1857, for poisoning; see Trials. Catherine Wilson, a noted poisoner, was executed on 20 Oct. 1862. Edward William Pritchard, M.D., was executed at Glasgow, 28 July, 1865, for the slow murder of his wife and her mother, by antimony. Nov. 1858, 17 persons died at Bradford through eating sweetmeats in which arsenic had been mixed by mistake. Mr. Hodgson, a chemist, was tried for homicide, and acquitted. Weltmann, a bookbinder at Posen, poisoned 4 wives and 2 children, about 1859.

Christiana Edmunds, of Brighton, was convicted of murdering a child by poisoned sweetmeats; other persons barely escaped (sentence remitted on the ground of insanity), 16 Jan. 1872.

Mary Ann Cotton, imprisoned Oct. 1872, suspected of poisoning 16 persons, principally children; convicted of poisoning her child, 7 March; executed at Durham, 24 March, 1873.

(See Brave case.)

Poitou, an ancient province (W. France), part of the dowry of Eleanor, queen of Henry II. of England. It partook of the fortunes of Aquitaine.

Pola (Illyria), a very ancient city, where Augustus founded the colony Pietas Julia, which flourished during the empire. Off Pola, the Genoese fleet, under Doria, defeated the Venetians under Pisani, 5 or 6 May, 1879, with great loss.

Poland (N.E. Europe), part of ancient Sarmatia. It is said to have become a duchy under Lechus or Lesko I. 550; and a kingdom under Boleslaus, about 992. The natives belong to the great Slavonic family. The word Pole is not older than the tenth century. Population of the kingdom of Poland in 1857 was 4,789,879; in 1867, 5,705,607, in 1872, 6,528,017.

* On 22 Feb. 1846, an Austrian force under gen. Collin, which had entered Cracow on the approach of armed bands of peasantry, was attacked and driven out of the town. A provisional government was then proclaimed by the insurgents, and two days afterwards they crossed the Vistula, expecting to be joined by the peasantry of Galicia, who were solicited by the nobles and clergy to strike a blow in the cause of liberty. The Austrian government, in order to prevent this junction, excited in the peasantry a suspicion of the motives of the nobles, and offered a reward for every noble delivered up, alive or dead. A general massacre of the nobility and clergy in the circle of Tarnow followed; the insurgents from Cracow were defeated at Gdow, whence they retreated to Podgorze, a suburb of Cracow; here they were attacked by gen. Collin, and driven into Cracow on 27 Feb. The forces of the three powers then began to concentrate on Cracow; the people in the town opened negotiations with the Austrians about a surrender, and while these were going on a Russian corps entered the town without resistance, and soon afterwards the revolution was at an end.

Polar Clock. An optical apparatus invented by prof. Wheatstone (about 1849), whereby the hour of the day is found by means of the polarization of light.

Polar Regions, see Northwest Passage and South Pole.

Polarization of Light, see Optics.

Pole-star, or POLAR STAR, a star of the second magnitude, the last in the tail of the constellation called the Little Bear. As its nearness to the North Pole causes it never to set to those in the northern hemisphere, it is called the seaman's guide. Two stars in the constellation Ursa Major, or Great Bear, are called pointers to the Polar star. The discovery of the Pole-star is ascribed by the Chinese to their emperor Hong-ti, the grandson (they say) of Noah, who reigned and flourished 1970 B.C.—Univ. Hist.

Political Economy, the science which has for its object the improvement of the condition of mankind, and the promotion of civilization, wealth, and happiness. Its history in this country may be dated from the publication of Dr. Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," 1776. The works of Mill, McCulloch, and Fawcett are celebrated. A professorship of political economy was established at Oxford by Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., 1825; and at Cambridge, first by Mr. G. Pryme, in 1828; but regularly established by the university in 1863, Henry Fawcett (blind) being the first professor.

Archbishop Whately endowed a professorship at Trinity College, Dublin; Isaac Butt first professor. 1832

The Political Economy Club, London, founded in 1821. Kept the hundredth anniversary of the publication of Smith's "Wealth of Nations" 31 May, 1876

Political Offices Pensions Act, passed 9 Aug. 1869.

Political Unions were formed in England in 1831 to carry the Reform bill; the most important was that of Birmingham.

Politicians. A politician is described as a man well versed in policy, or the well regulating and governing of a state or kingdom; a wise and cunning man. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.—South. The term was first used in France about 1569. A new faction appeared, known by the name of Politicians, headed by the duc d'Alençon and the Montmorencies, and strengthened by the accession of the Huguenots in 1574. The duke was arrested and the Montmorencies sent to the Bastille.

Polka, a dance said to have been invented between 1830 and 1834 in Bohemia, and to have obtained its name in Prague in 1835. It became very popular, and was introduced into England about 1841.

Poll Act passed in Ireland by the Junto of the Pale, putting a price upon the heads of certain Irish: the earl of Desmond being then deputy, 5 Edward IV. 1465. This act long endured; see Ireland, 1465.

Pollentia (Piedmont, N. Italy), the site of a great victory of Stilicho, the imperial general, over Alaric the Goth, 29 March, 403.

Poll-tax, or CAPITATION-TAX, existed among the ancient Romans. It was first levied in England in 1380, and occasioned the rebellion of Wat Tyler (see Tyler), 1381. It was again levied in 1513. By the 18th Charles II. every subject was assessed by the head: viz., a duke, 100*l.*; a marquess, 80*l.*; a baronet, 30*l.*; a knight, 20*l.*; an esquire, 10*l.*; and every single private person, 12*d.*, 1667. This grievous impost was abolished by William III. 1689.

Pollution of Rivers, see Rivers.

Polo, the game of ball termed hockey played on horseback, became popular in England in 1872, having been introduced into India a few years previously. Games were played by lancers and life-guards at Woolwich, 16, 19 July, 1872. A polo club was formed and international contests held; at Brighton, one opened 3 Aug. 1878. The game was introduced into the United States about 1875.

Polotak (Russia). The French under marshal Oudinot were here defeated by the Russians under gen. Wittgenstein, 30 and 31 July, 1812; the next day the Russians were defeated. After several smaller actions with various results, Polotak was stormed by the Russians, and retaken Oct. 1812.

Poltowa, see Pultowa.

Polygamy, etc., was permitted among the early nations, and now by Mahometans. In Media, it was a reproach to a man to have less than seven wives. Among the Romans, Marc Antony is mentioned as the first who took two wives. The practice was forbidden by Arcadius, 393. The emperor Charles V. punished polygamy with death. In England, by stat. 1 James I. 1603, it was made felony, with benefit of clergy. It was formerly punished with transportation, but now by imprisonment or penal servitude; see Marriages. Polygamy exists among the Mormons (which see).—POLYANDRY (where one woman has several husbands) is permitted in some Eastern countries, the children having equal rights.

Polyglot, from two Greek words denoting "many languages," is chiefly applied to editions of the Bible in several languages.

- Guistiniani published a polyglot psalter, 1576.
1. The Complutensian Polyglot, in six vols. folio, was printed at Alcala (Complutensis), in Spain, 1502-14; the first edition published in 1522, at the expense of the celebrated cardinal Ximenes, costing 250,000 ducats. Six hundred copies of it were printed; three on vellum. Count MacCarthy, of Toulouse, paid 483*l.* for one of these copies at the Puelli sale.
 2. The Polyglot, printed at Antwerp by Montanus, 8 vols. folio, in 1539-69, at the expense of Philip II. of Spain.
 3. Printed at Paris by Le Jay, in 10 vols. folio, 1628-45.
 4. Edited by Bryan Walton, in 6 vols. folio, 1654-7. [Copies of all four are in the library of the British and Foreign Bible Society.]
 5. Edited by Dr. Samuel Lee, published by S. Bagster, 1 vol. folio, 1831.
 6. Hexaglot Bible, begun by Henry Cohn, completed by the rev. Edward R. De Lavanie and others, 6 vols. 4to, 1874.

Polynesia, a name recently given to the isles in the great Pacific ocean.

Polypes, also named Hydræ (many-footed animals), on account of their property of reproducing themselves when cut in pieces, every part soon becoming a perfect animal; first discovered by Leeuwenhoek, and described by him in the "Philosophical Trans." 1703. The polypes are of the order zoophytes, and partake of the animal and vegetable nature.

Polytechnic Institution, ROYAL, Regent street, London, was erected by Thompson in 1838, opened 6 Aug. 1839, and enlarged in 1848. It contains a hall of manufactures with machines worked by steam-power, lecture theatres, etc., diving-bell, electric machine, etc.—Timbs. The institution did not prosper commercially, and its decline was hastened by the fall of a staircase on 3 Jan. 1859, when one person was killed and many injured. The institution was closed in May, 1859, but was reopened by a new company on 12 Nov. 1860; see École Polytechnique. Professor Pepper, the director for many years, resigned in 1872; returned, 1878. The classes were formed into a college, which was inaugurated by the earl of Shaftesbury, 7 Oct. 1872.

Pomegranate-tree (Punica Granatum) was brought to England from Spain before 1584.

Pomerania, a Prussian province, N. Germany, was held by the Poles, 980, and by Denmark, 1210; made an independent duchy, 1479; and divided between Sweden and Brandenburg, 1648. The Swedish part, awarded to Denmark in 1814, was given up to Prussia for Lauenburg, 1815; see Denmark; Wrecks, 1878.

Pomfret, or PONTEFRAC (S. York). At the castle (built 1069), Richard II. was confined and murdered, 10 Feb. 1399. Henry IV., by whom he was deposed, wishing for his death, an assassin, attended by eight followers, rushed into the king's apartment. He wrested a pole-axe from one of the murderers, and soon laid four of their number dead at his feet, but was at length overpowered and slain. Some writers assert that Richard escaped and died in Scotland. In this castle, also, the earl Rivers, lord Grey, sir Thomas Vaughan, and sir Richard Haut or Haise were put to death by order of the duke of Gloucester, then protector of England (afterwards Richard III.), about 26 June, 1483. The first parliamentary election by ballot took place here 15 Aug. 1872, very quietly.

Pompeii (S. Italy), an ancient city of Campania, was partly demolished by an earthquake in A.D. 63. It was afterwards rebuilt, but was overwhelmed by an eruption of Vesuvius, accompanied by an earthquake, on the night of 24 Aug. 79. The principal citizens were then assembled at a theatre where public spectacles were exhibited. The ashes buried the whole city and covered the surrounding country. After a lapse of fifteen centuries, a countryman, as he was turning up the ground, found a bronze figure, and this discovery led to further search, which brought numerous other objects to light, and at length the city was uncovered. The part first cleared was supposed to be the main street, 1750. The kings of Naples greatly aided in exploring Pompeii, and the present Italian government resumed the work in 1863.

A commemorative meeting of antiquaries and philosophers met at Pompeii, 25 Sept. 1879.

Pompey's Pillar stands about three quarters of a mile from Alexandria, between the city and the lake Mareotis. The shaft is fluted, and the capital ornamented with palm-leaves; the whole, which is highly polished, composed of three pieces, and of the Corinthian order. The column measures, according to some, 94 feet; to others, 141, and even 160 feet; but of its origin, name, use, and age, nothing is certain.

It is generally believed that the column has no reference to Pompey, to whom a mark of honor was, nevertheless, set up somewhere about this part. One supposes that the edifice was dedicated to Vespasian, another to Severus; and Mr. Clarke, from a half-effaced inscription on the base, considered that Adrian is the person honored; while many assert, from the same inscription, that it is dedicated to Diocletian Augustus, most adorable emperor, tutelary deity of Alexandria.

Pondicherry (S.E. India), the capital of French India, and first settled by the French in 1674. It was taken from them by the Dutch in 1693, restored 1697; besieged by the English, 1748; taken by them, Jan. 1761; restored, 1763; again taken, Oct. 1778; restored in 1783; taken 23 Aug. 1793, and in 1803; restored, 1815.

Pont-à-Chin, see Espierres.

Pont-à-Noyelles. At this place, near Amiens, took place a fierce indecisive conflict, lasting from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M., between the Germans under Manteuffel and the French army of the north under Faidherbe, 23 Dec. 1870. Both sides claimed a victory; the French general asserted that he remained master of the field.

Pontefract, see Pomfret.

Pontiffs (Latin, pontifices), the highest Roman sacerdotal order, established by Numa. The college first consisted of 4 patricians, with a chief (Pontifex Maximus); to these 4 plebeians were added by the Ogulnian law, 300 B.C. Sylla increased the number to 15 (8 maiores, 7 minores) (81), and Julius Cæsar to 16. T. Coruncanian, a plebeian, obtained this office, 264 B.C.

Pontus, in Asia Minor, seems to have been a portion of Cappadocia, and received its name from its vicinity to the Pontus Euxinus. Artabazus was made king of Pontus by Darius Hystaspis, 487 B.C. His successors were mere satraps of the kings of Persia.

Poor. The poor of England, till the time of Henry VIII., subsisted, as the poor of Ireland until 1838, entirely upon private benevolence. By statute 23 Edw. III. 1349, it was enacted that none should give alms to a beggar able to work. By the common-law, the poor were to be sustained by "parsons, rectors of the church, and parishioners, so that none should die for default of sustenance;" and by 15 Rich. II. impropriators were obliged to distribute a yearly sum to the poor; but no compulsory law was enacted till 27 Hen. VIII. 1535. The origin of the present POOR-LAW is referred to 43 Elizabeth, 1601, by which overseers were appointed for parishes.

Additional workhouses ordered to be erected, 1819, 1834. Poor-law Amendment bill passed, 1834; forming "Unions," etc., amended in 1836, 1839, 1846, and 1847. Poor Knights of Windsor, or ALMS-KNIGHTS.

Soon after his institution of the Order of the Garter, Edward III. founded this charity for the provision of 24 (afterwards 26) poor persons eminent for military services. Edward IV. discharged the college from the support of the alms-knights, but Elizabeth re-established the charity for 13 knights, 1559. King William IV. changed the name to the "Military Knights of Windsor," in consequence of their all having held commissions in the army, Sept. 1833.—The "Naval Knights of Windsor" are maintained on a distinct foundation, under the bequest of Samuel Travers. An act making lieutenants and widowers eligible was passed in 1867.

Pope (from the Greek Pappas and Papa, a father or grandfather), considered by Romanists to be the visible chief of the church, the vicar of Jesus Christ, and the successor of St. Peter. He styles himself "servant of the servants of God." The title pope was formerly given to all bishops. It was first adopted by Hyginus, 139; and pope Boniface III. induced Phocas, emperor of the East, to confer it on the prelates of Rome, 606. By the connivance of Phocas also, the pope's supremacy over the Christian church was established; see Italy, Reformation, and Rome, Modern.

† 1861 and 1871: parliamentary limits of the boroughs.

Porcelain, see Pottery.

Porphyrogenitus, "born in the purple," a term applied to emperors of the East born while their fathers were reigning.

Port Egmont, a fine harbor on the N.W. coast of Falkland Islands. Commodore Byron was despatched to found a colony here in 1765; see Falkland Islands.

Port Hudson (Louisiana), at the terminus of the Clinton and Port Hudson Railroad, 25 miles above Baton Rouge. This post, which began to be fortified Aug. 1862, lay within the limits of the Department of the Gulf, of which Banks took command 14 Dec. 1862. In March, 1863, Banks made a strong demonstration against this post, as a diversion in favor of admiral Farragut, who then ran the Port Hudson batteries. After a victorious campaign in Louisiana, in which Richard Taylor was driven to Shreveport, leaving Alexandria an easy prey to Porter's fleet (6 May), Banks again moved against Port Hudson, then commanded by gen. Gardner. On 25 May Port Hudson was invested by Banks's army, 12,000 strong. An unsuccessful assault was made on the 27th, which involved a national loss of over 2000 men. A second assault (14 June) was also repulsed, but resulted in a nearer approach to the confederate lines. Port Hudson was surrendered 9 July, with over 6000 prisoners and 51 guns.

Port Jackson (New South Wales), 13 miles north of Botany Bay, was so named by capt. Cook in 1770; see Sydney. Here the duke of Edinburgh was shot by O'Farrell, a Fenian, 12 March, 1868, but soon recovered. The assassin was hanged, 21 April.

Port Mahon, see Misora.

Port Phillip (New South Wales), original name of the colony of Victoria (which see).

Port Royal (North America), capital of the French colony Acadie, founded in 1604; after having been taken and restored several times, it was finally acquired by the British in 1710, and named Annapolis.

Port Royal (Jamaica), once a considerable town, was destroyed by earthquakes in 1602 and 1692; laid in ashes by fire in 1702; reduced to ruins by an inundation of the sea in 1722; and destroyed by a hurricane in 1774. After these calamities, the custom-house and public offices were removed to Kingston. Port Royal was again greatly damaged by fire in 1750; by another awful storm in 1784; and by a devastating fire in July, 1815; in 1850 it suffered by cholera.

Port Royal des Champs (near Paris) was a French Cistercian convent, founded by Odo, bishop of Paris, at the wish of king Philip Augustus, 1204. Having fallen into decay, it was revived and reformed in 1608 by Angélique Arnauld. In 1625 the increased community removed to Paris. The Port Royal des Champs in 1656 became the retreat of the Arnaulds, Tillemont, Pascal, Lancelot, and other Jansenists, who devoted themselves to education, and taught the Port Royal grammars, logic, and other works. This institution was condemned by the pope in 1709, and the buildings were pulled down, and tombs desecrated, by the order of Louis XIV., in 1710. The Port Royal at Paris was suppressed, with other monasteries, in 1790.

Port Royal Expedition. This expedition (29 Oct.-7 Nov. 1861) was under the joint command of gen. W. T. Sherman and commodore Dupont. The fleet consisted of 50 vessels. Fort Walker on Hilton Head, and on the opposite side of Broad river Fort Beauregard, were reduced 7 Nov. Forty-three guns were captured, and possession was taken of Hilton Head, which became, subsequently, an important centre of naval operations.

Porte, or SUBLIME PORTE, official name of the court of the sultan of Turkey. Mostaem, the last of the Abbasside caliphs (1243-58), fixed in the threshold of the principal entrance to his palace at Bagdad a piece of the black stone adored at Mecca, and thus this entrance became the "porte" by eminence, and the title of his court. The sultans, successors of the caliphs, assumed the title.—Bouillet.

Porteous Mob. Capt. Porteous, at Edinburgh, on 16 April, 1736, commanded the guard at the execution of Wilson, a smuggler, who had saved the life of a fellow-criminal by springing upon the soldiers around them, and by main force keeping them back, while his companion fled. This excited great commiseration, and the spectators pelted the guard with stones. Fearing a rescue, Porteous ordered his men to fire upon the mob, and 17 persons were killed or wounded. He was found guilty of murder, 22 June, 1736; but the queen granted him a reprieve (the king being then in Hanover). The people, at night, broke open the prison, took out Porteous, and hanged him on a dyer's signpost in the Grassmarket, 7 Sept. 1736. None of the rioters were ever detected.

Porter. Dr. Ashe says that this beverage obtained its appellation on account of its having been drunk by porters in the city of London, about 1730.* The number of licensed brewers in 1850, in England, was 2257; in Scotland, 154; and in Ireland, 96—total, 2507. On 17 Oct. 1814, at Meux's brewhouse two large vats of porter burst, destroying neighboring houses. Several lives were lost; and the loss was between 8000 and 9000 barrels.

Porterage Act, regulating the charge for porterage of small parcels, passed 1799.

Portland Administrations. The first was the "Coalition ministry," of which William Henry Cavendish, duke of Portland,† as first lord of the treasury, was the head. It obtained the name of the "Coalition" ministry, and included lord North with Mr. Fox, formerly inveterate opponents. Formed 5 April, 1783; dissolved by Mr. Pitt's coming into power, Dec. same year.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION.

Duke of Portland, first lord of the treasury.
Viscount Stormont, president of the council.
Earl of Carlisle, privy seal.
Frederick, lord North, and Charles James Fox, home and foreign secretaries.
Lord John Cavendish, chancellor of the exchequer.

* The malt liquors previously in use were ale, beer, and twopenny, and it was customary to call for a pint or tankard of half-and-half—i.e., half of ale and half of beer. In the course of time it also became the practice to ask for a pint of three thirds, meaning a third of ale, beer, and twopenny. To avoid trouble, Harwood, a brewer, made a liquor which partook of the united flavors of ale, beer, and twopenny, calling it entire, or entire butt beer, meaning that it was drawn entirely from one cask or butt. Being relished by porters and other working people, it obtained its name of porter, and was first retailed at the "Blue Last," Curtain road.—Leigh.

Viscount Keppel, admiralty.
Viscount Townshend, ordnance.
Lord Loughborough, chief commissioner of great seal.
Charles Townshend, Edmund Burke, Richard Fitzpatrick,
Richard B. Sheridan, etc.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION, 25 March, 1807.

Earl Camden, lord president.
Lord Eldon, lord chancellor.
Earl of Westmoreland, lord privy seal.
Hon. Spencer Perceval, lord Hawkesbury (afterwards earl of Liverpool), Mr. Canning, and viscount Castlereagh (afterwards marquess of Londonderry), home, foreign, and colonial secretaries.
Earl Bathurst and Mr. Dundas, boards of trade and control.
Lord Mulgrave, admiralty.
Earl of Chatham, ordnance.

Portland Cement, first mentioned in a patent granted to Joseph Aspdin, a bricklayer of Leeds, 1824. His son made the true cement at Northfleet. Its value as a building material was established by Mr. John Grant's tests, 1859-71. Portland cement concrete was used by Mr. E. A. Bernay in 1867.

Portland Isle (off Dorset), the English Gibraltar. Fortified before 1142. Portland castle was built by Henry VIII. about 1536. Off this peninsula a naval engagement commenced between the English and Dutch, 18 Feb. 1653, which continued for three days. The English destroyed 11 Dutch men-of-war and 30 merchantmen. Van Tromp was admiral of the Dutch, and Blake of the English.—Here is found the noted freestone used for building our finest edifices. The Portland lights were erected 1716 and in 1789. The pier, with nearly half a mile square of land, was washed into the sea in Feb. 1792. Prince Albert laid the first stone of the Portland breakwater, 25 July, 1849, and the last stone was laid by the prince of Wales, 10 Aug. 1872. Mr. James Rendel, the first chief-engineer, was succeeded, on his death in 1856, by Mr. (aft. sir) John Cooke. The breakwater and other harbor works cost 1,033,600*l.*, exclusive of convict labor. The Portland prison was established in 1848. A mutiny among the convicts here in Sept. 1858, was promptly suppressed.

Portland (or BARBERINI) Vase. This beautiful specimen of Greek art (composed of a glass-like substance, with figures and devices raised on it on white enamel; height 10 inches; diameter in the broadest part, 7; with a handle on each side) was discovered about the middle of the sixteenth century, in a marble sarcophagus in a sepulchre at a place called Monte del Grano, about 2½ miles from Rome. The sepulchre was supposed to have been that of the Roman emperor Alexander Severus (222-235) and his mother, Mamma, and the vase is supposed to have been the cinerary urn of one of these royal personages. It was placed in the palace of the Barberini family at Rome, where it remained till 1770, when it was purchased by sir William Hamilton, from whose possession it passed to that of the duchess of Portland, 1787; at the sale of her effects, it is said to have been bought by the then duke of Portland, who, in 1810, deposited it (on loan) in the British Museum. On 7 Feb. 1845, this vase was smashed to pieces with a stone by a man named William Lloyd; it has been skillfully repaired, and is now shown to the public in a special room. Josiah Wedgwood made a mould of it, and took a number of casts.

Porto Bello (South America), discovered by Columbus 2 Nov. 1502, was taken by Morgan, the buccaneer, in 1668; by the British under admiral Vernon, from the Spaniards, 21 Nov. 1739, and the fortifications destroyed. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, in 1748, it was the great mart for the rich commerce of Peru and Chili.

Porto Ferrajo, capital of Elba (which see); built and fortified by Cosmo I. duke of Florence, in 1548. The fortifications were not finished till 1628, when Cosmo II. completed them with great magnificence; see France.

Porto Novo (S. India). Here sir Eyre Coote, with about 9500 men and 55 light field-pieces, skilfully defeated Hyder Ali, ruler of the Carnatic, with 80,000 men and some heavy cannon, 1 July, 1781. Hyder lost about 10,000, the British 587 killed and wounded.

Porto Rico, a West India island belonging to Spain; discovered by Columbus in 1493. Attacks on it by Drake and Hawkins repulsed, 1595. Revolt suppressed, 1823. Slavery abolished, 23 March, 1878.

Portrait Gallery, etc., see National Portrait Gallery and Composite Portraits.

Portreeve (derived from Saxon words signifying the governor of a port or harbor). The chief magistrate of London was originally so styled; but Richard I. appointed two bailiffs, and afterwards London had mayors. —Camden. See Mayors.

Portsmouth (Hampshire), the most considerable haven for men-of-war, and most strongly fortified place in England. The dock, arsenal, and storehouses were established in the reign of Henry VIII. Population in 1851, 72,096; in 1861, 94,799; in 1871, 112,954.

The French under D'Annebault attempted to destroy Portsmouth, but were defeated by viscount Lisle, in the then fleet war-ship in the world, the Great Harry, 1545. Here George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, was assassinated by Felton, 23 Aug. 1628. Admiral Byng (see Byng) on a very dubious sentence was shot at Portsmouth, 14 March, 1757. The dockyard was fired, the loss estimated at 400,000*l.*, 3 July, 1760. Another fire occasioned loss of 100,000*l.*, 27 July, 1770. [The French were suspected both times, but there was no actual proof.] Another great fire occurred, 7 Dec. 1776. Fire caused by James Aitken (John the Painter) 7 Dec. 1776; executed, 10 March, 1777. Royal George (which see) sunk, 29 Aug. 1782. Grand naval mock engagement and parade of the fleet, the king being present, 22-25 June, 1773, and 30 June, 1794. A great naval review was held near Portsmouth on 25 April, 1856. Visited by a French fleet amid great rejoicings, 29 Aug.—1 Sept. 1865. Easter-Monday volunteer review, etc., very successful, 13 April, 1868. Naval review at Spithead before the shah of Persia, 23 June, 1873.

Portugal, the ancient Lusitania. The present name is derived from Porto Callo, the original appellation of Oporto. After a nine years' struggle under Viriathes, a brave, able leader, the Lusitanians submitted to the Roman arms about 137 B.C. Portugal underwent the same changes as Spain on the fall of the Roman empire. There are in Portugal two universities—that of Coimbra, founded in 1308, and the smaller one of Evora, founded in 1533. Lisbon has also its royal academy, and the small town of Thomar has an academy of sciences; but, in general, literature is at a low ebb in Portugal. The poet Camoens, called the Virgil of his country, and author of the "Lusiad" (1569), translated into English by Mickle, was a native of Lisbon. Population of the kingdom and colonies, 31 Dec. 1863, 8,037,194; in 1872, kingdom on the continent, with Madeira and Azores, 4,390,589; colonies, 3,258,140. The constitution granted in 1826 was revised in 1852.

 and 1793; made part of the duchy of Warsaw, 1807; restored to Prussia, 1815. An insurrection here quelled, May, 1848.

Positive Philosophy, set forth by Auguste
 Comte, an eminent mathematician, born about 1795; died at Paris, 1852. M. P. Émile Littré, the great French philologist, ardently embraced the system, and published "De la Philosophie Positive" in 1845.

Comte's "Cours de Philosophie Positive," published 1830-42;
 "Système de Politique Positive, ou Traité de Sociologie, in-stituant la Religion de l'Humanité (l'amour pour principe, l'ordre pour base, et le progrès pour but)," 1861-4.
 It professes to base itself wholly on positive facts or observed phenomena, and rejects all metaphysical conceptions, which it considers negatives, having nothing real or true in them; and dispenses with the science of mind. It sets aside theology and metaphysics as two merely preliminary stages in life; and abandons all search after causes and essences of things, and restricts itself to the observation and classification of phenomena and the discovery of their laws. Comte asserted that Europe had now arrived at the third stage of its progress.

Postal International Convention. A congress of representatives of all the great European powers and the United States of America met at Berne, 15 Sept. 1874, and signed a convention, 9 Oct., agreeing to a uniform postage of 25 centimes, or 2½d. for ½-oz. letters; newspapers, etc., 4 oz. 1d.; commencing 1
 July, 1875. The system was adopted by France, commencing 1 Jan. 1876.

Posting. Post-chaises were invented by the French, and, according to Grainger, were introduced into this country by Mr. William Tell, son of the writer on husbandry. Posting was fixed by statute of Edward VI. at one penny per mile, 1548. By a statute re-establishing the post-office, none but the postmaster or his deputies could furnish post-horses for travellers, 1660. The post-horse duty was imposed in 1779. Post-horse duty yielded in 1862, in England, 128,501l., and in Scotland, 16,933l.

Postman and Tubman, ancient offices in the court of exchequer held by barristers with certain privileges.

Post-office of ENGLAND. In England, in the reign of Edward IV., 1481, riders on post-horses went stages of the distance of twenty miles from each other, in order to procure the king the earliest intelligence of the events that passed in the course of the war that had arisen with the Scots.—Gale. Richard III. improved the system of couriers in 1483. In 1548 similar arrangements existed in England.—Sadler's Letters. Post communications between London and most towns of England, Scotland, and Ireland existed in 1685.—Strype.

The first chief postmaster of England, Thomas Randolph, appointed by queen Elizabeth. 1581
 James I. appointed Matthew de l'Equerest as foreign postmaster, 1610; and Charles I. appointed William Frizell and Thomas Witherings. 1632
 A proclamation of Charles I. "Whereas to this time there hath been no certain intercourse between the kingdoms of England and Scotland, the king now commands his postmaster of England for foreign parts to settle a running post or two to run night and day between Edinburgh and London, to go thither and come back again in six days" 1631
 The king commanded his "postmaster of England for foreign parts" to open a regular communication by running posts between the metropolis and Edinburgh, West Chester, Holyhead, Ireland, Plymouth, Exeter, etc. (Rates of postage: 1 letter carried under 80 miles, 2d.; under 140 miles, 4d.; above that distance in England, 6d.; to any part of Scotland, 8d.)
 An enlarged office erected by the parliament in 1643; and one more considerable in 1657, with a view "to benefit commerce, convey the public despatches, and as the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous wicked designs against the commonwealth by the inspection of the correspondence" 1657

POST-OFFICE.

THE GENERAL POST OFFICE OF London was originally established in Clock lane, near Dowgate hill, whence it was removed to the Black Swan, in Bishopsgate street. After the great fire of 1666, it was removed to the Two Black Pillars, in Brydges street, Covent Garden, and afterwards (about 1690) to Sir Robert Viner's mansion in Lombard street. It was transferred to the building in St. Martin's le-Grand, erected on the site of an ancient college, from designs by R. Smirke, 23 Sept. 1829. Foundation of a new general post-office laid 16 Dec. 1870; occupied 1873.

The new post office of Dublin opened, 8 Jan. 1818.

The foundation of a new post office at Edinburgh was laid by the prince consort in Oct. 1861.

Posta, said to have originated in the regular couriers established by Cyrus, who erected post-houses throughout the kingdom of Persia, about 550 B.C. Augustus was the first who introduced this institution among the Romans, 31 B.C. This was imitated by Charlemagne about A.D. 800.—Ashe. Louis XI. first established post-houses in France owing to his eagerness for news, and they were the first institution of this nature in Europe, 1470.—Hénault. An international commission respecting postal arrangements met at Paris, 11 May, and broke up 9 June, 1863.

Potassium, a remarkable metal, discovered by Humphry Davy, who first succeeded in separating it from its oxide, potash, by means of a powerful voltaic battery, in the laboratory of the Royal Institution, London, about 19 Oct. 1807; and also the metals Sodium from soda, and Calcium from lime, etc. The alkalis and earths had been previously regarded as simple substances. Potassium ignites on contact with moisture.

Potatoes, natives of Chili and Peru, generally considered to have been brought to England from Santa Fé, in America, by sir John Hawkins, 1565. Others ascribe their introduction to sir Francis Drake in 1586; their general introduction, 1592. Their first culture in Ireland is referred to sir Walter Raleigh, who had large estates in that country, about Youghal, in the county of Cork. It is said that potatoes were not known in Flanders until 1620. A fine kind of potato was first brought from America by Mr. Howard, who cultivated it at Cardington, near Bedford, 1765; and its culture became general soon after. The failure of the potato crop in Ireland several years, especially in 1846, caused famine, to which succeeded pestilential disease, of which multitudes died; among them many priests and physicians. Parliament voted ten millions sterling; and several countries of Europe, and the United States of America, forwarded provisions and other succors; see Ireland. In 1868 it was reported that in England and Wales 500,000 acres, and in Ireland 1,000,000 acres, were under cultivation for potatoes. Potato disease prevailed greatly in England, autumn of 1872. In consequence, the value of potatoes imported in 1872 was 1,654,240*l.*; in 1871, only 225,732*l.*; in 1877, 7,964,840 cwt., value 2,348,749*l.* Temporary alarm respecting the American Colorado beetle, or bug, autumn, 1876. Acres cultivated for potatoes in Great Britain in 1867, 492,217; 1871, 627,691; 1877, 512,471.

[Mr. W. Carruthers considers that the disease did not appear in Britain before 1844; Mr. Thibault Dyer thinks that it did.]

Potidæa, a town in Macedonia, a tributary of Athens, against which it revolted 432 B.C., but submitted in 429. It was taken from the Athenians, after three years' siege, by Philip II. of Macedon in 338 B.C.

Potomac, see United States, Aug. 1861.

Potosi (Peru). Silver-mines here were discovered by the Spaniards in 1545; they are in a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf.

Potsdam (near Berlin), the Versailles of Prussia. It was made an arsenal in 1721. Here is situated the palace of Sans-souci (built 1660-73), embellished by Frederick II., and occupied by Napoleon I. in Oct. 1806; and the new palace, the residence of prince Frederick William and his wife, the princess royal of England, married 25 Jan. 1858.

Pottery and Porcelain. The manufacture of earthenware (the ceramic art) existed among the Jews as an honorable occupation (see 1 Chron. iv. 23), and the power of the potter over the clay as a symbol of the power of God is described by Jeremiah, 605 B.C. (ch. xviii.). Earthenware was made by the ancient Egyptians, Assyrians, Greeks, Etruscans, and Romans.

The Majolica, Raffaele, or Umbrian ware of the fifteenth century was probably introduced into Italy from the Moors from Majorca. Raffaele and other artists made designs for this ware.

Pottery manufactured at Beauvais, in France, in the twelfth century.

Enamelled pottery made at St. Cloud. . . . about 1608

Luca della Robbia (born about 1410) applied tin enamel to terra cotta. Fayence ware was made in France by Bernard Palissy (died 1589) and his family.

PORCELAIN, formed of earth kaolin, was made in China in the second century after Christ. Chinese porcelain is mentioned in histories of the sixteenth century, when it was introduced into England, and eagerly sought after.

Porcelain made at Bow, near London, early in the eighteenth century, and at Chelsea before. . . . 1698

Birch's "History of Ancient Pottery" (1858); Marryat's "History of Pottery and Porcelain, Medieval and Modern" (1857); and Brongniart's "Arts Céramiques," are valuable works.

Poultry. An exhibition of poultry was held in London, Jan. 1853, when nearly 1000 cocks were exhibited; and similar exhibitions have been held at the Crystal palace since.

Poultry Compter (London) was one of the most noted of the old city prisons. The compter of Wood street belonged to the sheriff of London, and was made a prison-house in 1555. This latter and Broad-street compter were rebuilt in 1667. The Giltspur-street prison, built to supply the place of the old city compters, was pulled down in 1855. The Poultry chapel was erected on the site of the Poultry compter in 1819.—Leigh.

Pound (from the Latin pondus). The value of the Roman pondo is not precisely known, though some suppose it was equivalent to an Attic mina, or 3*l*. 4*s*. 7*d*. The pound sterling was in Saxon times, about 671, a pound troy of silver, and a shilling was its twentieth part; consequently the latter was three times as large as it is at present.—Peacham. Our avoirdupois pound weight came from the French, and contains sixteen ounces; it is in proportion to our troy weight as seventeen to fourteen; see under Standard.

Poyning's Law, named after sir Edward Poyning, lord deputy of Ireland at the time of its passing, at Drogheda, 13 Sept. 1494. By this law all legislation in the Irish parliament was confined to matters first approved of by the king and the English council. The act was repealed, together with the English Declaratory act of 6 Geo. I. and other obnoxious Irish statutes, April, 1782.

Præmonstratensian Order, or WHITE CANONS, founded in 1120 by Norbert, a monk, at Pré Montre, near Laon. Its first house in England was founded by Peter de Gousla, or Gousel, at Newsham, in Lincolnshire, 1143—Tanner; according to others in 1146. The order spread widely through England soon after. The house at Newsham was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Martial.—Lewis.

Præmunire, LAW OF. This law (which obtained its name from the first two words "Præmoneri," or "Præmuniri facias," "Cause to be forewarned," which is applied to any offence in the way of contempt of the sovereign or his government), derived its origin from the aggressive power of the pope in England. The offence introduced a foreign power into the land, and created an imperium in imperio. The first statute of præmunire was enacted 35 Edward I. 1306.—Coke. The pope bestowed most of the bishoprics, abbeys, etc., before they were void, upon favorites, on pretence of providing the church with better qualified successors before the vacancies occurred. To put a stop to these encroachments, Edward III. enacted a statute in 1353. The statute commonly referred to as the statute of Præmunire is 16 Richard II. 1392. Several similar enactments followed. The assertion that parliament is independent of the sovereign was declared a præmunire, 1661.

Prætorian Guards, instituted by the emperor Augustus (13 B.C.); their numbers enlarged by Tiberius, Vitellius, and their successors. At first supporters of the imperial tyrants, they eventually became their masters, actually putting up the diadem for sale (as in March, A.D. 193, when it was bought by Didius Julianus). They committed many atrocities, and were finally disbanded by Constantine in 312.

Prætors, Roman magistrates. In 365 B.C. one prætor was appointed; a second appointed in 252 B.C. The prætor urbanus administered justice to the citizens, and the prætor peregrinus acted in causes relating to foreigners. In 227 B.C. two more prætors were created to assist the consul in the government of Sicily and Sardinia, lately conquered; and two more when Spain was made a Roman province, 197 B.C. Sylla, the dictator, added two, and Julius Cæsar increased the number to 10, which afterwards became 16. After this their number fluctuated, being sometimes 18, 16, or 12; till, in the decline of the empire, their dignity decreased, and their numbers were reduced to three.

Praga, a suburb of Warsaw, where a bloody battle was fought, 4 Nov. 1794; 80,000 Poles were killed by the Russian general Suwarrow. Near here, on 25 Feb. 1831, the Poles, commanded by Skrznecki, defeated the Russians, under gen. Giesmar, who lost 4000 killed and wounded, 6000 prisoners, and 12 pieces of cannon.

Pragmatic Sanction, an ordinance relating to church and state affairs. The ordinances of the kings of France are thus called; in one the rights of the Gallican church were asserted against the usurpation of the pope in the choice of bishops by Charles VII. in 1438. The Pragmatic Sanction for settling the empire of Germany in the house of Austria, 1439. The emperor Charles VI. published the Pragmatic Sanction, whereby, in default of male issue, his daughters should succeed in preference to the daughters of his brother Joseph I., 19 April, 1713; and he settled his dominions on his daughter Maria Theresa, in conformity thereto, 1723. She succeeded in Oct. 1740; but it gave rise to a war in which most of the powers of Europe were engaged, and which lasted till 1748.

Prague, the capital of Bohemia (which see). The old city was founded about 759; the new city rebuilt in 1348 by the emperor Charles IV., who made it his capital and erected a university. Prague has suffered much by war.

Victory of the Hussites under Ziska. 14 July, 1420
Frederick, the king, totally defeated by the Austrians near Prague. 8 Nov. 1620
Prague taken by the Swedes in 1648, and by the French in 1741; they left it. 1742
Taken by the king of Prussia; obliged to abandon it. 1744
Great battle of Prague (the Austrians defeated by prince Henry of Prussia, and their whole camp taken; their commander, gen. Braun, mortally wounded, and the Prussian marshal Schwerin killed). 6 May, 1757
Insurrection in Prague; soon suppressed. June, 1848
A treaty of peace between Austria and Prussia signed at Prague (by its articles Austria consented to the breaking-up of the Germanic confederation, and to Prussia's annexing Hanover, Hesse-Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfurt; and gave up Holstein, and her political influence in North Germany; and North Schleswig to Denmark if the people vote for it—the last not carried out). 23 Aug. 1866; abrogated. Feb. 1879
Riots; marshal Krause appointed governor about 10 July, 1881

Pragerie, WAR OF (so named from Prague, then celebrated for its civil disorders); the revolt of the dauphin, afterwards Louis XI., against his father, Charles VII., aided by Alexander, the bastard of Bourbon, and other nobles. It was soon quelled; Louis was exiled, and Alexander put to death by drowning, July, 1440.

Prairial Insurrection at Paris. On 1, 2, 3 Prairial, year 8 (20, 21, 22 April, 1795), the faubourgs rose against the Directory, and were quelled by the military.

Praise-God Barebones' Parliament, see Barebones.

Praslin Murder. The duchesse de Choiseul-Praslin was murdered by her husband, the duc de Praslin, at his own house, in Paris, 17 Aug. 1847. She was the only daughter of the celebrated marshal Sebastiani, the mother of nine children, and in her forty-first year. Circumstances were so managed by him as to give it the appearance of being the act of another. During the arrangements for the trial, the duke took poison.

Prayer-book, see Common Prayer. The Prayer-book and Homily Society, London, was founded in 1812.

Prayers. "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord" (Gen. iv. 26), 3875 B.C. The mode of praying with the face to the east was instituted by pope Boniface II., A.D. 532. Prayers for the dead, first introduced into the Christian church about 190, are now advocated by ministers of the English church, 1872. Prayers addressed to the Virgin Mary and to saints are said to have been introduced by pope Gregory, 598; see Liturgies.

Prebendary, a clergyman attached to a cathedral or collegiate church, who receives an income termed prebenda for officiating at stated times. The office slightly differs from that of a canon.

Precedence was established in very early ages, and was among the laws of Justinian. In England the order of precedence was regulated chiefly by two statutes, 31 Hen. VIII. 1539, and 1 Geo. I. 1714.

Predestination (Eph. i.). The doctrine concerning this is defined in the seventeenth article of the Church of England (Eph. i. and Rom. ix.). It was maintained by St. Augustin, and opposed by Pelagius, in the early part of the fifth century. In later times it has been maintained by the Augustinians, Jansenists, the church of Scotland, and many Dissenters (termed Calvinistic); and opposed by the Dominicans, Jesuits, and Dissenters (termed Arminian); especially by the Wesleyan Methodists.

Prehistoric Archæology began in Sweden, and was first systematized by Mr. Nilsson. Daniel Wilson's "Archæology and Prehistoric Annals of Scotland," published 1851. An international congress for treating prehistoric subjects met at Neuchâtel in 1866, and at Paris in 1867. At the third meeting at Norwich, Aug. 1858, it assumed the name of "International Congress for Prehistoric Archæology," and published its transactions in 1869. A meeting was held at Stockholm 7-14 Aug. 1874; see Burrows, Man, and Ancient Monuments.

Sir John Lubbock divides prehistoric archæology into four great epochs: 1. The Drift or Paleolithic or old stone age; 2. The Neolithic or polished stone age; 3. The Bronze age; 4. The Iron age, when bronze was superseded.—(1860.)

Pre-Raphaelite School, a name given about 1850 to J. E. Millais, Wm. Holman Hunt, D. G. Rossetti, and other artists, who opposed the routine conventional-ity of academic teaching, and resolved to study nature as it appeared to them, and not as it appeared in the antique. For a short time they published "The Germ, or Art and Poetry," beginning in 1850. Their works have been much criticised, but their influence has been beneficial. Their principles are much advocated by the great art-critic, John Ruskin.

Prerogative Court, in which formerly all wills were proved, and all administrations taken; which belonged to the archbishop of Canterbury by his prerogative, a judge being appointed by him to decide disputes.* Appeals from this court, previously to the pope, were commanded to be made to the king in chancery, 1533; to the privy council in 1830-2. This court was abolished, and the Probate Court established in 1857. Sir John Dodson, the last judge, died in 1858.

Prerogative Royal. In England the sovereign is the supreme magistrate, and it is a maxim that he can do no wrong. He is the head of the established church, of the army and navy, and the fountain of office, honor, and privilege; but is subject to the laws, unless exempted by name. The royal prerogatives were greatly exceeded by several despotic sovereigns, such as Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. Elizabeth used the phrase "We, of our royal prerogative, which we will not have argued or brought in question" (1591). James I. told his parliament "that as it was blasphemy to question what the Almighty could do of his power, so it was sedition to inquire what a king could do by virtue of his prerogative." These extreme doctrines were nullified by the revolution of 1688, and the exercise of the prerogative is now virtually subject to parliament; see Lords.

Presburg, the ancient capital of Hungary, where the diets were held and the kings crowned. On 26 Dec.

1805, a treaty was signed between France and Austria, by which the ancient states of Venice were ceded to Italy; the principality of Eichstadt, part of the bishopric of Passau, the city of Augsburg, the Tyrol, all the possessions of Austria in Suabia, in Brigau, and Ortenau, were transferred to the elector of Bavaria, and the duke of Württemberg, who, as well as the duke of Baden, were then created kings by Napoleon. The independence of the Helvetic republic was also stipulated.

Presbyterians are so called from their maintaining that the government of the church appointed in the New Testament was by presbyteries, or association of ministers and ruling elders, equal in power, office, and in order. "The elders (Greek. πρεσβυτερος) I exhort, who am also an elder (συμπρεσβυτερος)" (1 Pet. v. 1). Presbyterianism was accepted by parliament in place of episcopacy in England in 1648, but set aside at the Restoration in 1660. It became the established form of church government in Scotland in 1696. Its tenets were embodied in the formulary of faith said to have been composed by John Knox in 1560, which was approved by the parliament and ratified, 1567; and finally settled by an act of the Scottish senate, 1696, afterwards secured by the treaty of union with England in 1707. The first Presbyterian meeting-house in England was established at Wandsworth, Surrey, 20 Nov. 1572.

A Pan-Presbyterian congress held in London. Representatives of about fifty bodies, British, American, and foreign, agreed to form an "Alliance of Presbyterian churches." 18-22 July, 1875
The Presbyterian church of England reconstituted at Liverpool (in union with the United Presbyterian church of Scotland). 13 June, 1876
A Pan-Presbyterian congress, held at Edinburgh, began 3 July, 1877; at Philadelphia, U.S.A., 23 Sept. 1880.
The next congress is to be at Belfast. 1884
(See Church of Scotland, Cameronians, Burghers, Relief, Glasites, Free Church, etc.)

Prescott (Upper Canada). On 17 Nov. 1838, the Canadian rebels were attacked by the British under major Young, and (on the 18th) by lieut.-col. Dundas, who dispersed the insurgents, several of whom were killed and many taken prisoners, and the remainder surrendered. The troops also suffered considerably.

Preserved Meat, see Provisions.

President, see Privy Council; United States, 1789; France, 1848, 1871; Wrecks, 1841.—PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, LOUIS, the fourth great officer of state, is appointed under the great seal, durante beneplacito; and, by his office, is to attend the sovereign's royal person, and to manage the debates in council; to propose matters from the sovereign at the council-table, and to report to his majesty the resolutions taken thereupon.

Press, LIBERTY OF THE. The imprimatur ("Let it be printed") was much used on the title-pages of books printed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The liberty of the press was severely restrained, and the number of master-printers in London and Westminster limited by the Star-chamber, 13 Charles I., 1 July, 1637.

"Disorders in printing" were repressed by the parliament in 1643 and 1649, and by Charles II. 1662
The censorship of the press (by a license established in 1635 and 1683) abandoned. 1696
The toast, "The liberty of the press: it is like the air we breathe—if we have it not, we die," was first given at the Crown and Anchor tavern, at a Whig dinner. 1706
Presses licensed, and the printer's name required to be placed on both the first and last pages of a book, July, 1709
The severity of the restrictions on the French press relaxed by M. Persigny, minister of the interior, but soon restored. Dec. 1860
The liberty of the press in the United States greatly checked during the civil war. 1861-5
Certain restrictions on printers in the United Kingdom removed by act passed. July, 1869
Bill greatly freeing the press in France introduced into the chamber. 24 Jan. 1881
Press (newspaper), a revolutionary journal, published in Dublin; commenced in Oct. 1797; Arthur O'Connor, Mr. Emmet, the barrister (whose brother was executed in 1803), and other conspicuous men, contributors to it; it inflamed the public mind in Ireland on the eve of the rebellion in 1798. The paper was suppressed by a military force. 6 March, 1798

* The records date from 1383; but the testamentary jurisdiction from that year to 1433 was exercised by the court of arches. Then archbishop Stafford transferred it to a new court; present, the commissary of the prerogative court of Canterbury. There was also a prerogative court of the archbishop of York.

The existing weekly conservative paper, the Press, first published in May, 1853

Press-gang for the royal navy was regulated by statute, 1378, and by 5 & 6 Will. IV. 1835; the compulsory service is limited to five years; see Impressment.

Preston (Lancashire). Near here Cromwell totally defeated the royalists under sir Marmaduke Langdale, 17 Aug. 1648. Preston was taken in 1715 by the Scotch insurgents, under Forster, who proclaimed king James VII. They were defeated in a battle on 12, 13 Nov. by gens. Willes and Carpenter, who with the royal army invested Preston on all sides. The Scots laid down their arms, and their nobles and leaders were secured; some were shot as deserters, and others sent to London pinioned and bound together, to intimidate their party.—The stoppage of the cotton manufacture in 1861 and 1862, through the civil war in America, occasioned great suffering in Preston.

"The Preston guild festival," said to have been instituted in Saxon times, and to have been kept once in 20 years regularly since 1562, was duly celebrated in Preston Strikes.—In 1833, a great number of strikes took place among the workmen in the north of England. Those at Preston struck for an increase of 10 per cent. on their wages. On 15 Oct. the masters, in consequence, closed forty-nine mills, and 20,000 persons were thrown out of employment, who were mostly maintained for a long time by subscriptions from their fellows. In the week ending 17 Dec. 14,972 were relieved, at the cost of 28,204. 8s. The committee of workmen addressed lord Palmerston, 15 Nov., who gave them his advice. 24 Dec. 1853

After many attempts at reconciliation, the strike closed for want of funds. 1 May, 1854
Another strike was closed in May, 1860
The executors of Mr. E. C. Harris, a solicitor, awarded 70,000*l.* for a free library, museum, etc. Sept. 1879

Prestonpans, near Edinburgh, the scene of a battle between the young Pretender, prince Charles Stuart, and his Scotch adherents, and the royal army under sir John Cope, 21 Sept. 1745. The latter was defeated with the loss of 500 men, and fled.

Pretenders. A name given to the son and grandsons of James II. of England.

THE OLD PRETENDER, James Francis Edward Stuart, Chevalier de St. George, born 10 June, 1688, was acknowledged by Louis XIV. as James III. of England, in 1701.
Proclaimed, and his standard set up, at Braemar and Castletown, in Scotland, 3 Sept. 1715
Landed at Peterhead, in Aberdeenshire, from France, to encourage the rebellion that the earl of Mar and his other adherents had prompted. 25 Dec. "
This rebellion having been soon suppressed, the Pretender escaped to Montrose (from whence he proceeded to Gravelines). 4 Feb. 1716
Died at Rome. 30 Dec. 1765
THE YOUNG PRETENDER, Charles Edward, was born in .. 1720
Landed in Scotland, and proclaimed his father king. 25 July, 1745
Gained the battle of Prestonpans, 21 Sept. 1745; and of Falkirk. 17 Jan. 1746
Defeated at Culloden, and sought safety by flight. 18 April, "

He continued wandering among the wilds of Scotland for nearly six months; and as 30,000*l.* were offered for taking him, he was constantly pursued by the British troops, often hemmed round by his enemies, but still rescued by some lucky accident, and at length escaped from the Isle of Uist to Morlaix in Sept. He died.

His natural daughter assumed the title of duchess of Albany; died in 1789
His brother, the cardinal York, calling himself Henry IX. of England, born March, 1725; died at Rome in Aug. 1807
His alleged grandson, Charles Edward Stuart, comte d'Albanie, died. 24 Dec. 1880

Prevention of Crime Act, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 55, passed 15 Aug. 1879.

Prices, see Corn, Bread, and Provisions. Mr. T. Tooke, in 1838, published a "History of Prices from 1798 to 1856." He was latterly aided by Mr. W. Newmarch.

Pride's Purge. On the 6th Dec. 1648, col. Pride, with two regiments, surrounded the house of parliament, and seizing in the passage forty-one members of the Presbyterian party, sent them to a low room, then called hell. Above 160 other members were excluded, and none admitted but the most furious of the Independents. The privileged members were named the Rump parliament, which was dismissed by Cromwell, 20 April, 1658.

Priene, one of the twelve cities of the Ionian league in Asia Minor. The temple of Minerva Polias, founded here by Alexander the Great, and the work of Pythios, was excavated by Mr. R. P. Pullan, for the Dilettanti Society, in 1868-9.

Priest (from Greek πρεσβύτερος, elder), in the English church the minister who presides over the public worship. In Gen. xiv. 18, Melchizedek, king of Salem, is termed "priest of the most high God" (1918 B.C.; see Hebrews vii.). The Greek hiercus, like the Jewish priest, had a sacrificial character, which idea of the priesthood is still maintained by the Romanists and those who favor their views. Among the Jews, the priests assumed their office at the age of thirty years. The dignity of high or chief priest was fixed in Aaron's family, 1491 B.C. After the captivity of Babylon, the civil government and the crown were superadded to the high-priesthood; it was the peculiar privilege of the high-priest that he could be prosecuted in no court but that of the great Sanhedrim. The heathens had their arch-flamen, or high-priest, resembling the Christian archbishop. For "Priest in Absolution," see Holy Cross.

Primer. A book so named from the Romish book of devotions, and formerly set forth or published by authority, as the first book children should publicly learn or read in schools, containing prayers and portions of the Scripture. Primers were printed 1535, 1539. Henry VIII. issued a prayer-book called a "primer" in 1544. The three were published by Dr. Burton in 1834.

Primitive Culture, see Civilization.

Primogeniture, RIGHT OF. A usage brought down from the earliest times. The first-born, in the patriarchal ages, had a superiority over his brethren, and in the absence of his father was priest to the family. In some parts of England, by the ancient customs of gavel-kind and borough-English, primogeniture was superseded. It came in with the feudal law, 8 Will. I. 1068. The rights of primogeniture abolished in France, 1790.

Prince Edward Island (North America) was discovered by Cabot in 1497; was finally taken from the French by the British in 1758; united with Cape Breton as a colony in 1763, but separated in 1768. W. F. Robinson governor, Aug. 1870; sir Robert Hodgson, 1874.

"Princess Alice," an iron saloon-steamer, belonging to the London Steamboat Company, while carrying, it is supposed, above 900 persons, principally women and children, on their return from Sheerness, was immediately sunk by collision with the Bywell Castle, a large iron screw-steamer, about 7.40 P.M. on Tuesday, 8 Sept. 1878, in the Thames, in Gallion's Reach, about a mile below Woolwich arsenal. About 200 persons were saved, but of these about 16 died afterwards. About 640 bodies were recovered and buried; many at Woolwich.

The Princess Alice was 251 tons gross; 219 ft. 4 in. long, 20 ft. 2 in. broad, 8 ft. 4 in. deep. Engines, 140 horse-power, by Caird, of Glasgow. Capt. Wm. Grinstead (lost), with (it is said) 6 sailors, 2 engineers, 3 firemen, 6 stewards, and 5 boys.

The Bywell Castle, 1376 tons gross; 254 ft. 3 in. long, 32 ft.

1 in. broad, 19 ft 6 in. deep. Engines, 120 horse-power. Owners, Hall Brothers, London. Captain, Thomas Harrison.

Board of Trade Inquiry.—Result: Officers of Bywell Castle and Princess Alice not considered responsible for the accident, but some were censured for carelessness, 28 Oct. The Princess Alice considered to be equal to her load; inquiry concluded, 31 Oct. Decision: "That the cause of the casualty was the breach of Rule 29 of the Thames Conservancy Regulations, by the Princess Alice not porting her helm when she came end on to the Bywell Castle, a vessel coming in the opposite direction." Report dated 6 Nov. 1878.

Coroner's Inquest.—Verdict: "Bywell Castle did not take necessary precautions in time, of casing, etc.; Princess Alice contributed to the collision by not stopping her engines and going astern, etc.," 14 Nov. 1878.

An action for damage against owners of Bywell Castle in Admiralty division began 27 Nov.; decision that both vessels were to blame, 11 Dec. 1878; decision, on appeal, that the Princess Alice was solely to blame, 13 July, 1879.

Printing. Block-printing invented by the Chinese about 593 A.D.; movable types made in the tenth century. The honor of first printing with single types in Europe has been appropriated to Mentz, Strassburg, Haarlem, Venice, Rome, Florence, Basle, and Augsburg; but the names of the first three only are entitled to attention; see Press.

Adrian Junius awards the honor of the invention to Laurencz Jansen Coster of Haarlem, "who printed with blocks a book of images and letters, 'Speculum Humane Salvationis,' and compounded an ink more viscous and tenacious than common ink, which blotted, about 1438."

[The leaves of this book, being printed on one side only, were afterwards pasted together.]

(In 1850, Mr. Samuel Leigh Sotheby issued an elaborate work compiled by his father and himself, entitled "Principia Typographica," containing fac-similes, etc., of the block-books of the fifteenth century; and Mr. J. Russell Smith published a fac-simile of the "Bibbia Pauperum," a very early block-book.)

John Fust established a printing-office at Mentz, and printed the "Tractatus Petri Hispani," 1442

John Gutenberg invented cut metal types, and used them in printing the earliest edition of the Latin Bible (termed the Mazarine, from the discovery of a copy in the cardinal's library) at Mentz, 1450-5

[At the sale of the Perkins library, 6 June, 1873, a copy of this Bible on vellum sold for 3400*l.*; one on paper sold for 2800*l.*]

"Book of Psalms," by Fust and Schœffer, 14 Aug. 1457

Columbian press of Clymer patented, "

Printing for the blind (by raised characters) begins, 1827

Anastatic Printing, in which written or printed matter is transferred upon zinc plates, was invented by Balderus of Berlin about 1841, and made known in London; lectured on by Faraday in 1845; and improved by Strickland and Delamotte in 1848

[A similar process was invented by Mr. Cocks of Falmouth in 1836.]

Printing types electro-faced with copper, about 1850

Engraved copper-plate electro-faced with iron and nickel 1858

Type composing machines.—By James Young's several numbers of the Family Herald were set up, beginning 17 Dec. 1842; Hattersley's appeared at the Exhibition of 1862; Hart's was shown at the meeting of the British Association at Cambridge, 6 Oct. 1862

W. H. Mitchell's composing machine was tried at Messrs. Spottiswoode's, 1861; these machines were said to be in use in America in Jan. 1863

Kastenbein's composing and distributing machines (in use at the Times office) shown at the International Exhibition, 1872

The "Clowers" type composing machine (Hooker's patent), in which electro magnets are employed, was shown at the Caxton celebration exhibition, South Kensington, July, 1877

[10,000 types per hour may be set up in page form.]

Alexander Mackie's type composing machine in use at his office in Warrington, and at Messrs. Clay's, London, in 1871. It was said to be able to set up four columns of the Times in an hour.

Miss Emily Faithfull established the Victoria printing-office in Great Cornam street, London, in which female compositors are employed; the Englishwoman's Journal printed there, Aug. 1861; appointed printer and publisher in ordinary to her Majesty, June, 1862

The catalogue contains valuable information.

PRINTING-MACHINES.—William Nicholson, editor of the Philosophical Journal, first projected (1790-1), but Mr. König first contrived and constructed a working printing-machine, which began with producing the Times of 28 Nov. 1814, a memorable day in the annals of typography.

In 1818, Mr. E. Cowper patented improvements.† König's machine printed 1800 an hour on one side; Cowper's improvements increased this number to 4200. This was raised to 15,000 by Mr. Applegath's machine, which printed the Times.

Hoe's American machine, introduced into London 1858, prints 20,000 an hour.

Marinoni's machine at Paris said to print 36,000 an hour; Dec. 1868.

Walter press, invented for the Times by J. C. Macdonald and Mr. Calverley, between 1862-9, prints about 17,000 an hour; perfected, 1872.

American Campbell press said to print 50,000 sheets perfected in an hour, Feb. 1876.

Ingram web rotary machine, invented by Mr. W. J. Ingram, M.P., for printing illustrated papers; first used to print Illustrated London News, 4 Oct. 1877.

PRINTING IN COLORS was first commenced by the employment of several blocks, to imitate the initial letters in MSS. (for instance, the Mentz Psalter of Fust, 1455, which has a letter in three colors). Imitations of chiaroscuro soon followed ("Respose in Egypt," engraving on wood after Louis Cranach, in 1519, in Germany; others by Ugo da Carpi, in Italy, 1518). J. B. Jackson (1720-54) attempted, without success, to imitate water color drawings, and to print paper-hangings.

About 1783, John Skipple, an amateur, printed some chiaroscuros.

In 1819-22, Mr. William Savage produced his remarkable work, "Hints on Color Printing," illustrated by imitations of chiaroscuro, and of colored drawings, giving details of the processes employed.

In 1836, Mr. George Baxter produced beautiful specimens of Picture-printing, and took out a patent, which expired in 1855. In some of the illustrations to the "Pictorial Album" (1836), he employed 20 different blocks.

* Romish Service-books, used at Salisbury, by the devout called Pies (Pica, Latin), as is supposed from the different color of the text and rubric. Our printing-type Pica is called Cicero by foreign printers.—Whalley.

† In 1817 was published Blumenbach's Physiology by Eliotson, the first book printed by machinery. The machine employed was König's, one which printed both sides in one operation at the rate of 900 sheets an hour (1816).

It has been applied to lithography (hence chromo-lithography).

In 1849, Mr. G. C. Leighton produced imitations of water-color drawings by means of modifications and improvements of Savary's processes. In 1851 he commenced color-printing by machinery, and has since availed himself of aquatinted plates, and also of electrotyped silver and copper surfaces to obtain purity of color as well as durability.

The large colored prints of the Illustrated London News were first issued in Dec. 1855.

Mr. E. Meyerstein explained his process of printing many colors at one impression (stenochromy), Society of Arts, 13 Dec. 1876.

Printing surfaces. Vulcanized india-rubber was first employed for this purpose by Mr. John Leighton, F.S.A., about 1862, and patented in the name of Alfred Leighton, 1864. The application is now much used for hand stamps for books, etc. (1880).

PRINTING EXHIBITION (of specimens, apparatus, materials, stationery, and machinery), at Agricultural Hall, London, include 5-17 July, 1880; and 14 July et seq. 1881.

Priories, at first dependent on the great abbeys, are mentioned in 722 in England; see Abbeys and Monasteries. Alien priories were seized by the king (Edward I.) in 1285, and in succeeding reigns on the breaking-out of war with France; but were usually restored on the conclusion of peace. These priories were dissolved, and their estates vested in the crown, 3 Hen. V. 1414.—Rymer's Fœdera.

Priscillianists, disciples of Priscillian, a Spanish bishop who propagated doctrines alleged to contain Gnosticism and Manichæism, 372. When condemned he appealed from the pope to the emperor, but was beheaded at Treves, 385.

 An international Prison Congress met at Stockholm, 20-24 Aug. "

Privateer, a ship belonging to private individuals, sailing with a license (termed a letter of marque), granted by a government in time of war, to seize and plunder the ships of the enemy. The practice, said to have been adopted by Edward I. against the Portuguese in 1295, was general during the war between Spain and the Netherlands in the seventeenth century, and during the last French war. Privateering was abolished by the great sovereigns of Europe by treaty, 30 March, 1856. The United States government refused to agree unless the right of blockade was also given up. The British government declined this, asserting "that the system of commercial blockade was essential to its naval supremacy." On 17 April, 1861, Jefferson Davis, president of the southern confederacy, announced his intention of issuing letters of marque, and on the 19th president Lincoln proclaimed that all southern privateers should be treated as pirates. This decree was not carried out; see United States. All the great powers forbade privateering during the American civil war (which see). Among the principal confederate privateers were the following: The Savannah ran the blockade at Charleston, S. C., 2 June, 1861, captured 4 June; the Sumter ran the blockade at New Orleans, La., July, 1861, sold April, 1862; the Jeff. Davis escaped from Charleston, July, 1861, wrecked in Aug.; the Nashville escaped from Charleston, Oct. 1861, destroyed by the Montauk, 1 March, 1863; the Florida, built at Birkenhead, near Liverpool, received her armament at sea, entered Mobile harbor, Aug. 1862, escaped from that port, Jan. 1863, captured by the Wachusett, Oct. 1864, and afterwards sunk by collision in Hampton Roads; the Alabama, built at Liverpool, escaped 29 July, 1862, destroyed by the Kearsarge, 19 June, 1864. It is estimated that during the war 30 vessels of all description were employed by the confederates. By the treaty of Washington privateering was prohibited.

Privileged Places, see Asylums.

Privy Council. A council was instituted by Alfred, 895. The number of the council was about 12 when it discharged the functions of state, now confined to the members of the cabinet; but it had become of an unwieldy number before 1679, in which year it was remodelled upon sir William Temple's plan, and reduced to 30 members: Anthony Ashley, earl of Shaftesbury, being president. The number is now unlimited. To attempt the life of a privy-councillor in the execution of his office was made capital, occasioned by Guiscard's stabbing Mr. Harley while the latter was examining him on a charge of high-treason, 9 Anne, 1711.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—In lieu of the Court of Delegates, for appeals from the lord chancellors of Great Britain and of Ireland in cases of lunacy—from the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty courts of England, and the Vice-Admiralty courts abroad—from the Warden of the Stannaries, the courts of the Isle of Man, and other islands, and the Colonial courts, etc. fixed by statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41, 1833; amended by other acts in 1844, 1851, 1852.
JUDGES.—The lord president, lord chancellor, master of the rolls, vice-chancellor, lords-justices in appeal, lord chief justice of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, lord chief baron, judges of the courts of bankruptcy, probate, and admiralty, and others appointed by the queen. In consequence of the increase of business, and consequent delay, the queen was empowered to appoint four new judicial members of the committee, by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91 (21 Aug. 1871). The attorney-general, sir R. Collier, was made a judge of the Common Pleas, 7 Nov., and a member of the judicial committee 22 Nov. 1871.

These proceedings were considered contrary to the spirit of the act by several judges and the legal profession generally. A vote of censure on the Gladstone ministry was negatived in the house of lords (89-87), 15 Feb.; in the commons (268-241), 19 Feb. 1872.

Privy Seal. THE LORD, the fifth great officer of state, has the custody of the privy seal, which he must not put to any grant without good warrant under the king's signet. This seal is used by the king to all charters, grants, and pardons signed by him before they come to the great seal. Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, held this office in the reign of Henry VIII. previously to 1523, when Cuthbert Tunstall, bishop of London, was appointed. The privy seal has been on some occasions in commission.—Beaumont. See under Liverpool, Canning, Wellington, and succeeding Administrations. Present lord, Chichester Fortescue, lord Carlingford, appointed 11 April, 1861.

Prize-fighting, see Boring.

Prize-money, arising from captures made from the enemy, was decreed by government to be divided into eight equal parts, and distributed by order of ranks, 17 April, 1703. The distribution of army prize-money is regulated by an act passed in 1832. Naval prize-money is now regulated by royal proclamation; the last, 19 May, 1866.

"Pro Nihilo," a pamphlet, said to be by count Henry Arnim, attacking count Bismarck; published Nov. 1875. He was prosecuted for it in 1876; see Prussia.

Probability, THEORY OF (termed by Butler, "the guide of life;" by Laplace, "good-sense reduced to calculation"), was originated by Pascal, and taken up by Fermat, in their correspondence in 1654.

Its object is "the determination of the number of ways in which an event may happen or fail, in order that we may judge whether the chances of its happening or failing are greater."—Jerome.

It has been treated upon by the most eminent mathematicians—viz. the Bernouillis, De Moivre, D'Alembert, Euler, Lagrange, Laplace, and Quetelet.

Isaac Todhunter's copious "History of Probability" published 1865.

Probate Court, established in Aug. 1857, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, which abolished all powers exercised by the ecclesiastical courts in the granting of probates of wills, etc.; see Prerogative Court. The first judge appointed, 5 Jan. 1858, was sir Cresswell Cresswell, who took his seat on 12 Jan. On his death sir James P. Wilde (now lord Penzance) was appointed judge, 28 Aug. 1863; see Supreme Court. The present judges of the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions are sir R. J. Phillimore (1867) and sir James Hannen (1872). A probate and matrimonial division of the high court of justice of Ireland was established by Judicature act, 1877; present judge, Robert Richard Warren (1861). Probate is the exhibiting and proving a will before the proper authority. The probate registry is now at Somerset House (1881).

Processions Act, 13 Vict. c. 2, passed 12 March, 1850, prohibited party processions, with banners, etc. It was repealed in 1872.

Proclamations, ROYAL, "have only a binding force when grounded upon and to enforce the laws of the realm."—Coke. Henry VIII., in 1539, declared that they were as valid as acts of parliament. This was annulled, 1547.

Proctor (from procurator), an office in ecclesiastical courts, corresponding to that of an attorney or solicitor in courts of common-law. It was abolished by the Judicature act, 1873. The persons chosen to represent the clergy in convocation are termed proctors. The university proctors enforce discipline.

Profiles. The first profile taken, as recorded, was that of Antigonus, who having but one eye, his likeness was so taken, 330 B.C.—Ashc. "Until the end of the third century I have not seen a Roman emperor with a full face; they were always painted or appeared in profile, which gives us the view of a head in a very majestic manner."—Addison.

Progresistas, a political party in Spain, headed by Espartero, duke of Victory, and later by gen. Prim. Since 1865 they adopted a policy of inaction in public affairs; by uniting with the unionists and republicans in Sept. 1868, the government was overthrown; see Spain.

Progressionist Theory supposes that the existing species of animals and plants were not originally created, but were gradually developed from one simple form; see Species.

Promissory Notes were regulated and allowed to be made assignable in 1705. First taxed by a stamp in 1782; the tax was increased in 1804, and again in 1808, and subsequently; see Bills of Exchange.

Pronunciamento, a revolution (in Spain or South America) effected by a military leader; in France termed a coup d'état; see France and Spain.

Prorogation of Parliament. By an act passed 12 Aug. 1867, her majesty was enabled to issue a proclamation for the prorogation of parliament during the recess.

Prosecutor. By the Prosecution of Offences act, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22 (3 July, 1879), the appointment of a director of public prosecutions with assistants was enacted. It came into operation 1 Jan. 1880. John Blossett Maule appointed director of public prosecutions, Dec. 1879.

A public prosecutor, "procureur du roi," in France, is mentioned in the fourteenth century; replaced by "accusateur public" (elected), 1791; by "commissaire national," 1793; "procureur" restored by Napoleon I.

Protection of Life and Property Act (for part of Ireland) passed 16 June, 1871; see Ireland.

Protectionists, that section of the conservative party which opposed the repeal of the corn-laws, and which separated from sir Robert Peel in 1846. The name was derived from a "Society for the Protection of Agriculture," of which the duke of Richmond was chairman, and which had been established to counteract the efforts of the Anti-corn-law League, 17 Feb. 1844. Lord George Bentinck was the head of the party from 1846 till his death, 21 Sept. 1848. The Derby administration not proposing the restoration of the corn-laws, the above society was dissolved, 7 Feb. 1853.—The protection of native manufactures is maintained in the United States, 1868-80, and was advocated in France, Germany, and other countries.

Protectorates in ENGLAND. That of the earl of Pembroke, 19 Oct. 1216, ended by his death, 1218. Of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, began 31 Aug. 1422; he was seized 11 Feb. 1447, and found dead a few days after. Proteine (from the Greek πρωτεϊον, principal), a chemical term introduced by Mulder about 1844 for the basis of albumen, fibrine, and caseine.

Protestant Reformation Society, established 1820; it employs missionaries and readers.

Protestants. The emperor Charles V. called a diet at Spire in 1529 to request aid from the German princes against the Turks, and to devise means for allaying the religious disputes which then raged owing to Luther's opposition to the Roman Catholic clergy. Against a decree of this diet, to support the doctrines of the church of Rome, six Lutheran princes, with the deputies of thirteen imperial towns, formally and solemnly protested, 19 April, 1529. Hence the term Protestants was given to the followers of Luther; it afterwards included Calvinists, and other sects separated from the see of Rome. The six protesting princes were: John, elector of Saxony; George, margrave of Brandenburg; Ernest and Francis, the dukes of Lunenburg; the landgrave of Hesse; and the prince of Anhalt. These were joined by the citizens of Strasburg, Nuremberg, Ulm, Constance, Heilbrun, and seven other cities; see Lutheranism, Calvinism, Huguenots, Germany, Church of England, etc.

Protoplasm, the material of the minute ultimate particles of all animal and vegetable tissues, termed "the physical basis of life" by Huxley (1868). The protomoba, the lowest form of life, is a structureless mass of protoplasm; the amoeba, a similar mass, contains a nucleus. Protoplasm is composed of carbonic acid, water, and ammonia.

Provence (the Roman Provincia), S.E. France, was made a kingdom by the emperor Lothaire for his son Charles. It afterwards became part of the kingdom of Arles as a feudal fief, and was reunited to the German empire in 1032 by Conrad II. On the fall of the Hohenstaufens it was acquired by Charles of Anjou, who married the heiress of the count in 1245, and became king of Naples in 1268; and was held by his successors till its annexation to France by Charles VIII. in 1487.

Proverbs. The book of Proverbs by Solomon is dated about 1000 B.C. The latter part was collected by order of Hezekiah about 700 B.C. Ray's collection of English proverbs appeared in 1672, and Bohn's general collection in 1837. Martin F. Tupper's "Proverbial Philosophy" appeared in 1839. Alfred Henderson's "Latin Proverbs," 1869.

Provvedimento Societies in Italy, formed to aid in acquiring Rome and Venice, elected Garibaldi as their chief, 10 March, 1862. They were tolerated by Kicasoli, and warned to be moderate by Rattazzi.

Proxies. Voting by proxy, an ancient privilege of the house of peers, was very frequently abused. In the reign of Charles II., when the duke of Buckingham sometimes brought 20 proxies in his pocket, it was ordered that no peer should bring more than two proxies. From 1830 to 1867, both inclusive, proxies were only called 73 times. In conformity with the recommendation of a committee, a new "standing order" was adopted, 31 March, 1868, by which it was ordered "that the practice of calling for proxies on a division shall be discontinued."

Prud'hommes, CONSEILS DE (from prudens homo, a prudent man), trade tribunals in France, composed of masters and workmen, were constituted to arbitrate on trade disputes in 1806. Similar bodies with this name existed as far back as 1452 at Marseilles, and at Lyons in 1461.

Prussia. The country was anciently possessed by the Veneti, about 320 B.C. They were conquered by the Borussi, who inhabited the Rhiphan mountains; and from these the country was called Borussia. Some historians derive the name from Po, signifying near, and Russia. The Borussi afterwards intermixed with the followers of the Teutonic knights, and latterly with the Poles. The constitution, established 31 Jan. 1850, was modified 30 April, 1851; 21 May, 5 June, 1852; 7 and 24 May, 1853; 10 June, 1854; 30 May, 1855; and 15 May, 1857. Publicans, farmers of the state revenues of Rome. Soon after the battle of Cannæ they were so wealthy as to be able to advance large sums to the government, payable at the end of the war. No magistrate was permitted to be a publican.

Publishers' Circular, still issued twice a month; organized chiefly by Mr. William Longman (died 1877); first published by Mr. Sampson Low, 2 Oct. 1837.

Puddling, making the walls of canals water-tight by means of clay, was largely adopted by Brindley in constructing the Bridgewater canals, 1761 et seq.; see also under Iron Manufacture.

Puebla, see Mexico, 1863.

Puerto, see Porto.

Pugilism, see Boxing.

Pulley, vice, and other mechanical instruments, are said to have been invented by Archytas of Tarentum, about 400 B.C., or by Archimedes, 287-212. In a single movable pulley the power gained is doubled; in a continued combination the power is equal to the number of pulleys, less one, doubled.

Pullman Cars, see under Railways.

Pultowa (Russia), where Charles XII. of Sweden was entirely defeated by Peter the Great of Russia, 8 July, 1709. He fled to Bender, in Turkey.

Pultusk (Russia), where a battle was fought between the Saxons, under their king Augustus, and the Swedes, under Charles XII., in which the former were signally defeated, 1 May, 1708. Here also the French, under Napoleon, fought the Russian and Prussian armies; both sides claimed the victory, but it inclined in favor of the French, 26 Dec. 1806.

Pumps. Ctesibius of Alexandria is said to have invented pumps (with other hydraulic instruments), about 224 B.C., although the invention is ascribed to Danaus, at Lindus, 1485 B.C. Pumps were in general use in England, A.D. 1425. An inscription on the pump in front of the late Royal Exchange, London, stated that the well was sunk in 1282. The air-pump was invented by Otto Guericke in 1654, and improved by Boyle in 1657; see Air and Wells.

Punch, the puppet-show, borrowed from the Italian Polichinello, is descended from a character well known in the theatres of ancient Rome.—Foxtrotte.—The satirical weekly publication, Punch, or the London Charivari, was established by Henry Mayhew, Mark Lemon, Douglas Jerrold, Gilbert A. Beckett, and others; first published, 17 July, 1841. Mark Lemon, the first editor, died 23 May, 1870; 2d, Shirley Brooks, died 28 Feb. 1874; 3d, Tom Taylor, died July, 1880; 4th, Francis Cowley Burnand; see Caricatures and Charivari.

Punctuation. The ancients do not appear to have had any system. The period (.) is the most ancient; the colon (:) was introduced about 1485; the comma (,) was first seen about 1521; and the semicolon (;) about 1570. In sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia" (1587), they all appear, as well as the note of interrogation (?), asterisk (*), and parentheses ().

Punio Wars, see Carthage, 264 B.C.

Punjab (N. W. Hindostan) was traversed by Alexander the Great, 327 B.C.; by Tamerlane, A.D. 1398; by Mahmoud of Ghizni, about 1000. It was an independent state under Runjeet Sing, 1791-1839. English wars with the Sikhs began here, 14 Dec. 1845, and were closed on 29 March, 1849, when the Punjab was annexed; see India. The Punjab has since greatly flourished, and on 1 Jan. 1859, was made a distinct presidency (to include the Sutlej states and the Delhi territory); see Durbar.

Puppets (Italian peppi; French, marionnettes), of which the eyes, arms, etc., were moved by strings, were used by the ancients, and are mentioned by Xenophon, Horace, and others. Skilful theatrical performances with puppets have been several times exhibited in London (at the Adelaide gallery, 1852). A performance with puppets as large as life began at St. James's Hall, July, 1872. M. Ch. Magnin published a "Histoire des Marionnettes," 1852.

Purcell Club, formed Aug. 1836; dissolved 1863.

Purcell Society, founded 21 Feb. 1876, to publish and perform the works of Henry Purcell, still exists (1881).

Purchase System in the army. The payment of a present or gratuity for a commission was prohibited by William III., 1693; but in 1702 purchase was legally reorganized. In 1711 the sale of commissions was forbidden without the royal permission; in 1719-20 regulations were issued; and a fixed scale of prices was adopted in consequence of a commission in 1765. Large over-regulation payments continued to be paid. Commissions of inquiry were held frequently since 1858; and in 1871 the system was abolished, with compensation, by royal warrant, 20 July, 1871, the bill for the purpose having been rejected by the house of lords. For amounts paid, see under Army.

Purgatives of the mild species (aperients), particularly cassia, manna, and senna, are ascribed to Actuarius, a Greek physician, 1245.

Purgatory, the middle place between heaven and hell, where, it is believed by the Roman Catholics, the soul passes through the fire of purification before it enters the kingdom of God. The doctrine was known about 250; was introduced into the Roman church in the fifth century, and made a religious dogma by Gregory I., 590-604. It was first set forth by a council at Florence, 1439; enforced by the council of Trent, Dec. 1563; see Indulgences.

Purification, after childbirth, was ordained by the Jewish law, 1490 a.c. (Lev. xii.); see Churching. The feast of the purification was instituted, 542, in honor of the Virgin Mary's going to the temple (Luke ii.). Pope Sergius I. ordered the procession with wax tapers, whence Candlemas-day.

Puritans, the name first given, it is said, about 1564, to persons who aimed at greater purity of doctrine, holiness of living, and stricter discipline than others. They withdrew from the established church, professing to follow the word of God alone, and maintaining that the church retained many human inventions and popish superstitions; see Cathari, Nonconformists, and Presbyterianism.

Purple, see Diversions.

Purple, a mixed tinge of scarlet and blue, discovered at Tyre. It is said to have been found by a dog's having by chance eaten a shell-fish, called murex, or purpura; upon returning, his master, Hercules Tyrius, observed his lips tinged, and made use of the discovery. Purple was anciently used by the princes and great men for their garments. It was restricted to the emperor by Justinian I., 529, and porphyropentus attached to the names of some emperors signifies "born to the purple."

Purveyance, an ancient prerogative of the sovereigns of England of purchasing provisions, etc., without the consent of the owners, led to much oppression. It was regulated by Magna Charta, 1215, and other statutes, and was only surrendered by Charles II., in 1660, for a compensation.

Puseyism, a name attached to the views of certain clergymen and lay members of the church of England, who proposed to restore the practice of the church of England to what they believed to be required by the language of her Liturgy and Rubrics, but which were considered by their opponents to be of a Romish tendency. The term was derived from the name of the professor of Hebrew at Oxford, Dr. Pusey. The heads of houses of the university of Oxford passed resolutions, censuring Dr. Pusey's attempts to renew practices which are now obsolete, 15 March, 1841; and his celebrated sermon was condemned by the same body, 30 May, 1843; see Tractarians and Ritualists.

Pydna (Macedon), where Perseus, the last king of Macedon, was defeated and made prisoner by the Romans, commanded by Æmilius Paulus, 22 June, 168 a.c.

Pyramids of Egypt. The three principal are situated on a rock, at the foot of some high mountains which bound the Nile. The first building commenced, it is supposed, about 1500 a.c. The greatest is said to have been erected by Cheops, 1082 a.c., but earlier dates are assigned. The largest, near Gizeh, is 461 feet in perpendicular height, with a platform on the top 32 feet square, and the length of the base is 746 feet. It occupies about twelve acres of ground, and is constructed of stupendous blocks of stone. There are many other smaller pyramids to the south of these. They have been visited and described by Belzoni, 1815; Vyse, 1836; C. Piazza Smyth, and others.—The battles of the Pyramids, when Bonaparte defeated the Mamelukes, and thus subdued Lower Egypt, took place 13 and 21 July, 1798; see Egypt.

Pyrenees. After the battle of Vittoria (fought 21 June, 1813), Napoleon sent Soult to supersede Jourdan, with instructions to drive the allies across the Ebro; Soult retreated into France with a loss of more than 20,000 men, having been defeated by Wellington in a series of engagements from 25 July to 2 Aug.; one at the Pyrenees on 28 July. A railway through the Pyrenees (from Bilbao to Miranda) was opened 21 Aug. 1862.—THE PEACE OF THE PYRENEES was concluded between France and Spain, by cardinal Mazarin for the French king, and don Louis de Haro on the part of Spain, in the island of Pheasants, on the Bidassoa. By this treaty Spain yielded Roussillon, Artois, and her right to Alsace; and France ceded her conquests in Catalonia, Italy, etc., and engaged not to assist Portugal, 7 Nov. 1659.

Pyroleter, a mechanical and chemical apparatus for extinguishing fires, especially in ships, invented by Dr. Paton; tried at Greenhithe, and reported successful, 1 June, 1875.

Pyrometer (fire-measurer), an apparatus employed to ascertain the temperature of furnaces, etc., where thermometers cannot be employed; Muschenbroek's pyrometer (a metallic bar) was described by him in 1731. Improvements were made by Ellicott and others. Wedgwood employed clay cylinders, 1782-6. In 1830 prof. Daniell received the Rumford medal for an excellent pyrometer made in 1821. Mr. Ericsson's pyrometer appeared in the Great Exhibition of 1851.—Eng. Cyr. Mr. C. W. Siemens employed electric resistance in his pyrometers, exhibited in 1871.

Pyrophone (Greek, πῦρ, fire; φωνή, voice), a musical instrument, invented by M. Frédéric Kastner, of Paris. It consists of glass tubes of various lengths; the tones being produced by what are termed "singing flames." It is based upon the "chemical harmonicon." Keys are attached for playing, as in the piano. The invention was reported to the French Academy of Sciences, 17 March, 1873; exhibited at Vienna, same year; and at the Society of Arts, 17 Feb. 1875.

Pyroxylin, the chemical name of Gum-cotton (which see).

Pyrrhonism, see Skeptics.

Pythagorean Philosophy. Pythagoras, of Samos, head of the Italic sect, flourished about 555 a.c. He is said to have taught the doctrine of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the soul from one body to another, forbidden his disciples to eat flesh and beans, invented the multiplication table, improved geometry, and taught the present system of astronomy.

Pythian Games, in honor of Apollo, near the temple of Delphi; asserted to have been instituted by himself, in commemoration of his victory over the serpent, Python. Also said to have been established by Agamemnon, or Diomedes, or Amphictyon, or, lastly, by the council of the Amphictyons, 1263 a.c. They lasted till 394.

Pyx, the casket in which Catholic priests keep the consecrated wafer. In the ancient chapel of the pyx, at Westminster abbey, are deposited the standard pieces of gold and silver, under the joint custody of the lords of the treasury and the comptroller-general. The "trial of the pyx" signifies the verification by a jury of goldsmiths of the coins deposited in the pyx or chest by the master of the mint; this took place on 17 July, 1861, at the exchequer office, Old Palace yard, in the presence of twelve privy-councillors, twelve goldsmiths, and others, and on 15 Feb. 1870. This trial is said to have been ordered in the reign of Henry II. 1154-89; king James was present at one in 1811. The first annual trial of the pyx, appointed by the Coinage act of 1870, took place 18 July, 1871.

Q.

Quackery. Quack medicines were taxed in 1788 et seq. An inquest was held on the body of a young lady, Miss Cashin, whose physician, St. John Long, was afterwards tried for manslaughter, 21 Aug. 1830; he was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of 250*l.*, 30 Oct. following. He was tried for manslaughter in the case of Mrs. Catherine Lloyd, and acquitted, 19 Feb. 1831. Dr. Vriès, "the black doctor," a professed cancer-curer, at Paris, was condemned to fifteen months' imprisonment as an impostor in Jan. 1860, see Homœopathy and Hydrophathy.

Quadragesima Sunday, first Sunday in Lent and 40th day before Good Friday; see Lent and Quinquagesima.

Quadrant, a mathematical instrument in the form of a quarter of a circle. The solar quadrant was introduced about 290 B.C. The Arabian astronomers under the caliphs, in 995, had a quadrant of 21 feet 8 inches radius, and a sextant 59 feet 9 inches radius. Davis's quadrant for measuring angles was produced about 1600; Hadley's quadrant about 1731; see Navigation.

Quadrilateral, or QUADRANGLE, terms applied to four strong fortresses in N. Italy, long held by the Austrians, but surrendered to the Italians Oct. 1866: Peschiera, on an island in the Mincio; Mantua, on the Mincio; Verona and Legnago, both on the Adige; see Italy, Peschiera, etc.

The Turkish Quadrilateral was Shumla, Varna, Rostchuk, and Silistria, lost to the sultan by the treaty of Berlin, which established the autonomy of Bulgaria.

Quadrille, a dance (originally quadrille de contre danse, introduced into French ballets about 1745), in its present form became popular in France about 1804. It was introduced into this country about 1808 (Miss Berry), and promoted by the duke of Devonshire and others in 1813.—Raikes.

Quadrivium, see Arts.

Quadruple Alliance. That between Great Britain, France, and the emperor (signed at London, 22 July, 1718); on the accession of the states of Holland, 8 Feb. 1719, obtained its name. It guaranteed the succession of the reigning families of Great Britain and France, settled the partition of the Spanish monarchy, and led to war.

Quadruple Treaty, concluded in London, 22 April, 1834, by the representatives of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal, guaranteed the possession of her throne to Isabella II., the young queen of Spain.

Quadruplex Telegraphy, see under Electricity.

Questor, in ancient Rome, had the management of the public treasure; appointed about 484 B.C. It was the first office any person could bear in the commonwealth, and gave a right to sit in the senate. At first there were two questors, afterwards eight. Two were added in 409 B.C. Sylla raised the number to twenty; Julius Cæsar to forty. Two were called Peregrini, two (for the city) Urbani.

Quaker Hill, BATTLE OF. Quaker Hill is near the north end of Rhode Island. There, on 29 Aug. 1778, the Americans under gen. Sullivan, and the British (then occupying the island) under gen. Pigot, had a severe engagement. The British were repulsed, but Sullivan, who had invaded the island, thought it prudent to withdraw. The Americans lost in that attempt to recover Rhode Island about 200 men; the British loss was about 220.

Quakers, or SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, originally called Seekers, from their seeking the truth, and afterwards Friends (8 John 14). Justice Bennet, of Derby, gave the society the name of Quakers in 1650, because George Fox (the founder) admonished him and those present to quake at the word of the Lord. This sect was commenced in England about 1646 by George Fox (then aged 22), who was joined by George Keith, William Penn, and Robert Barclay, of Ury, and others. Fox rejected all religious ordinances, explained away the commands relative to baptism, etc.; discarded the ordinary names of days and months, and used thee and thou for you, as more consonant with truth. He published a book of instructions for teachers and professors, and died 13 Jan. 1691. The first meeting-house in London was in White Hart Court, Gracechurch street.

The Quakers early suffered grievous persecutions. At Boston, U.S., where the first Friends who arrived were females, they (even females) were cruelly scourged, and had their ears cut off; some put to death, 1656-7.

In 1659 they stated in parliament that 2000 Friends had endured sufferings and imprisonment in Newgate; and 164 Friends offered themselves at this time, by name, to government to be imprisoned in lieu of an equal number in danger (from confinement) of death, 1659.

Fifty-five (out of 120 sentenced) were transported to America by an order of council, 1664.

The masters of vessels refusing to carry them for some months, an embargo was laid on West India ships, when a mercenary wretch was at length found for the service. The Friends would not walk on board, nor would the sailors hoist them into the vessel, and soldiers from the Tower were employed. In 1665 the vessel sailed; but it was immediately captured by the Dutch, who liberated twenty-eight of the prisoners in Holland, the rest having died of the plague. Few reached America.

Quarantine, the custom observed at Venice as early as 1127, whereby all merchants and others coming from the Levant were obliged to remain in the house of St. Lazarus, or the Lazaretto, forty days before they were admitted into the city. Various southern cities have now lazarettos; that of Venice is built in the water. In the times of plague, England and all other nations oblige those that come from the infected places to perform quarantine with their ships, etc., a longer or shorter time, as may be judged most safe. Quarantine acts were passed in 1753 and in 1825. By order of council, 10 Nov. 1866, foreign cattle were made subject to quarantine.

Quarter Sessions were established 25 Edw. III. 1350-1. The days of sitting were appointed 2 Hen. V. 1413. In 1830 it was enacted that quarter sessions of the peace should be held in the first week after 11 Oct., 28 Dec., 31 March, and 24 June. Further regulated, 1842, 1848, and 1858.

Quarterly Review, the organ of the Tory party, first appeared in Feb. 1809, under the editorship of William Gifford, the celebrated translator of Juvenal. He died 31 Dec. 1826.

Quasi Modo, a name given to Low Sunday (the first Sunday after Easter) from the commencement of a hymn sung on that day.

Quaternions, an important mathematical method or calculus, invented by sir William Rowan Hamilton, about 1843.

It is based upon the separation of multiplication from addition, and its fundamental idea is mental transference or motion by what he termed vectors. He attributed to addition motion from a point; to multiplication about a point. Four numbers are generally involved; hence the name quaternion. Hamilton's "Lectures on Quaternions" was published 1853; his "Elements" 1866. Other works by profs. Kelland and Tait published since.

Quatre-bras (Belgium). Here on 16 June, 1815, two days before the battle of Waterloo, a battle was fought between the British and allied army under the duke of Brunswick, the prince of Orange, and sir Thomas Picton, and the French under marshal Ney. The British fought with remarkable intrepidity, notwithstanding their inferiority in number, and their fatigue through marching all the preceding night. The 42d regiment (Royal Highlanders) suffered severely in pursuit of a French division by cuirassiers posted in ambush behind growing corn. The duke of Brunswick was killed.

Quebec (Lower Canada) was founded by the French in 1608. Population, 1861, 1,111,566; 1871, about 1,200,000.

Queen (Saxon, cwen; German, Königin). The first woman invested with sovereign authority was Semiramis, queen of Assyria, 2017 B.C. In 1554 an act was passed "declaring that the regal power of this realm is in the queen's majesty [Mary] as fully and absolutely as ever it was in any of her most noble progenitors' kinges of this realm." The Hungarians called a queen-regnant king; see Hungary. John Knox's "Monstrous Regiment of Women," published 1555, against Mary queen of Scots, greatly offended Elizabeth of England.

Queen Anne's Bounty, established by her in Nov. 1703, being the first-fruits with the tenths to increase the incomes of the poorer clergy. There were 5597 clerical livings under 50*l.* per annum found by the commissioners under the act of Anne capable of augmentation.—Chalmers. Act to consolidate the offices of first-fruits, tenths, and queen Anne's Bounty, passed 1 Vict. 1838.

Queen's Advocate, prosecutes or defends on the part of the crown in all cases in the court of admiralty. Sir R. J. Phillimore, appointed in 1862, was succeeded by sir Travers Twiss, Aug. 1867, who resigned in March, 1872; no successor appointed.

Queen's Bench Court and Prison, see King's Bench.

Queen's Colleges, see Cambridge and Oxford. Queen's colleges, Ireland, from their unsectarian character termed the "Godless Colleges," were instituted in 1845, to afford education of the highest order to all religious denominations. They were placed at Belfast, Cork, and Galway; the last was opened on 30 Oct. 1849. —THE "QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY in Ireland," comprehending these colleges, was founded by patent, 15 Aug. 1850; the earl of Clarendon, lord lieutenant, the first chancellor. These were "condemned" by the Propaganda and the pope, and by a majority (a small one) of the Irish bishops in a synod held at Thurles, in Sept. 1850. A supplemental charter, granted in June, 1866, created much dissension when acted upon in October following, and was suffered to expire, 31 Jan. 1868; see Colleges.

A government commission of inquiry into the colleges was appointed about. May, 1876

Queensland (Moreton Bay), a British colony, comprising the whole of the northeastern portion of Australia; was separated from New South Wales and made a distinct colony, in 1859, when Brisbane, the capital, founded by Oxley, 1823, was made a bishopric. Chinese immigrants are virtually excluded.

Sir George Fergusson Bowen, the first governor, succeeded by Mr. Blackall, 1868; the marquess of Normanby, 1871; Mr. William Wellington Cairns, 1874; sir Arthur E. Kennedy, Jan. 1877.

Population in 1859, about 23,450; in 1871, 125,146; in 1875, about 163,182.

Chief exports, wool, gold, copper, tallow, live-stock, cotton, and sugar; value in 1871, 2,550,383*l.*; 1874, about 4,106,472*l.*

Queenstown (Upper Canada). This town, on the river Niagara, was taken in the war with America by the troops of the United States, 18 Oct. 1812; but was retaken by the British forces, who defeated the Americans with considerable loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, on the same day. Queenstown suffered severely in this war.—The Cove of Cork was named QUEENSTOWN, 3 Aug. 1849, by the queen on her visit.

Quentin, St. (N. France). The duke of Savoy, with the army of Philip II. of Spain, assisted by the English, defeated the French under the constable De Montmorency, at St. Quentin, 10 Aug. 1557. In fulfilment of a vow made before the engagement, the king built the monastery, palace, etc., the Escorial, considered by the Spaniards the eighth wonder of the world; see Escorial. During the Franco-German war the army of the north, under Faidherbe, was defeated here by the Germans after seven hours' fighting, on 19 Jan. 1871; total loss about 15,000: the German loss about 8100.

Queretaro (Mexico), was besieged and taken (through the treachery of Lopez) by the liberal general Escobedo, 13 May, 1867. The emperor Maximilian and his generals Miramon and Mejia, were taken prisoners, and, after trial, were shot, 19 June following.

Quern or Handmill, is of Roman, or, as some say, of Irish invention; so-called Roman querns have been found in Yorkshire.

Quesnoy (N. France), was taken by the Austrians, 11 Sept. 1793, but was recovered by the French, 16 Aug. 1794. It surrendered to prince Frederick of the Netherlands, 29 June, 1815, after the battle of Waterloo. It was here that cannon were first used, and called bombardiers.—Hénault.

Quettah, see Beloochistan.

Quiberon Bay (W. France). A British force landed here, Sept. 1746, but was repulsed. In the bay admiral Hawke gained a complete victory over the French admiral Conflans, and thus defeated the projected invasion of Great Britain, 20 Nov. 1759. Quiberon was taken by some French regiments in the pay of England, 3 July, 1795; but on 21 July, through treachery, the French republicans, under Hoche, retook it by surprise, and many emigrants were executed. About 900 of the troops, and nearly 1500 royalist inhabitants who had joined the regiments in the pay of Great Britain, effected their embarkation on board the ships.

Quicksilver, in its liquid state, mercury. Its use in refining silver was discovered, 1540. There are mines of it in various parts, the chief of which are at Almaden, in Spain, and at Idria, in Illyria; the latter, discovered by accident in 1497, for several years yielded 1200 tons. A mine was discovered at Ceylon in 1797; and at New Almaden and other places in California. Quicksilver was congealed in winter at St. Petersburg, in 1759. It was congealed in England by a chemical process, without snow or ice, by Mr. Walker, in 1787. Corrosive sublimate, a deadly poison, is a combination of mercury and chlorine; see Calomel.

Quicunque Vult, see Athanasian Creed.

Quietism, the doctrine of Miguel Molinos, a Spaniard (1627-96), whose work, the "Spiritual Guide," published in 1675, was the foundation of a sect in France. He held that religion consisted in an internal silent meditation on the merits of Christ and the mercies of God. Madame de la Mothe-Guyon, a Quietist, was imprisoned in the Bastille for her visions and prophecies, but released through the interest of Fénelon, archbishop of Cambray, between whom and Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, arose a controversy, 1697. Quietism was finally condemned by pope Innocent XII. in 1699.

Quills are said to have been first used for pens in 558, some say not before 635.

Quince, the Pyrus Cydonia, brought to this country from Austria, before 1578. The Japan quince, or Pyrus Japonica, brought hither from Japan, 1796.

Quindecimviri, fifteen men chosen to keep the Sibylline books. The number, originally two (duumviri) about 520 B.C., was increased to ten in 865 B.C., and afterwards (probably by Sylla) to fifteen, about 82 B.C. Julius Cæsar added one; but the precedent was not followed.

Quinine or Quinia, an alkaloid (much used in medicine), discovered in 1820 by Pelletier and Caventon. It is a probable constituent of all genuine cinchona barks, especially of the yellow bark; see Jesuit's Bark. Artificial quinine was prepared (synthetically) by Mr. W. L. Scott, in Oct. 1865.—QUINOIDINE, see Fluorescence.

Quinquagesima Sunday. The observation is said to have been appointed by Gregory the Great (pope, 590-604). The first Sunday in Lent having been termed Quadragesima, and the three weeks preceding having been appropriated to the gradual introduction of the Lent fast, the three Sundays of these weeks were called by names significant of their position in the calendar; and, reckoning by decades (tenths), the Sunday preceding Quadragesima received its present name, Quinquagesima, the second Sexagesima, and the third Septuagesima.

Quintilians, heretics in the second century, the disciples of Montanus, who took their name from Quintilia, a lady whom he had deceived by his pretended sanctity, and whom they regarded as a prophetess. They made the eucharist of bread and cheese, and allowed women to be priests and bishops.—Pardon.

Quirinus, a Sabine god, afterwards identified with Romulus. L. Papirius Cursor, general in the Roman army, first erected a sundial in the temple of Quirinus, from which time the days began to be divided into hours, 298 B.C.—Aspin. The sundial was sometimes called the Quirinus, from the original place in which it was set up.—Ashe.—The Sabines who became Roman citizens were termed QUIRITES.

Quito (capital of the republic of Ecuador), celebrated as having been the scene of the measurement of a degree of the meridian, by the French and Spanish mathematicians, 1736-42. 40,000 persons perished by an earthquake which almost overwhelmed the city of Quito, 4 Feb. 1797. Since then violent shocks, but not so disastrous, occurred; till one, on 22 March, 1859, when about 5000 persons were killed; see Earthquakes, Ecuador.

Quizote, see Don Quixote.

Quo Warranto Act, passed 1289. By it a writ may be directed to any person to inquire by what authority he holds any office or franchise. Charles II. directed a writ against the corporation of London in 1688, and the court of King's Bench declared their charter forfeited. The decision was reversed in 1690. The proceedings have been regulated by various acts, 1710, 1792, 1837, 1843.

Quoits, a game said to have originated with the Greeks, and to have been first played at the Olympic games, by the Idæi Dactyli, fifty years after the deluge of Deucalion, 1453 B.C. Perseus, the grandson of Acrisius by Danae, having inadvertently slain his grandfather, when throwing a quoit, exchanged the kingdom of Argos, to which he was heir, for that of Tirynthus, and founded the kingdom of Mycenæ, about 1313 B.C.

Quotations. Athenæus's "Deipnosophists or Banquet of the Learned" (compiled about 228), and Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy" (1621), contain masses of extracts. Henry Ainsworth's "Communion of Saints" (died 1622) is a mosaic of Scripture quotations.

Races, one of the ancient games of Greece; see Chariots. Horse-races were known in England in very early times. Fitz-Stephen, in the days of Henry II., mentions the delight taken by the citizens of London in the diversion. In James I.'s reign Croydon in the south, and Garterly in the north, were celebrated courses. Near York there were races, and the prize was a little golden bell, 1607.—Cumden. In the end of Charles I.'s reign, races were performed at Hyde Park. Charles II. patronized them, and, instead of bells, gave a silver bowl, or cup, value 100 guineas. William III. added to the plates (as did queen Anne), and founded an academy for riding.

RACE-HORSES.

Flying Childers, bred in 1713 by the duke of Devonshire, was allowed by sportsmen to have been the fleetest horse that ever ran at Newmarket, or that was ever bred in the world; he ran four miles in six minutes and forty-eight seconds, or at the rate of 35½ miles an hour, carrying nine stone two pounds. He died in 1741, aged 26 years.

Eclipse was the fleetest horse that ran in England since the time of Childers; he was never beaten, and died in Feb. 1789, aged 25 years. His heart weighed 14 pounds, which accounted for his wonderful spirit and courage.—Christie White's History of the Turf.

Rack, an engine of torture for extracting a confession from criminals, early known in south Europe, and in later times an instrument of the Inquisition. The duke of Exeter, in the reign of Henry VI., erected a rack of torture (thence called the duke of Exeter's daughter), now seen in the Tower, 1423. In the case of Felton, who murdered the duke of Buckingham, the judges of England protested against the proposal of the privy council to put the assassin to the rack, as contrary to the laws, 1628; see Ravillac and Torture.

Radcliffe Library, (OXFORD), founded under the will of Dr. John Radcliffe, an eminent physician. He died 1 Nov. 1714, leaving 40,000*l.* to the university of Oxford for the founding a library, the first stone of which was laid 17 May, 1737, and the edifice was opened 13 April, 1749.—The RADCLIFFE OBSERVATORY, Oxford, founded by the exertions of Dr. Hornsby, Savilian professor of astronomy, about 1771, was completed in 1794. The publication of the observations was commenced in 1842 by Mr. Manuel J. Johnson, the director, appointed in 1839.

Radiation, see Heat.

Radicals, or "RADICAL REFORMERS," persons who professed to aim at procuring a thorough reformation in the government and policy of England, became prominent in 1816, when Hampden clubs were formed, of which sir Francis Burdett, lord Cochrane, major Cartwright, and William Cobbett were prominent members. Samuel Bamford's "Life of a Radical," published in 1842, gives much information; he died 13 April, 1872. Many radicals were severely punished, 1817–20.—The "Radicals" in the United States were the party headed by Thaddeus Stevens, bitterly opposed to the policy of president Johnson, as too favorable to the subdued Southern States.

Radicle, see Compound.

Radiometer (termed a light-mill), a little instrument constructed by Mr. William Crookes, F.R.S., 1873–6. Two little disk-arms, mounted on a pivot placed in an exhausted glass bulb, revolve when placed in bright light. The motion was attributed to heat-absorption, 1877; see Light.

Radstadt, Austria. Here Moreau and the French defeated the Austrians, 5 July, 1796.

Raffaële Ware, see Pottery.

Ragged Schools, free schools for outcast, destitute, ragged children, set up in large towns. The instruction is based on the scriptures, and most of the teachers are unpaid. John Pounds, a cobbler, of Portsmouth, who died in 1839, opened a school of this kind; and one was set up by Andrew Walker in "Devil's Acre," Westminster, in 1839.—Knight. They did not receive their name till 1844, when the "Ragged-school Union" was formed, principally by Mr. S. Starey and Mr. William Locke (afterwards hon. secretary). The earl of Shaftesbury was chairman. In 1856 there were 150 Ragged-school institutions. Sunday ragged schools reported in London in 1867, 226; in 1878, 177; day schools, in 1867, 204; in 1878, 58; week evening schools, in 1867, 207; in 1878, 147. Ragged-school buildings were exempted from rates, 1869. These schools are being gradually superseded by those established by the London school board. Dr. Guthrie, a founder of ragged schools in Edinburgh, etc., died 24 Feb. 1873; see Shoe-black.

Ragman Roll (said to derive its name from Ragimunde, a papal legate in Scotland) contains the records of the homage and fealty to Edward I. sworn to by the nobility and clergy of Scotland at Berwick in 1296. The original was given up to Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, in 1328, when his son David was contracted in marriage to the princess Joanna of England.

Ragusa, a city on the Adriatic, on the southern confines of Dalmatia, was taken by the Venetians, 1171, but became an independent republic, 1558. It suffered much by an earthquake, 1667; was taken by the French in 1806, and given up to Austria in 1814.

Railway Commissioners, see Railways, 1878 and 1880.

Railways. Short roads in and about Newcastle, laid down by Mr. Beaumont so early as 1602, are thus mentioned in 1676: "The manner of the carriage is by laying rails of timber from the colliery to the river exactly straight and parallel; and bulky carts are made with four rollers fitting those rails, whereby the carriage is so easy that one horse will draw down four or five chaldron of coals, and is an immense benefit to the coal-merchants."—Roger North. Rainbow. Its theory was developed by Kepler in 1611, and by René Descartes in 1629; see Spectrum.

Rainfall. Mr. G. J. Symons printed a table of rainfall in Britain for 140 years, 1726-1865, in the Reports of the British Association in 1866. The wettest year was 1852, being 38 per cent. above the average; but 1872 was 58 per cent. He began to publish his "Annual Rainfall in the British Isles" in 1866. In 1867 he published "Rain: How, When, Where, Why, it is Measured." It contains an attempt at a rainfall table of the world.

Raleigh's Conspiracy, termed the Main Plot (which see).

Ramadan, the Mahometan month of fasting, in 1865, 28 Jan. to 27 Feb.; and from 27 Dec. 1867 to 30 Jan. 1868 inclusive. It is followed by the festival of Bairam (which see).

Rambouillet, a royal château, about 25 miles from Paris. Here Francis I. died, 31 March, 1547; and here Charles X. abdicated, 2 Aug. 1830. After being owned by the count of Thoulouse and the duc de Penthièvre, it was bought by Louis XVI. 1778.

Ramillies (Belgium), the site of a brilliant victory gained by the English, under the duke of Marlborough, and the allies over the French, commanded by the elector of Bavaria and the marshal de Villeroy, on Whitsunday, 28 May (o.s. 12), 1706. The French were soon seized with a panic, and a general rout ensued: about 4000 of the allied army were slain in the engagement. This accelerated the fall of Louvain, Brussels, etc.

Ranelagh (near Chelsea), a public garden for concerts and dancing, occupying the grounds of Ranelagh House (built by Jones, earl of Ranelagh, about 1691), was opened with a breakfast, 5 April, 1742. The music for the orchestra was frequently composed by Dr. Arne. The gardens were closed, and the buildings taken down, in 1804.

Rangoon, maritime capital of the Burmese empire, built by Alompra, 1753, was taken by sir A. Campbell on 11 May, 1824. In Dec. 1826, it was ceded to the Burmese on condition of the payment of a sum of money, the reception of a British resident at Ava, and freedom of commerce. Oppression of the British merchants led to the second Burmese war, 1852. Rangoon was taken by storm by gen. Godwin, 14 April, and annexed to the British dominions in December. An English bishopric founded, 1877; see Burmah.

Ransome's Artificial Stone, the invention of Mr. Fred. Ransome, 1848, is made by dissolving common flint (silica) in heated caustic alkali, adding fine sand. The mixture is pressed into moulds and heated to redness.

Ranters, a sect which arose in 1645, similar to the Seekers, now termed Quakers. The name is now applied to the Primitive Methodists, separated from the main body in 1810; see Wesleyans.

Rape was punished with death by the Jews, Romans, and Goths; by mutilation and loss of eyes in William I.'s reign. This was mitigated by the statute of Westminster I., 3 Edw. I. 1274. Made felony by stat. Westminster 2, 12 Edw. III. 1338; and without benefit of clergy, 18 Eliz. 1575. Rape made punishable by transportation in 1841; by penal servitude for life, or a less period, 1861.

Raphia, a port of Palestine. Here Antiochus III. of Syria was defeated by Ptolemy Philopator, king of Egypt, 217 B.C.

Raphoe, a bishopric in N. Ireland. St. Columbkille, a man of great virtue and learning, and of royal blood, founded a monastery in this place, and it was afterwards enlarged by other holy men; but it is the received opinion that St. Eunan erected the church into a cathedral, and was the first bishop of the see in the eighth century. Raphoe was united to the bishopric of Derry by act 3 & 4 Will. IV. 1833; see Bishops.

Rappahannock, see Chancellorsville and Trials, 1865.

Raspberry, not named among the fruits early introduced into this country from the continent. The Virginian raspberry (Rubus occidentalis), before 1696, and the flowering raspberry (Rubus odoratus), about 1700, came from North America.

Rastadt, Baden. Here the preliminaries of a peace were signed, 6 March, 1714, by marshal Villars, on the part of the French king, and by prince Eugene, on the part of the emperor; the German frontier was restored to the terms of the peace of Ryswick.—The CONGRESS OF RASTADT, to treat of a general peace with the Germanic powers, was commenced 9 Dec. 1797; and negotiations were carried on throughout 1798. The atrocious massacre of the French plenipotentiaries at Rastadt by the Austrian regiment of Szeltsler took place 28 April, 1799.

Ratcliffe Highway (now St. George's street), East London. Mr. Marr, a shopkeeper here, with his wife, child, and boy, were brutally murdered in a few minutes, 7 Dec. 1811. In the same neighborhood, on 11 Dec., Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, their child and servant, were also murdered. A man, named Williams, arrested on suspicion, committed suicide, 15 Dec.

Rathmines (near Dublin). Col. Jones, governor of Dublin castle, made a sally out, routed the marquess of Ormond at Rathmines, killed 4000 men, and took 2517 prisoners, with their cannon, baggage, and ammunition, 2 Aug. 1649.

Rating Act, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 54, passed 7 Aug. 1874; abolishes exemptions from the Poor-law act, 43 Eliz.; and provides for the rating of woods, mines, rights of fowling, fishing, etc.

Rationalism, the doctrine of those who reject a divine revelation and admit no other means of acquiring knowledge but experience and reason. The leading writers are Reimarus of Hamburg (died 1768), Paulus of Heidelberg, Eichhorn, Reinhard, and Strauss. W. Lecky's "History of Rationalism in Europe" appeared July, 1865; and Dr. J. Hurst's, April, 1867.

Ratisbon (in Bavaria) was made a free imperial city about 1200. Several diets have been held here. A peace was concluded here between France and the emperor of Germany, by which was terminated the war for the Mantuan succession, signed 13 Oct. 1630. In later times it was at Ratisbon, in a diet held there, that the German princes seceded from the Germanic empire, and placed themselves under the protection of the emperor Napoleon of France, 1 Aug. 1806. Ratisbon was made an archbishopric in 1806; secularized in 1810; was ceded to Bavaria in 1815; became again an archbishopric in 1817.

Rattening (from ratten, provincial for rat), the removing and hiding workmen's tools as a punishment for non-payment to trades-unions, or opposition to them. Much "rattening" was disclosed at the commission of inquiry at Sheffield in June, 1867; and at Manchester Sept. following; see Sheffield.

Raucoux (Belgium). Here marshal Saxe and the French army totally defeated the allies under prince Charles of Lorraine, 11 Oct. 1746.

Ravaillac's Murder of Henry IV. of France, 14 May, 1610. The execution of the assassin on 27 May was accompanied by most elaborate tortures.

Ravenna (on the Adriatic), a city of the papal states, founded by Greek colonists, fell under the Roman power about 234 B.C. It was favored and embellished by the emperors, and Honorius made it the capital of the Empire of the West about A.D. 401. In 568 it became the capital of an exarchate. It was subdued by the Lombards in 752, and their king, Astolphus, in 754 surrendered it to Pepin, king of France, who gave it to the pope Stephen, and thus laid the foundation of the temporal power of the Holy See. On 11 April, 1512, a battle was fought between the French, under Gaston de Foix (duke of Nemours and nephew of Louis XII.), and the Spanish and Papal armies. De Foix perished in the moment of his victory, and his death closed the good-fortune of the French in Italy. Ravenna became part of the kingdom of Italy in 1860.

Many of the Assassinatori, a secret society of assassins (said to have been formerly followers of Giaraldini) who long kept the city in terror, arrested Sept.-Oct. 1874; condemned to life imprisonment, 12 Dec. 1874

Ré, ISLE OF (W. coast of France, near Rochelle). Oyster-beds planted here in 1862 have flourished; see Rochelle.

Readers, a new order of ministrants in the Church of England, received the assent of the archbishops and bishops in July, 1866. They were not to be ordained or addressed as reverend.

Reading (Berkshire). Here Alfred defeated the Danes, 871. The abbey was founded in 1121 by Henry I. The last abbot was hanged in 1539 for denying the king's supremacy. The palace prison was erected 1850.

Real Actions Limitation Act, passed 1874, came into operation 1 Jan. 1879.

Reaping-machines. One was invented in this country early in the present century, but failed from its intricacies. At the meeting of the British Association at Dundee, Sept. 1867, the rev. Patrick Bell stated that he invented a reaping-machine in 1826, which was used in 1827; the principle being that on which the best American machines are now constructed. On 15 Jan. 1868, he was presented with a valuable testimonial, and 1000*l.* in money. McCormick's American machine was invented about 1831, and perfected in 1846; he received a gold medal from the jurors of the Exhibition of 1851; and also at the Royal Agricultural Society's competition at Bristol, 6 Aug. 1878. The sheaves are bound by these reaping-machines. About 200 patented; few good. Hussey's machine, also American, exhibited in 1851, was highly commended.

Reason was decreed to be worshipped as a goddess by the French republicans, 10 Nov. 1793, and was personified by an actress.—Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" was published in 1794-5; Immanuel Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason" ("Kritik der reinen Vernunft"), 1781.

Rebecca Riots, see Wales, 1843, 1878.

Rebellion, DORR'S. For nearly two hundred years the people of Rhode Island had lived under a charter from Charles II., according to which only those owning a certain amount of property could vote. In 1843 the desire to change this provision gave rise to two parties, the "Suffrage" and the "Law and Order." Each determined to secure to their party the administration of affairs, and each elected their own state officers. Thomas W. Dorr was chosen governor by the "Suffrage" party, and took possession of the state arsenal; the militia were called out, and he was compelled to flee. In a second attempt, the party was overpowered by U. S. troops, and Dorr was arrested, brought to trial, convicted of treason, and sentenced to imprisonment for life; but some time after he was pardoned. A free constitution was adopted in the meantime by the people, under which the government is now conducted.

Rebellion, SHAYS'S. At the close of the Revolution, the United States were burdened with a very heavy foreign and domestic debt. They were impoverished by the long war, and it was difficult to raise the means to meet the arrears of pay due the soldiers of the Revolution. On the recommendation of Congress, each state endeavored to provide means for raising its quota by a direct tax. This effort produced much excitement in some of the states, and finally, in 1787, a portion of the people of Massachusetts openly rebelled. Daniel Shays, who had been a captain in the Continental army, marched at the head of a thousand men, took possession of Worcester, and prevented a session of the Supreme Court. He repeated his performance at Springfield; and the insurrection soon became so formidable that the governor was compelled to call out several thousand militia under gen. Lincoln to suppress it. This was speedily accomplished. Though some of the insurgents were sentenced to death, none were executed. A free pardon was finally given to all.

Rebellion, WHISKEY. In 1794, a rebellion broke out in Western Pennsylvania, in opposition to the national excise laws. The insurgents put 16,000 men in the field, maltreated the excise officers, committed many outrages, and defied the national government. The governor of Pennsylvania refusing to act, Washington, as president of the United States, called out 13,000, afterwards increasing the number to 15,000, militiamen of Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey; and, putting gen. Henry Lee of Virginia in command, ordered a movement against the insurgents on 1 Sept. 1794. The prompt response to the call for militia intimidated the insurgents, who submitted to authority, 24 Oct. 1794. This insurrection cost the government $1,500,000.

Rebellions (or INSURRECTIONS) IN BRITISH HISTORY. Details of many are given in separate articles; see Conspiracies.

Against William the Conqueror, in favor of Edgar Atheling, aided by the Scots and Danes, 1069.

By Odo of Bayeux and others, against William II., in favor of his brother Robert, 1088; suppressed, 1090.

In favor of the empress Maude, 1139; ended, 1153.

Of the Barons, 1261-7.

Of the lords spiritual and temporal against Edward II. on account of his favorites, the Gavestons, 1312. Again, on account of the Spencers, 1321.

Of Walter the Tyler, of Deptford, vulgarly called Wat Tyler; occasioned by the brutal rudeness of a poll-tax collector to his daughter. He killed the collector in his rage, and raised a party to oppose the tax itself, 1381; see Tyler.

In Ireland, when Roger, earl of March, the viceroy and heir presumptive to the crown, was slain, 1398.

Of Henry, duke of Lancaster, who caused Richard II. to be deposed, 1399.

Against king Henry IV. by a number of confederated lords, 1402-3.

Against Henry V. by earl of Cambridge and other lords, 1415. Of Jack Cade, against Henry VI., 1450; see Cade's Insurrection.

In favor of the house of York, 1452, which ended in the imprisonment of Henry VI. and seating Edward IV. of York on the throne, 1461.

Under Warwick and Clarence, 1470, which ended with the expulsion of Edward IV. and the restoration of Henry VI. the same year.

Under Edward IV., 1471, which ended with the death of Henry VI.

Of the earl of Richmond, against Richard III., 1485, which ended with the death of Richard.

Under Lambert Simnel, 1486, who pretended to be Richard III.'s nephew, Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick; his army was defeated, lenders slain, and he was discovered to be a baker's son; he was pardoned, and employed by the king as a menial.

Under Perkin Warbeck, 1492; defeated; executed 1499.

Under Thomas Flammock and Michael Joseph, in Cornwall, against taxes levied to pay the Scottish war expenses. They marched towards London, and lord Audley took the command at Wells. They were defeated at Blackheath, 22 June, and the three leaders were executed, 28 June, 1497.

The "Pilgrimage of Grace," against Henry VIII. 1536-7.

Of the English in the West, to restore the ancient liturgy, etc., 1540; suppressed same year.

In Norfolk, headed by Ket the tanner, but soon suppressed, Aug. 1549.

In favor of lady Jane Grey, against queen Mary. Lady Jane was proclaimed queen of England on the death of Edward VI., 10 July, 1553; but she resigned the crown to Mary a few days afterwards; she was beheaded for high-treason, in the Tower, 12 Feb. 1554, aged 17.

Of sir Thomas Wyatt, son of the poet, and others, against queen Mary's marriage with Philip of Spain, etc.; fails; he is beheaded, 11 April, 1554.

Of the Roman Catholic earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland against queen Elizabeth, Nov. and Dec. 1567. The former fled to Scotland, but was given up by the regent Morton and executed.

Of the Irish under the earl of Tyrone, 1599; suppressed in 1601.

Under the earl of Essex, against queen Elizabeth, 1600; it ended in his death, 1601.

Of the Irish under Roger More, sir Phelim O'Neill, etc., against the English in Ireland, 1641-5.

The "Great Rebellion," 1641-60.

Rebellion of the Scots Covenanters, 1666; soon put down.

Under the duke of Monmouth, 1685; executed 15 July.

Of the Scots in favor of the Old Pretender, 1715; quelled in 1716.

Of the Scots under the Young Pretender, 1745; suppressed in 1746; lords Lovat, Balmerino, and Kilmarnock beheaded.

Of the Americans on account of taxation, 1774. This rebellion led to the loss of our chief North American colonies, and the independence of the United States, 1782.

In Ireland, called the Great Rebellion, when great numbers took up arms; commenced 24 May, 1798; suppressed next year.

Again in Ireland, under Robert Emmett, a gifted enthusiast, 23 July, 1803, when lord Kilwarden was killed, with several others, by the insurgents.

Canadian Insurrection (which see), Dec. 1837 to Nov. 1838.

Of Chartists at Newport (which see), 4 Nov. 1839.

Smith O'Brien's silly Irish rebellion; terminated in the defeat and dispersion of a multitude of his deluded followers, by sub-inspector Trant and about sixty police constables, on Boulagh Common, Ballingary, county Tipperary, 29 July, 1848; see Ireland.

Sepoy mutiny in India (see India), 1857-8.

Of Fenians in Ireland; see Fenians and Ireland, 1865-7.

Receipts for Money were first taxed by a stamp duty in 1783. The act was amended in 1784, 1791 et seq., and receipts were taxed by a duty varying to the amount of the money received in all transactions. Stamps required on bills of exchange, notes, and receipts in Ireland by stat. 35 Geo. III. 1795; see Bills of Exchange. The uniform stamp of one penny on receipts for all sums above 2*l.* was enacted by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59 (4 Aug. 1853); see Stamps. Penny postage-stamps used for receipts after 1 June, 1881.

Reciprocity Association, founded at Manchester, Sept. 1869, in consequence of the restrictions on the importation of British manufactures into their territories imposed by foreign governments.

Reciprocity, a form of protection, was advocated by lord Batsman and others in 1878-9. His resolution was negatived by the lords, 29 April, 1879.

Reciprocity Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, regulating the relation between the latter and Canada in regard to trade, fisheries, etc., negotiated by lord Elgin, and ratified 2 Aug. 1854. Its abrogation, proposed by the United States government in 1864, was effected 17 March, 1866. Its renewal was desired in the States in 1867.

Recitative, a species of singing differing but little from ordinary speaking, and used for narratives in operas, is said to have been first employed at Rome by Emilio del Cavaliere, who disputed the claim of Rinuccini to the introduction of the opera, 1600; see Opera.

Record, evangelical, or Low-church, weekly newspaper, established 1828.

Recorder, the principal judicial officer of great corporations. The first recorder of London was Jeffrey de Norton, alderman, 1298; right hon. Russell Gurney, Q.C., recorder, Dec. 1856-Jan. 1878; sir Thomas Chambers, Feb. 1878. The salary, originally 10*l.* per annum, is now 3000*l.*

Records, PUBLIC, IN ENGLAND, began to be regularly preserved in 1100 by order of Henry I. The repositories which possessed materials the most ancient and interesting to the historian were the Chapter-house of Westminster Abbey, the Tower of London, the Rolls Chapel, and the Queen's Remembrancer's offices of the exchequer. The early records of Scotland, going from London, were lost by shipwreck in 1298. In Ireland, the council-chamber and most of the records were burned, 1711. Public Records act, 2 Vict. c. 94 (10 Aug. 1838).—A new RECORD OFFICE has been erected on the Rolls estate, between Chancery and Fetter lanes, to which the records have been gradually removed. The record commissioners commenced their publications in 1802. Mr. F. Thomas's valuable "Handbook to the Public Records" was published in 1853; Mr. Ewald's "Our Public Records" in 1873. Acts relating to the Public Records of Ireland passed 1867 and 1875.

Recovery, FORT, DEFENCE OF. Gen. Wayne succeeded St. Clair in command of the troops in the Northwest, and on the site of the latter's defeat (see St. Clair's Defeat) he erected a fort, and called it Recovery. In June, 1794, the garrison, commanded by major William M'Mahon, were attacked by a large force of Indians. M'Mahon was killed, with 22 of his command, and 80 were wounded. The Indians were repulsed.

Recreation, see Playground.

Recreative Religionists, a name given to an association of gentlemen for diffusing a knowledge of natural religion by the aid of science, formed in Dec. 1866. In Jan. 1867 lectures were given on Sunday evenings at St. Martin's Hall, London, by prof. Huxley, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, and others, sacred music being performed at intervals during the evening. This was decided not to be an infraction of the Sunday act, 21 Geo. III. c. 49, in the trial Baxter v. Baxter Langley, 19 Nov. 1868; see Sunday Lecture Society.

Recruiting, see Army, 31 Oct. 1866. Recruits, 1878, 28,325; 1879, 25,662; 1880, 25,927.

Recusants, persons who refuse to attend church, 1 Eliz. c. 2, 1559; dissenters relieved from this act, 1689; it was repealed, 1844.

Red Crag, deposits of fossil remains on the coast of Essex and Suffolk, so designated by Edward Charlesworth about 1835. They are much used in the manure manufacture.

Red Cross on a white ground, the flag of the Geneva Convention (which see). The Russian Red Cross Society, with others, was very active during the Servian war, July-Aug. 1876.

Red River Campaign of 1864. After the capture of Port Hudson, gen. Halleck urged upon Banks (6 Aug.) the necessity, for diplomatic reasons, of occupying Texas. There was some difference in the views of these officers, Halleck preferring an advance upon Shreveport, and Banks favoring a descent upon the coast and thence into the interior. An expedition for the capture of Sabine Pass started from New Orleans, 5 Sept. 1863, but resulted in complete failure. Brazos Santiago, at the mouth of the Rio Grande, was occupied 2 Nov. During that month nearly the entire Texan coast was occupied by Banks's forces. He was about to proceed against Galveston, when his attention was again called to Halleck's original plan for an advance up the Red river. On 23 March, his army was concentrated at Alexandria; it advanced to Natchitoches (2, 3 April) and to Pleasant Hill (7 April). On 8 April was fought the battle of Sabine Cross-roads, in which Banks was defeated by Kirby Smith. Then began the retreat. At Pleasant Grove the confederates were checked by Emory's division of the 19th Corps. On the 9th the confederates were defeated at Pleasant Hill; but Banks continued his retreat, reaching Alexandria on the 22d. A. J. Smith's corps (10,000 strong) operated with Banks in this campaign. But the affair, from first to last, was mismanaged; and even if the expedition, with Porter's co-operating fleet, had reached Shreveport, that position could not have been maintained, and the fleet would have been captured or destroyed. Gen. Steele, who marched a co-operative column from Little Rock against Kirby Smith, encountered great difficulties in his movement; and before he could be of any assistance Banks had already retreated.

Red River Settlements, a name given to part of the Hudson Bay settlements.

Red Sea. In 1826, Ehrenberg discovered that the color was due to marine plants, the Trichodanum Erythrum; see Smz.

Redan, a kind of field fortification; see Russo-Turkish War, 1855.

Rede Lecture, Cambridge. Sir Robert Rede, chief-justice of Common Pleas in 1507, endowed some lectureships. In 1859 these were replaced by an annual lecture, which has been given by profs. Owen, Phillips, Ansted, Tyndall, and other eminent persons.

Redemptorists, see Liguorians.

Redhill, see Reformatory Schools.

Redowa, a Bohemian dance in $\frac{3}{4}$ time, introduced in 1846 or 1847 at Paris, and soon after in London.

Reflectors, see Burning-glass.

Reform Association, instituted at Westminster to protect electors, 20 May, 1835.

Reform Banquets, see France, 1847.

Reform Club, established 1830. New building finished, 1841.

Reform in PARLIAMENT. Mr. Pitt's motion for a reform in parliament was lost by a majority of 20, 7 May, 1782; of 144, 7 May, 1783; and of 74, 18 April, 1785; see Radicals. The measure of reform by earl Grey's administration was proposed in the house of commons by lord John Russell, 1 March, 1831.

BILL OF 1831.

First division; second reading: for it, 302; against it, 301; 22 March.
On motion for a committee, gen. Gascoyne moved an amendment "that the number of representatives for England and Wales ought not to be diminished." Amendment carried on a division, 299 to 291; 19 April.
The bill abandoned, and parliament dissolved, 23 April.
A new parliament assembled, 14 June. Bill again introduced, 24 June.
Division on second reading: for it, 367; against it, 231—majority, 136; 7 July.
Division on third reading of the bill: for it, 345; against it, 236—majority, 109; 22 Sept.
In the Lords.—First division, on second reading: lord Wharncliffe moved "that the bill be read that day six months." For the amendment, 199; against it, 188—majority, 41; 8 Oct. [Parliament prorogued, 20 Oct. 1831.]

ACT OF 1832.*

Read in the Commons a first time without a division, 12 Dec. 1831. Second reading; division, viz.: for the bill, 324; against it, 162—majority, 162; 17 Dec. 1831. Third reading; division, viz.: for the bill, 355; against it, 239—majority for it, 116; 23 March, 1832.
In the Lords, read the first time on motion of earl Grey, 27 March. Second reading: for the bill, 184; against it, 176—majority, 9; 14 April. In the committee, lord Lyndhurst moved "that the question of enfranchisement should precede that of disfranchisement." The division was 151 and 116—majority against ministers, 35; 7 May.
Resignation of ministers, 9 May; great public excitement ensued, and they were induced to resume office on the king granting them full power to secure majorities by the creation of new peers.
In the Lords, the bill was carried through the committee, 30 May; read a third time: 106 against 22—majority, 84; 4 June. Received the royal assent, 7 June, 1832.
The royal assent given to the Scotch Reform bill, 17 July; and to the Irish one, 7 Aug. 1832.

ABORTIVE REFORM BILLS.

Lord John Russell introduced a new Reform bill, 13 Feb. 1864, which was withdrawn, 11 April, 1864, in consequence of the war with Russia.
On 28 Feb. 1859, Mr. Disraeli brought in a Reform bill, which was rejected by the commons on 31 March, by a majority of 39. This led to a dissolution of parliament, and eventually to a change of ministry.
The new government (lords Palmerston and J. Russell) brought forward a new bill, 1 March, 1860; but withdrew it, 11 June. No Reform bill was brought forward by the government, 1861-5; see Commons.
The discussion respecting parliamentary reform was revived in the autumns of 1864 and 1865.
Mr. Baines's Reform bill was rejected by the commons, 8 May, 1865.
Mr. Gladstone introduced a Franchise bill, 12 March, 1866; after much discussion, it was read a second time, 28 April. A Redistribution of Seats bill was introduced, and incorporated with the franchise bill, 7 May; an amendment (on a clause substituting "rateable" for "clear yearly value") was passed, in opposition to the government, 19 June, which led to the resignation of the government, 26 June, and the withdrawal of the bill (see Adullam), 19 July, 1866.
Numerous great reform meetings: London, Hyde Park (riotous), 23, 24 July; Agricultural Hall, 30 July, and Guildhall, 8 Aug.; Manchester, 24 Sept.; Leeds, 8 Oct.; Glasgow, 16 Oct.; Edinburgh, 17 Nov.; Conference at Manchester, 19 Nov. 1866.
Reform demonstration of trades unions in London; procession of about 25,000; great order observed; 3 Dec. 1866.
Procession of about 18,000 men to Agricultural Hall, Islington; good order kept; 11 Feb. 1867.
Mr. Disraeli announced his plan of proceeding with reform by 13 resolutions, 11 Feb.; these withdrawn, 26 Feb. 1867.
"Ten Minutes bill" introduced and withdrawn, 25 Feb. 1867.
[It comprised a 6d. franchise for boroughs and 20s. for counties. Said by sir John Pakington to have been agreed to in the last ten minutes of a cabinet council.]
New bill (with household suffrage) introduced 18 March; read second time, 27 March, 1867.
The "Tea room meeting" of Liberals (Messrs. Owen Stanley, Dilwyn, Grant Duff, and others), who agree to support the bill in opposition to Mr. Gladstone's resolution, which is withdrawn, and the bill goes into committee, 8 April; Mr. Gladstone's amendment rejected by 22 (for, 288; against, 310), 12 April, 1867.
Peaceable reform meetings at Birmingham, 22 April; Hyde Park, 6 May; National Reform Union (first meeting), 15 May, 1867.

ACTS OF 1867-8.

The new Reform bill passed by the commons, 15, 16 July; by the lords (with amendments, when lord Derby said that it was "a great experiment," and "a leap in the dark"), 6 Aug.; received the royal assent, 15 Aug. 1867.*

* By this Act to amend the Representation of the People in England and Wales" (2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 45), 56 boroughs in England were disfranchised (schedule A), 30 were reduced to one member only (B); 22 new boroughs were created to send two members (C), and 20 to send one member (D), and other important changes were made.

 Scotch reform bill introduced by lord advocate, 17 Feb.; passed 13 July, 1868.
 Irish bill introduced by the earl of Mayo, 19 March; passed 13 July, 1868.
 The Reform League was dissolved 13 March, 1869; revived, Oct. 1876.
 Bill for extending household suffrage to counties brought in annually by Mr. G. O. Trevelyan; see Household Suffrage.

Reformation, THE. Efforts for the reformation of the church may be traced to the reign of Charlemagne, when Paulinus, bishop of Aquileia, employed his voice and pen to accomplish it. The principal reformers were Wickliffe, Huss, Jerome of Prague, Savonarola, Erasmus, Luther, Zuinglius, Tyndal, Calvin, Melancthon, Cranmer, Latimer, Knox, and Browne. Luther thus characterized himself and his fellow-reformers: "Res non Verba—Luther." "Verba non Res—Erasmus." "Res et Verba—Melancthon." "Nec Verba nec Res—Carietadt." See Wickliffites, Protestants, Calvinists, Lutherans, Presbyterianism, etc. The eras of the reformation are as follows:

In France (Albigenses)	about 1177
In England (Wickliffe)	1380
In Bohemia (Huss)	1405
In Italy (Jerome Savonarola)	1498
In France (by Farel)	before 1512
In Germany (Luther)	1517
In Switzerland (Zuinglius)	1519
In Denmark (Andreas Bodenstein)	1521
In Prussia	1527
In France (Calvin ; see Huguenots)	1529

Reformatory Schools, for juvenile delinquents.† The Reformatory School at Mettray, near Tours, in France, was founded in 1839 by M. de Metz, formerly a councillor of Paris, warmly seconded by the vicomte de Courcelles, who gave the estate on which the establishment is placed. The one at Redhill, Surrey, is situated on land purchased in 1849 by the Philanthropic Society, and under the direction of the rev. Sydney Turner. The first stone of the building was laid 30 April, 1849, by the prince consort. The inmates of these establishments are instructed in farm labor, and divided into so-called families. In 1854 the Juvenile Offenders act was passed. In 1851 and 1853 great meetings were held on this subject; and in Aug. 1856, the first grand conference of the National Reformatory Union was held.

* This act is divided into three parts:

I. FRANCHISES. Boroughs: All householders rated for relief of the poor; lodgers, resident for twelve months, and paying 10*l.* a year. Counties: Persons of property of the clear annual value of 5*l.*; and occupiers of lands or tenements paying 12*l.* a year. At a contested election for any county or borough represented by three members, no person to vote for more than two candidates; in London, to vote for three only.

Disfranchised: Totnes, Reigate, Great Yarmouth, Lancaster. II. DISTRIBUTION OF SEATS: Boroughs with less than 10,000 population, to return one member only (38 in Schedule A). Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and Leeds to have three members instead of two.

Chelsea (with Fulham, Hammersmith, and Kensington) made a borough; Merton-Tydvil and Salford to return two members; Tower Hamlets divided into two boroughs—Hackney and Tower Hamlets. (Other new boroughs in Schedule B.) University of London to return one member.

III. SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS: Registration, etc. Boundary commissioners (which see). Parliament not to be dissolved on any future demise of the crown. Members holding offices of profit from the crown not to vacate their seats on acceptance of another office.

† It was calculated (about 1856) that there were in London 30,000, and in England 100,000 youths under seventeen leading a vagabond life, and that out of 15,000 of those who were committed for trial nearly half were in custody for the first time.

Regency Bills. One was passed 1751. One was proposed to parliament in consequence of the mental illness of George III., and debated 10 Dec. 1788. It was relinquished on his majesty's recovery, 26 Feb. 1789. The return of the malady led to the prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.) being sworn in before the privy council as regent of the kingdom, 5 Feb. 1811. The Regency Bill providing for the administration of the government, should the crown descend to the princess Victoria while under eighteen years of age, passed 1 Will. IV., 23 Dec. 1830. A Regency Bill appointing prince Albert regent in the event of the demise of the queen, should her next lineal successor be under age, passed 4 Aug. 1840.

Regent Street, London, W.; designed and executed by John Nash; authorized by act 53 Geo. III. 1813. The colonnades of the Quadrant were removed in 1848.

Regents, see Protectorates.

Regent's Canal, begun at Paddington, where it joins a cut to the Grand Junction, passes under Maida hill; continues its course by the Regent's park to Islington, where another subterranean excavation, about three quarters of a mile in length, was formed for its passage. It then proceeds by Hoxton, Hackney, Mile-end, to Limehouse, where it joins the Thames. The whole length of it is nine miles; it comprises twelve locks and thirty-seven bridges. Begun 1812; opened 1 Aug. 1820. Great explosion of gunpowder (which see), 2 Oct. 1874. New bridge, near Gloucester gate, Regent's park, opened by the duke of Cambridge, 3 Aug. 1878.

Regent's Park, originally part of the grounds belonging to a palace of queen Elizabeth, near to the north end of Tottenham-court road, pulled down in 1791. Since 1600, the property was let to various persons; but the leases having expired, it reverted to the crown; and in 1814 great improvements were commenced under the direction of Mr. Nash. The park consists of about 450 acres; within it are the gardens of the Zoological Society and the Royal Botanical Society. During a frost on 15 Jan. 1867, the rotten ice of one of the lakes gave way, and about 200 persons were immersed, of whom above 40 perished.

Regicides, in English history, are the commissioners appointed to try king Charles I., 150 in number; of whom 70 acted, and 59 signed the death-warrant, Jan. 1649. Of these last, 29 were tried, and 10 executed: Harrison, 13 Oct.; Cook and Peters, 16 Oct.; Scott, Scroop, Clement, and Jones, 17 Oct.; Axtell and Hacker, 19 Oct. 1660. They asserted themselves to be martyrs. Others were imprisoned; see Assassinations.

Registers. The registering of deeds and conveyances disposing of real estates was appointed to be effected in Yorkshire and in Middlesex, 2 Anne, 1703 et seq. Greater security was thus given to purchasers and mortgagees; and the value of estates increased in those counties. Wills have been for a series of years kept and registered, in London, at Doctors' Commons; see Wills. The registering of shipping in the Thames was commenced 1786; and throughout England, 1787; and several acts and amendments of acts have since followed for keeping and improving registers.

The duties and payments of the lord clerk register of Scotland and his deputy were regulated by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 44..... 1879

Registers, PAROCHIAL, were established by Cromwell, lord Essex, by which the dates of births, marriages, and burials became ascertainable, 27 Henry VIII. 1530-8. This measure was opposed by the people, who feared some new taxation. A stamp-tax was laid on registers in 1784. Laws for their better regulation were enacted in 1813 et seq. The great Registration act (introduced by lord John Russell), 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 86, passed 17 Aug. 1836; see Bills of Mortality, etc.

A new registration act for births and deaths, passed 7 Aug. 1874, came into operation..... 1 Jan. 1875

Major George Graham, the first registrar-general, was succeeded by sir Brydges Powell Henniker, appointed Jan. 1890

Registration of Voters was enacted by the Reform act, passed 7 June, 1832; and by acts passed in 1868; see Revising Barristers.

New Parliamentary and Municipal Registration act passed..... 22 July, 1878
Births and Deaths Registration act for Ireland passed, 2 Aug. 1880

Regium Donum (royal gift), an allowance from the sovereign for the maintenance of the Presbyterian ministers in Ireland, commenced by Charles II. in 1672, and revived by William III. in 1690, was commuted by the Irish Church act passed June, 1871. The allowance to certain Protestant dissenting ministers in Ireland was given up by them in 1857, in deference to the wishes of English dissenters.

Regulation of Public Worship, see Public Worship.

Regulation of the Forces Act passed 17 Aug. 1871; see Army.

Reichenbach (Prussia). Here Duroc was killed during the conflicts between the French and the allies, 22 May, 1813; see Bautzen. Here was signed a subsidiary treaty between Russia, Prussia, and England, whereby the last engaged to provide means for carrying on the war against Napoleon I. on certain conditions, 14, 15 June, 1813. Austria joined the alliance soon after.

Reichsrath, the representative council of the empire of Austria, reconstituted by decree 5 March; met on 31 May, 1860. In May, 1861, the upper house consisted of 17 spiritual, 55 hereditary, and 39 peers. The lower house consisted of 136 elected deputies. No representatives came from Hungary, Transylvania, Venetia, the Banat, Slavonia, Croatia, and Istria. The Reichsrath was abolished by a rescript, 21 Sept. 1865, with the view of restoring autonomy to Hungary and other provinces. It again met 20 May, 1867.

Reigate (Surrey) sent two members to parliament in the reign of Edward I.; lost one by the Reform act of 1832, and was wholly disfranchised for corruption by that of 1867.

Reign of Terror. Maximilien Robespierre headed the populace in the Champ de Mars, in Paris, demanding the dethronement of the king, 17 July, 1791. He was triumphant in 1793, and numbers of eminent men and citizens were sacrificed during his sanguinary administration. Billaud Varennes denounced the tyranny of Robespierre in the tribune, 27 July, 1794. The next day he suffered death, with many of his companions; see France. This has been termed the Red Terror. The reaction after the restoration of the Bourbons, 1815, disgraced by many atrocious acts of wanton cruelty, has been termed the White Terror. The Jesuits were then conspicuous in the destruction of their enemies.

Reigns of Sovereigns. The average duration, according to Newton, is 19 years each; according to Hales, 22½ years; that of the sovereigns of England being 23½ years, and that of the popes 7½ years. Pius IX. was the first pope who reigned above 25 years, 1846-78.

Relics, the trade in these became general in the seventh century, fragments of bones, etc., being brought from Jerusalem. The sale of relics was prohibited by pope Innocent III., 1198, without effect.

Relief Church, a secession from the church of Scotland, founded by Thomas Gillespie, who was deposed from his ministry for opposing the doctrine of passive obedience to the law of the church of Scotland respecting the settlement of ministers, 23 May, 1752. The church was constituted as the "presbytery of relief," 22 Oct. 1761. The Relief and Secession Churches were united as the United Presbyterian Church, 18 May, 1847.

Relief of Distress (IRELAND) Act, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 14, passed 2 Aug. 1880.

Religion (from religio, I bind again, in the sense of a vow or oath) comprehends a belief in the being and perfections of God, and obedience to his commandments. The Jewish religion is set forth in the Old and the Christian religion in the New Testament. Departure from these scriptures has been the origin of all corrupt forms of religion, as foretold in them; see Mahometanism, and other religions and sects under their names. The population of the globe, with reference to religious worship, is given by Balbi (who assumed the total population to be 1,050,000,000), and Dieterici (who assumed it to be 1,288,000,000), as follows:

	Balbi (1836)	Dieterici (1859)

Remonstrance, THE GRAND, drawn up by the house of commons, and presented to king Charles I., 1 Dec. 1641. It consisted of 206 articles, dwelt bitterly on all the king's illegal and oppressive acts, and was printed by order of the house.

Renaissance, a term applied to the revival of the classic style of art in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, under the patronage of the Medici and others; see Painters and Sculptors.

Rendsburg (Holstein) was taken by the Imperialists in 1627; by the Swedes in 1643; and by the Prussians and confederate troops in 1848. The first diet of Schleswig and Holstein met here, 3 April, 1848. It was reoccupied by the Danes in 1852, and taken by the Prussians after a serious conflict, 21 July, 1864.

Rennes (capital of Brittany, N.W. France). Here was established, by Henry II., in 1553, the parliament so celebrated for its independence, especially in its struggle with the court, 1788-89. On 20 May, 1788, it declared infamous every one who should take part in the cour plénière then proposed, but afterwards suppressed.

Rents said to have been first made payable in money, instead of in kind, about 1135. Numerous statutes have been enacted in various reigns to define the relations and regulate the dealings between landlord and tenant. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106 (1845) regulates leases. By the act 8 Anne, 1709, no goods are removable from tenements under an execution until the rent shall have been paid to the landlord by the sheriff, 1709. The rental of England, including land, houses, and mines, was 6,000,000*l.* about the year 1600, and twelve years' purchase the value of land. About 1690, the rental amounted to 14,000,000*l.*, and the land was worth eighteen years' purchase.—Davenport on the Revenues. The rental of the United Kingdom has been estimated in the present century at 127,000,000*l.* Great anti-rent agitation in Ireland, 1879-81; see Land, etc.

Repeal of the Union, IRELAND. An Irish association was formed with this object under the auspices of Mr. O'Connell, in 1829; see Home Government.

A proclamation of the lord lieutenant prohibited the meetings of a society "leagued for the purpose of procuring a repeal of the union, under the name of the Irish Society for Legal and Legislative Relief, or the Anti-Union Society," 18 Oct. 1830

The commons, by a majority of 484, reject Mr. O'Connell's motion for repeal..... 27 April, 1834

A new association in 1841, 1842, and 1843 became more violent. Assemblies of the lower classes of the people were held in the last-named year, in various parts of Ireland, some of them amounting to 160,000 persons, and called "monster meetings."

A great meeting at Trim, 16 March; other meetings were held at Mullingar, Cork, and Longford, on 14, 21, and 28 May, respectively; at Drogheda, Kilkenny, Mallow, and Dundalk, on 5, 8, 11, and 29 June; at Donnybrook and Balinglass, 3 and 20 July; at Tara, 15 Aug.; at Loughrea, Clifton, and Lismore, 10, 17, and 24 Sept.; and at Mullinghaast..... 1 Oct. 1843

A meeting to be held at Clontarf, on 8 Oct., was prevented by government; and Mr. O'Connell and his chief associates were brought to trial for political conspiracy, 15 Jan. 1844, and convicted 12 Feb.; but the sentence was reversed by the house of lords, 4 Sept.; see Trials.

The association for the repeal of the union continued for some time under the direction of Mr. John O'Connell, but was little regarded.

The total "repeal rent" is said to have amounted to 134,379*l.*

A fruitless attempt was made in Dublin to revive repeal agitation..... 4 Dec. 1860

Reporting. The publication of the debates in parliament is forbidden as a breach of privilege, but was virtually conceded, after a severe struggle, in 1771.* Reporters' galleries were erected in the houses of parliament after the fire of 1834. To the unfettered liberty of reporting we doubtless owe much of our freedom and good government; see under Law. By the verdict for the defendant in the case of Wason v. The Times (for libel), reports of parliamentary debates were decided to be privileged, Nov. 1868. For the attempted exclusion of reporters, see Parliament, 1875. A commons committee on reporting recommend continuance of Hansard's debates with improvement, May, 1879.

"Reptile Bureaucracy," term applied in Germany to certain journalists writing for government pay, 1871 et seq.

Republicans, see Democrats. Sir Charles Dilke, M.P., professed himself a republican at public meetings, and was much applauded, Nov. 1871; but at some places his appearance led to riotous proceedings. His motion for returns respecting the expenditure of the civil list by the queen was negatived in the house of commons (2-276), 19 March, 1872. A national republican conference of delegates was held at Sheffield, 1 Dec. 1872, when a national flag was adopted.

Requiem, a solemn mass, sung on 2 Nov., All-Souls' Day, so called from the introit "Requiem Æternam," etc. Palestrina's Requiem was printed at Rome, 1591; Vittoria's at Madrid, 1605; Mozart's last work was a requiem, 1791.

* Very inaccurate reports of parliamentary debates were inserted in the Gentleman's Magazine and other periodicals in the middle of the last century. Miller, printer of the London Evening Mail, was arrested in the city of London, by order of the house of commons, for publishing the debates, but was discharged by the lord mayor, who for doing this was sent to the Tower, where he remained until the end of the session. No opposition was made to the publication of the debates in the next session, 1772.

Reredos, the screen or decorated portion of the wall behind the altar in a church.

A highly sculptured reredos, designed by sir G. G. Scott, was erected in Exeter cathedral, by subscription..... 1873
 Prebendary Philpotts, the chancellor, and others who objected, brought their objections before the bishop a vintu-on court, on 7 Jan. it was decided that the bishop had jurisdiction in the matter, and he ordered the reredos to be removed, 15 April, 1874. Dean Boyd appealed to the Court of Arches, and sir R. Phillimore reversed the previous decision..... 6 Aug. 1874
 Prebendary Philpotts appealed to the judicial committee of the privy council, who decided that the reredos should remain..... 24 Feb. 1875
 A very rich, sculptured reredos was erected in Trinity Church, New York, in memory of William B. Astor, July, 1877

Resaca de la Palma, BATTLE OF, between the Americans under gen. Taylor and the Mexicans under gen. Arista. The battle occurred on 9 May, 1846, the day after the conflict at Palo Alto (which see). It was shorter, but more sanguinary than that. The Americans lost, in killed and wounded, 110 men. The loss of the Mexicans was estimated at at least 1000, and 100 made prisoners; among the latter was gen. La Vega.

Reserve Forces. In the summer of 1859, acts were passed to provide for the establishment of a military reserve force of men who have been in her majesty's service (not to exceed 20,000), and a volunteer reserve force of seamen not to exceed 50,000. These acts were consolidated and amended in 1867. The reserve forces called out by proclamation, on account of possible war with Russia, 2 April, 1878. About 85,000 good soldiers appeared, and were commended. They were disbanded 31 Aug. 1878.

Restoration, THE, of king Charles II. to the crown of England, after an interregnum of eleven years and four months, between 30 Jan. 1649, when Charles I. was beheaded, and 29 May, 1660, when Charles II. entered London amidst the acclamations of the people. The annual form of prayer, with thanksgiving, then appointed, was ordered to be disused by 22 Vict. c. 2, 25 March, 1849; see France, 1811-15.

Retreat of the TEN THOUSAND GREEKS, who had joined the army of the younger Cyrus in his revolt against his brother, Artaxerxes Mnemon. The Greeks were victors, but Cyrus was defeated and slain at the battle of Cunaxa, 401 B.C. Artaxerxes having enticed the Greek leaders into his power and killed them, Xenophon was called to the command of his countrymen. Under continual alarms from sudden attacks, he led them across rapid rivers, through vast deserts, over the tops of mountains, till he reached the sea. The Greeks returned home after a march of 1155 parasangs or leagues (3465 miles), which was performed in 215 days, after the absence of fifteen months. This retreat has been immortalized by the account given by its conductor, in his "Anabasis Cyri" (Expedition of Cyrus).

Rights, BILL OF. To the PETITION OF RIGHTS, preferred 17 March, 1627-8, Charles I. answered, "I will that right be done according to the laws and customs of the realm." Both houses addressed the king for a fuller answer to their petition of rights, whereupon he gave them an answer less evasive, "Soit droit fait comme il est désiré," 7 June, 1628. The petition thus became a statute, 13 Car. I. c. 1. An important declaration was made by the lords and commons of England to the prince and princess of Orange on 13 Feb. 1689, in an act "declaring the rights and liberties of the subject, and settling the succession of the crown."

Ripon (Yorkshire), an ancient town. About 661 an abbey cell was built here by Eata. Ripon was made a bishopric by archbishop Wilfrid, in 690, but did not endure so. It suffered much by the ravages of the Danes, the Normans (1069), and the Scots (1319 and 1323). The present see was erected 5 Oct. 1836, out of the archdeaconry of York in the West Riding. Income, 4500*l*. The cathedral was under restoration, by sir G. G. Scott; the choir was reopened, 27 Jan. 1869.

BISHOPS.

1836. Charles Thos. Longley, translated to Durham, 1856.
 1856. Robert Bickersteth (PRESENT bishop).

Ritualists, a name given in 1866 to a party in the church of England, formerly termed Puseyites, for endeavoring to give a more imposing character to public worship, by the use of colored vestments, lighted candles, incense, etc., professing to go back to the practices of the church in the time of Edward VI. An exhibition of these things was held during the church congress at York in Oct. 1866, but was not officially connected with it. The practices of the Ritualists (said by Mr. Disraeli to be symbolical of doctrines they were bound to renounce) were censured in several episcopal charges in Dec. 1866; in two reports of the Ritualistic Commission, 19 Aug. 1867, and April, 1868, and by the judicial committee of the privy council on appeal, 23 Dec. 1868; see Church of England, and Trials, 1867-9. At a general convocation of the American Episcopal church, at Philadelphia, 27, 28 Oct. 1868, after a warm discussion on Ritualism, the discussion was adjourned. It was renewed at the convocation 10 Oct. 1874, and the ritualists were decidedly beaten by the evangelical party, a stringent canon on ceremonies being passed 27 Oct. The Public Worship Regulation act was passed 7 Aug. 1874, for the repression of ritualism in England; see Public Worship.

River Raisin is remarkable in history as the place of a foul massacre, on 23 Jan. 1818. Gen. Winchester, with about 800 Americans, was encamped on that river, and at dawn, on 22 Jan., gen. Proctor, with 1500 British and Indians, fell upon them. After a severe action, Winchester surrendered, under promise of protection from the Indians. But Proctor marched off, leaving no guard for the Americans. His Indians returned, and killed and scalped a large number of them. The entire loss of the Americans was 397 killed, 27 wounded, and 35 officers and 487 men made prisoners. The British lost 24 killed and 158 wounded.

Rivers Commissions, first appointed, 1865, Messrs. R. Rawlinson, J. T. Harrison, and prof. Way; second, 1868, sir Wm. Denison, Mr. J. Chalmers Morton, and prof. Frankland.

Rivoli (near Verona, N. Italy). Near here the Austrians defeated the French, 17 Nov. 1796; and were defeated by Bonaparte, 14, 15 Jan. 1797. Massena was made duke of Rivoli for his share in the actions.

Road Club, established in the autumn of 1874, in London, by gentlemen interested in the revival of coaching.

Road Murder. On the night of 29-30 June, 1860, Francis Savile Kent, four years old, was murdered, and his body hidden in a garden water-closet at Road. His sister, Constance Kent (aged sixteen), and the nurse, Elizabeth Gough (the first suspected), were discharged for want of evidence. The coroner was severely blamed for charging the jury improperly, but the Court of Queen's Bench, in Jan. 1861, refused to issue a writ for a new inquiry. Constance Kent, on 25 April, 1865, before sir Thomas Henry, at Bow street, and at her trial at Salisbury, on 21 July following, confessed herself to be guilty of the murder. Her punishment was commuted to penal servitude for life. Road is near Frome, Somerset.

Road Steamers. Mr. R. W. Thomson, of Edinburgh, in 1868, by adding india-rubber to the tires of the wheels of locomotives is considered to have solved the question of steam traction on common roads. Road steamers have been successfully employed in Edinburgh and Leith for drawing heavy wagons up inclined planes, and are adaptable to any draught work. They were tried at Woolwich, 1 Oct. 1870, and reported successful by eminent authorities; and their application to ploughing by lord Dunmore was exhibited 1 Feb. 1871.

Roads, see Roman Roads. The first general repair of the highways of this country was directed about 1285.

Acts were passed for the purpose in 1524 and 1555, followed by others in Elizabeth's and succeeding reigns. Roads through the Highlands of Scotland were begun by gen. Wade in 1726. Loudon Macadam's roads were introduced about 1818. Wooden pavements were tried with partial success in the streets of London: at Whitehall in 1839, and in other streets in 1840; asphalt pavement soon after. An act "for the better management of the highways" was passed in 1862 after much opposition; another, 16 Aug. 1878, also regulated the use of locomotives on roads. Steam road-rollers were tried in 1867; used in London, 18 March, 1868; see Macadamizing, Tolls, and Wooden Pavements.

Roanoke Island (North Carolina, U. S.), discovered by sir Walter Raleigh, 1584, and settled by him, 1585, without success. Other settlers also failed.—BATTLE OF, Feb. 8, 1862. Roanoke Island was occupied by gen. Wise with 2500 men. On the north shore were three forts—Barton, Hugger, and Blanchard. An expedition for the capture of this island started from Hampton Roads, 11 Jan. The fleet, consisting of 20 vessels, 50 guns, was commanded by flag-officer L. M. Goldsborough; the military force, nearly 15,000 strong, by gen. A. E. Burnside. The forts were bombarded 7 Feb., and under cover of this bombardment the troops were landed. On the 8th, after a short conflict, Wise's command was surrendered. The national loss in all amounted to 260. On the confederate side, a son of gen. Wise was killed.

Roasting Alive. An early instance is that of Bochoris, king of Egypt, by order of Sabacon of Ethiopia, 737 B.C.—Lenglet. Sir John Oldcastle, lord Cobham, was thus put to death in 1418, and Michael Servetus for heresy, at Geneva, 27 Oct. 1553; see Burning Alive and Martyrs.

Robbers were punished with death by Edmund I.'s laws, which directed that the eldest robber should be hanged. Remarkable robbers in England were Robin Hood, 1189 (see Robin Hood), and Claud Du Val, "executed at Tyburn," says an historian, quaintly, "to the great grief of the women," Jan. 1670. In Ireland, the famous MacCabe was hanged at Naas, 19 Aug. 1691. Galloping Hogan, the rapparee, flourished at this period. Freney, the celebrated highwayman, surrendered himself, 10 May, 1749. The accomplished Barrington was transported, 22 Sept. 1790; see Trials.

Robin Hood, captain of a band of robbers, in Sherwood forest, Nottinghamshire; traditionally reported to have been the earl of Huntingdon, disgraced and banished the court by Richard I. at his accession (1189). Robin Hood and Little John and their band are said to have continued their depredations till 1247, when Robin died.—Stowe.

"Robinson Crusoe," by Daniel De Foe; the first part appeared in 1719; see Juan Fernandez. Three old ladies, Mary Ann, Jane Amelia, and Sarah Frances De Foe, lineally descended from De Foe, pensioned by the queen, May, 1877.

Rocheport (W. France), a seaport on the Charente. The port was made by Louis XIV. in 1666. In Aix-roads or Basque-roads, near Rocheport, capt. lord Cochrane attacked the French fleet and destroyed four ships, 11, 12 April, 1809. Near Rocheport, the emperor Napoleon surrendered himself to capt. Maitland of the Bellerophon, 15 July, 1815.

Rochelle (W. France), a seaport on the Atlantic, belonging to the English for some time, but finally surrendered to the French leader, Du Guesclin, in 1372. As a stronghold of the Calvinist party, it was vainly besieged by the duke of Anjou in 1573; and was taken after a siege of thirteen months, by cardinal Richelieu, in 1628. The duke of Buckingham was sent with a fleet and army to relieve it; but the citizens declined to admit him. He attacked the Isle of Rhé, near Rochelle, and failed, 22 July, 1627. He was repulsed 8 Nov. following. A conspiracy here, in 1822, caused loss of life to serg. Bories and others.

Rochester, in Kent, the Roman Durobrivæ. The bishopric, founded by Augustin, 604, is the next in age to Canterbury. The first cathedral was erected by Ethelbert, king of Kent. St. Justus was bishop in 604. Alterations were made in the diocese in 1845. Rochester is valued in the king's books at 358*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* per annum. Present income, 5000*l.* The cathedral reopened after repairs of the choir, 11 June, 1875.

* Charles Watson Wentworth, marquess of Rockingham, was born 13 May, 1730; succeeded his father as marquess, 1750. He died without issue, 1 July, 1782; and his estates passed to his nephew, earl Fitzwilliam.

before Ascension Day, received its title from the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following it, called Rogation days, derived from the Latin rogare, to beseech. Extraordinary prayers and supplications for these three days are said to have been appointed in the third century, as a preparation for the devout observance of our Saviour's ascension on the next day succeeding to them, denominated Holy Thursday or Ascension Day. The whole week in which these days happen is styled Rogation Week; and in some parts it is still known by the other names of Crop Week, Grass Week, and Procession Week. The perambulations of parishes have usually been made in this week.

Rohan, an illustrious family, descended from the ancient sovereigns of Brittany. Henri de Rohan, son-in-law of the great Sully, after the death of Henry IV. (14 May, 1610), became head of the Protestant party, and sustained three wars against Louis XIII. He eventually entered the service of the duke of Saxe-Weimar, and died of wounds received in battle in 1638. Of this family was the cardinal de Rohan; see Diamond Necklace.

Rohilkund, a tract of country, N.E. India, was conquered by the Rohillas, an Afghan tribe, who settled here about 1747. After aiding the sovereign of Oude to overcome the Mahrattas, they were treated with much treachery by him, and nearly exterminated. Rohilkund was ceded to the British in 1801. After the great mutiny, Rohilkund was tranquillized in July, 1858.

Rolls' Chapel (London), founded by Henry III., about 1233, for receiving Jewish rabbis converted to Christianity. On the banishment of the Jews in 1290, the buildings now called the Rolls, and the chapel, were annexed by patent to the office of the keeper or master of the rolls of chancery, from which circumstance they took their name. A number of public records from the time of Richard III., kept in presses in this chapel, have been removed to the Record Office (which see).

Rolt's Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42 (1862), relates to the Chancery Court.

Romagna, a province of the papal states, comprised in the legations of Forlì and Ravenna. It was conquered by the Lombards; but taken from them by Pepin, and given to the pope, 753. Caesar Borgia held it as a duchy in 1501, but lost it in 1503. In 1859 the Romagna threw off the temporal authority of the pope, and declared itself subject to the king of Sardinia, who accepted it in March, 1860. It now forms part of the province of Emilia, in the new kingdom of Italy. Population (1860), 1,014,582; see Rome.

Romainville and Belleville, heights near Paris, where Joseph Bonaparte, Mortier, and Marmont were defeated by the allies after a vigorous resistance, 30 March, 1814. The next day Paris capitulated.

Roman Catholics, ROMANISTS and PAPISTS. Their religion was the established one in Britain till the Reformation. Since then many laws were made against them, which have been repealed; see Rome, Religion, Leagues, Myrmouth. Among other disabilities, Roman Catholics were excluded from corporate offices, 1667; from parliament, 1691; forbidden to marry Protestants, 1708; to possess arms, 1695, etc.

Roman Roads in England. Our historians maintain, but are mistaken, that there were but four of these roads.—Camden. "The Romans," says Isidore, "made roads almost all over the world, to have their marches in a straight line, and to employ the people;" and criminals were frequently condemned to work at such roads, as we learn from Suetonius, in his Life of Caligula. They were commenced and completed at various periods, between the second and fourth centuries, and the Roman soldiery were employed in making them, that inactivity might not give them an opportunity to raise disturbances.—Bede.

1st, WATLING STREET, so named from Vitellianus, who is supposed to have directed it, the Britons calling him in their language Guetalin (from Kent to Cardigan Bay).
2d, IKENELD, or IKENILD STREET, from its beginning among the Iceni (from St. David's to Tynemouth).
3d, FOSSÆ, or FOSSE WAY, probably from its having been defended by a fosse on both sides (from Cornwall to Lincoln).
4th, ERMIN STREET, from Irminsul, a German word, meaning Mercury, whom our German ancestors worshipped under that name (from St. David's to Southampton).

Roman Walls. One was erected by Agricola (79 to 85) to defend Britain from the incursions of the Picts and Scots. The first wall extended from the Tyne to the Solway Frith (80 miles); the second from the Frith of Forth, near Edinburgh, to the Frith of Clyde, near Dumbarton (36 miles). The former was renewed and strengthened by the emperor Adrian (121), and by Septimius Severus (208). It commenced at Bowness, near Carlisle, and ended at Wallsend, near Newcastle. It had battlements and towers to contain soldiers. The more northern wall was renewed by Lollius Urbicus, in the reign of Antoninus Pius, about 140. Many remains of these walls still exist, particularly of the southern one; see Bruce's "Roman Wall," published 1833-1868.

Romance, originally a composition in the Romance or Provençal idiom. The term in the middle ages was extended to narrative poetry in general. Heliodorus, a bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, about 398, was the author of Æthiopica (relating to the loves of Theagenes and Charicleia), the first work in this species of writing. The first part of the "Roman de la Rose" was written by Guillaume de Lorres (1226-70); the second, a separate poem, by Jean de Meung (1285-1314); the "Decameron" of Boccaccio was published 1358; "Don Quixote," by Cervantes, 1605; "Gil Blas," by Le Sage, 1715. Dunlop's "History of Fiction" published 1814; see English Authors and "Reynard the Fox."

Rome. The foundation of the city, by Romulus, was laid on 20 April,* according to Varro, in the year 3961 of the Julian period (3251 years after the creation of the world, 753 years before the birth of Christ, 431 years after the Trojan war, and in the fourth year of the sixth Olympiad. Other dates given: Cato, 751; Polybius, 750; Fabius Pictor, 747; Cincius, 728 B.C.). The Romans conquered nearly the whole of the then known world. In the time of Julius Cæsar, the empire was bounded by the Euphrates, Taurus, and Armenia on the east; by Æthiopia on the south; by the Danube on the north; and by the Atlantic on the west. Numerous ecclesiastical councils have been held at Rome, from 197 to 1869-70. Population, 1872, about 240,000; 1877, 250,000. Chiefly through the exertions of Mr. John Henry Parker of Oxford, the Roman exploration fund was established, for the preservation of ancient architectural remains. His "Archæology of Rome" (with many photographs) published 1874-8. The Italian government votes 1200*l.* a year for a similar purpose.

* In its original state, Rome was but a small castle on the summit of Mount Palatine; and the founder, to give his followers the appearance of a nation or a barbarian horde, was obliged to erect a standard as a common asylum for criminals, debtors, or murderers, who fled from their native country to avoid the punishment which attended them. From such an assemblage a numerous body was soon collected, and before the death of the founder the Romans had covered with their habitations the Palatine, Capitoline, Aventine, and Equiline hills, with Mounts Cælius and Quirinalis.

Roncesvalles (in the Pyrenees), where, it is said, Charlemagne's paladin, Roland, or Orlando, was sur-prised, defeated, and slain by the Gascons, 778. On 25 July, 1813, marshal Soult was defeated here by the British entering France.

Roof. The largest in the world was said to be that over a riding-school at Moscow, erected in 1791, being 235 feet in span. The roof of the London station of the Midland railway, in Euston road, London, N.W., is 240 feet wide, 600 feet long, 125 feet high. The extent of ground covered is about 165,000 square feet.

Rope-making Machine. One was patented by Richard March in 1784, and by Edmd. Cartwright in 1792. Many improvements have been made since.

Rorke's Drift, boundary of British territory of Natal, in South Africa and Zululand. Behind extem-porized trenches, a handful of British soldiers here suc-cessfully resisted a large Zulu army, and probably saved the colony, 22 Jan. 1879; see Zululand.

Rosamond's Bower. Rosamond was daughter of lord Clifford, and mistress of Henry II., about 1154. A conspiracy against her was formed by the queen, prince Henry, and the king's other sons. Henry kept her in a labyrinth at Woodstock, where his queen, Eleanor, it is said, discovered her apartments by the clew of a silk thread, and poisoned her. She was buried at Godstow church, from whence Hugh, bishop of Lincoln, had her ashes removed, 1191.

Rosary, see Beads.

In a brief of pope Pius IX., 30 Sept. 1852, it was asserted that forty repetitions in a rosary of forty beads of "Sweet Heart of Mary, be my salvation!" will obtain a large number of days of indulgence for souls in purgatory (23,300 days cal-culated).

Rosas (N.E. Spain), BAY OF, where a brilliant naval action was fought by the boats of the Tigre, Cumber-land, Volontaire, Apollo, Topaze, Philomel, Scout, and Tuscan, led by lieut. John Tailour (of the Tigre), which ended in the capture or destruction of eleven armed vessels in the bay, 1 Nov. 1809; for which purpose lord Collingwood had organized the expedition commanded by capt. Hallowell. Rosas was gallantly defended by lord Cochrane, 27 Nov.; but surrendered, 4 Dec. 1809.

Here Charles VI. of France beat the Flemings, who had revolted against their count, 27 Nov. 1382.—At ROSBACH in Prussia a great battle was fought between the Prussians, commanded by Frederick the Great, and the combined army of French and Austrians, in which the latter were defeated with severe loss, 5 Nov. 1757.

"Roscius, Infant," Wm. Henry West Betty, born 13 Sept. 1791. After acting at Belfast, 16 Aug. 1803, and at other places, with much applause, he appeared at Covent Garden, 1 Dec. 1803, as Selim, in "Barbarossa," and is said to have gained in his first season 17,210*l*.

After several years' retirement, he reappeared, but soon left the stage, not being successful. He retired on the fortune he had amassed, and died, Aug. 1874 His portrait may be seen at the Garrick Club.

Rose, see under Flowers. The rose, a symbol of silence, gave rise to the phrase sub rosa, "under the rose;" said, by Italian writers, to have risen from the circumstance of the pope's presenting consecrated roses, which were placed over the confessionals at Rome, to denote secrecy, 1526. The pope sent a golden rose to the queen of Spain, which was given to her with much solemnity, 8 Feb. 1868. A "national rose society" opened its first annual show, St. James's Hall, 4 July, 1877.

Roses, WARS OF THE, between the Lancastrians (who chose the red rose as their emblem) and the York-ists (who chose the white rose), 1455-85. It is stated that in the Wars of the Roses there perished 12 princes of the blood, 200 nobles, and 100,000 gentry and com-mon people. The union of the roses was effected in the marriage of Henry VII. with the princess Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV., 1486.

Richard II., who succeeded his grandfather Edward III. in 1377, was deposed and succeeded in 1399 by his cousin Henry IV. (son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lan-caster, the fourth son of Edward III.), in prejudice to the right of Roger Mortimer (grandson of Lionel, duke of Clarence, Edward's third son), who was declared presumptive heir to the throne in 1385

Rose's Act, 33 Geo. III. c. 54 (1793) brought bene-fit societies under the control of government.

Rosetta (in Egypt), taken by the French in 1798; and by the British and Turks, 19 April, 1801. The Turks repulsed the British here, 22 April, 1807. Near Rosetta was fought the battle of the Nile, 1 Aug. 1798; see Nile. Mehemet Ali rendered great service to his country by constructing a canal between Rosetta and Alexandria.

The Rosetta Stone, discovered by the French in 1799, was brought from Rosetta in a French vessel, from whence it was taken by Mr. Wm. R. Hamilton, who deposited it in the British Museum. In 1841, Mr. Letroune published the text and a translation of the Greek inscription. It is a piece of black basalt, about 3 feet long and 2½ feet wide, with an inscription in three languages—viz., hieroglyphics, modified hieroglyphics (enchorial), and Greek, setting forth the praises of Ptolemy Euphronus (about 196 B.C.). It has been studied by Dr. T. Young and Champollion.

Rosicrucians, a sect of mystical philosophers who appeared in Germany in the fourteenth century, and again early in the seventeenth century, occasioned much controversy. The "Confessio Rosæ Crucis," 1615, is attributed to Valentine Andreas. They swore fidelity, promised secrecy, and wrote hieroglyphically, and affirmed that the ancient philosophers of Egypt, the Chaldeans, Magi of Persia, and Gymnosophists of the Indies taught the same doctrine.

Ross, Cork (S. Ireland), a bishopric founded, it is supposed, by St. Fachnan, in the beginning of the sixth century. It was united to Cork in 1340; and Cloyne to both, by the Irish Church Temporalities act (1833); see Bishops, New Ross.

Rota Club, a society who met at Miles's Coffee-house, in New Palace Yard, Westminster, during the administration of Oliver Cromwell; their plan was that all the great officers of state should be chosen by ballot; and that a certain number of members of parliament should be changed annually by rotation, from whence they took their title. Sir William Petty was one of the members in 1659.—Biog. Brit.

Rothschild Family. Meyer Amschel, or Anselm, was born at No. 118 Judengasse (Jew lane), Frankfurt, in 1713. In 1772 he began business as a money-lender and dealer in old coins, in the same house, over which he placed the sign of the red shield (in German, Roth Schild). Having had dealings with the landgrave of Hesse, that prince intrusted him with his treasure (said to have been 250,000*l.*) in 1806, when the French held his country. With this sum as capital, Anselm traded and made a large fortune, and restored the 250,000*l.* to the landgrave in 1815. At his death his sons continued the business as partners. His son Nathan began at Manchester in 1798, removed to London in 1803, and died immensely rich, 28 July, 1836. The baron, James, head of the family, died at Paris, 15 Nov. 1868.

Rotterdam, the second city in Holland. Its importance dates from the thirteenth century. The commerce of Antwerp was transferred to it in 1509. In 1572, Rotterdam was taken by the Spaniards by stratagem, and cruelly treated. It suffered much from the French revolutionary wars, and from inundations in 1775 and 1825. Desiderius Erasmus was born here in 1467. The museum and picture-gallery of Rotterdam were destroyed at the fire of the Schieland palace, 16 Feb. 1861.

Rouen (N. France), an archbishopric, 260, became the capital of Normandy in the tenth century. It was held by the English kings till 1204; and was retaken by Henry V., 19 Jan. 1419. Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, was burned here, 30 May, 1431. It was taken by Charles VII. of France in 1449; and by the duke of Guise from the Huguenots, Oct. 1562 and 1591. Rouen, after slight conflicts, 4, 5, Dec. 1870, surrendered to gen. Von Goben, 6 Dec. It was ordered to pay a contribution of 17,000,000 francs.

The theatre destroyed by fire; many persons injured, and 13 killed. 25 April, 1876

Roundheads. In the civil war which began in 1642, the adherents of Charles I. were called Cavaliers, and the friends of the parliament Roundheads. The term, it is said, arose from those persons who had a round bowl or dish put upon their heads, and their hair cut to the edge of the bowl; see Cavaliers.

On 16 Oct. 1873, Mr. Reginald Herbert undertook to row on the Thames, from Maidenhead to Westminster bridge (47 miles 3 furlongs), in twelve hours, for 1000*l*. He did it in 10 h. 2 m. 19 sec.

Rowland Hill Memorial Fund, see Mansion House. Mr. W. D. Keyworth was chosen to make a bust of sir Rowland Hill for Westminster abbey, March, 1881. The establishment of a benevolent fund for the widows and orphans of postmen was proposed.

Roxburghe Club was instituted in 1812 by earl Spencer, for the republication of rare books or unpublished MSS., in memory of John, duke of Roxburghe.

Royal Academy. A society of artists met in St. Peter's court, St. Martin's lane, about 1739, which Hogarth established as the Society of Incorporated Artists, who held their first exhibition at the Society of Arts, Adelphi, 21 April, 1760. From this sprang the Royal Academy, in consequence of a dispute between the directors and the fellows. On 10 Dec. 1768, the institution of the present Royal Academy was completed under the patronage of George III.; and sir Joshua Reynolds, knighted on the occasion, was appointed its first president.—Leigh. The first exhibition of the academicians (at Pall Mall) was on 26 April, 1769, when 136 works appeared. In 1771 the king granted them apartments in old Somerset House, and afterwards, in 1780, in new Somerset House, where they remained till 1838, when they removed to the National Gallery. Among the professors have been Johnson, Gibbon, Goldsmith, Macaulay, and Hallam. Turner, the painter, gave funds to the academy for the award of a medal triennially for landscape painting, which was awarded to Mr. N. O. Lupton in 1857. A commission of inquiry into the affairs of the academy, appointed in 1862, recommended various changes in July, 1863, which were carried into effect. The hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the academy was celebrated 10 Dec. 1868. The Royal Academy held its first exhibition in the new building, 3 May, 1869. The annual exhibition of pictures by the old masters, with some British, began 3 Jan. 1870. The money received has been devoted to the establishment of a professorship of chemistry and a laboratory, etc. In 1874 the exhibition included many of Landseer's pictures.

Sir Francis Chantrey, sculptor, died 25 Nov. 1841. At the death of his wife, Jan. 1875, in conformity with his will, about 3000*l*. a year accrued to the academy for the purchase of works of art for the nation and other purposes. The gallery containing the sculptures of John Gibson, bequeathed by him, was opened free, 27 Nov. 1874.

Royal Assent. If the king assent to a public bill, the clerk of the parliament declares in Norman French, “Le roy le veut,” the king wills it so to be. If the king refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of “Le roy s'aviser,” the king will consider it.—Hale. By the statute 33 Hen. VIII., 1541, the king may give his assent by letters-patent.—Blackstone's Com.

Royal Exchange (Cambium Regis), London. The foundation of the original edifice was laid by sir Thomas Gresham, 7 June, 1566, on the site of the ancient Tun prison. Queen Elizabeth opened it on 28 Jan. 1571, and her herald named it the Royal Exchange.—Hume. It was totally destroyed by the great fire, Sept. 1666. Charles II. laid the foundation-stone of the next edifice, 23 Oct. 1667, which was completed by Mr. Hawkesmore, a pupil of sir Christopher Wren, in about three years; it was repaired and beautified in 1769. This also was burned, 10 Jan. 1838. The new Royal Exchange, erected under the direction of Mr. Tite, was opened by the queen 28 Oct. 1844.—The ROYAL EXCHANGE, Dublin, commenced 1769, opened 1779.

“Royal George,” a man-of-war of 108 guns, lost off Spithead. While keeled over to repair a pipe, a sudden gust of wind washed the sea into her ports, and she went down. The rear-admiral Kempenfeldt, the crew, many marines, women, and Jews, in all about 600 persons, were drowned, 29 Aug. 1782. By the use of the diving-bell, the ship, embedded in the deep, was surveyed in May, 1817 et seq. Portions of the vessel and its cargo were brought up in 1839-42, under the superintendence of sir Charles Pasley, when gunpowder was ignited by the agency of electricity.

Royal Institution of GREAT BRITAIN, the earliest of the kind in London, was founded 9 March, 1799, by count Rumford, sir Joseph Banks, earls Spencer and Morton, and several other noblemen and gentlemen. It received the immediate patronage of George III., and was incorporated 13 Jan. 1800, by royal charter, as “The Royal Institution of Great Britain, for the diffusing knowledge, and facilitating the general introduction of useful mechanical inventions and improvements, and for teaching, by courses of philosophical lectures and experiments, the application of science to the common purposes of life.” It was enlarged and extended by an act of parliament in 1810; the original plan, as drawn up by count Rumford in 1799, having been considerably modified. The members are elected by ballot, and pay ten guineas on admission, and five guineas annually, or a composition of sixty guineas. Members, July, 1881, 1054. “The Royal Institution, its Founder, and its First Professors,” by Dr. Bence Jones, hon. sec., published 1871.

The HORSE (in Albemarle street, Piccadilly) was purchased in June, 1799, and the present front was added by subscription in 1838. The Lecture theatre was erected in 1803, under the superintendence of Mr. T. Webster.

The LABORATORY established in 1800; was rebuilt, with the modern improvements, 1872.

The LIBRARY was commenced in 1803, by the munificent subscriptions of the proprietors of the institution. It now (1881) comprises about 42,000 volumes. Classified catalogues (by W. Harris) were published in 1809 and 1821; new ones (by B. Vincent) in 1857 and 1881.

The MUSEUM contains original philosophical apparatus of Young, Cavendish, Davy, and Faraday.

The first LACRUM was delivered 4 March, 1801, by Dr. Garnett, he being the first professor of natural philosophy and chemistry.

In 1802 he was succeeded by Dr. Thomas Young, so celebrated for his researches in optics, resulting in the discovery of the interference of light, and the establishment of the theory of undulation. His “Lectures on Natural Philosophy and the Mechanical Arts,” first published in 1807, are still considered a text-book of physical science. His works on antiquarian literature (hieroglyphic inscriptions, etc.) are also highly esteemed.

In Feb. 1801, Mr. (afterwards sir Humphry) Davy was engaged as assistant lecturer and director of the laboratory, and on 31 May, 1802, he was appointed professor of chemistry. His lectures were eminently successful, and his discoveries in chemistry and electricity have immortalized his name, and conferred honor on the institution. By him the alkalis potassium and sodium were discovered in 1807; the nature of chlorine was determined in 1810, and the safety-lamp invented in 1815.

William Thomas Brande succeeded sir Humphry as professor of chemistry in 1813, and held that office till his resignation in 1852, since which time, till his death (Feb. 1866), he was hon. professor. From 1816 to 1850 he delivered, in the laboratory of this institution, his celebrated chemical lectures to students.

In 1813 Michael Faraday (born 22 Sept. 1791), on the recommendation of sir H. Davy, was engaged as assistant in the laboratory, and in 1825 as its director; in 1827 he became one of the permanent lecturers of the institution. In 1820 he commenced those researches in electricity and magnetism which form an era in the history of science. In 1823-4 he discovered the condensability of chlorine and other gases; in 1831 he obtained electricity from the magnet; in 1845 he exhibited the twofold magnetism of matter, comprehending all known substances, the magnetism of gases, flame, etc.; in 1850 he published his researches on atmospheric magnetism; died 25 Aug. 1867.

John Tyndall, F.R.S., the present professor of natural philosophy, first elected in July, 1833, is eminent for his researches on magnetism, heat, glaciers, etc.

Edmund Frankland, F.R.S., professor of chemistry, 1863-8, is eminent for his discoveries in organic chemistry.

In 1804, sir J. St. Aubyn and other gentlemen proposed to form a school of MINES at this institution; but the plan, although warmly supported by the members, was withdrawn for want of encouragement by the government and by mining proprietors.

The WEEKLY EVENING MEETINGS, on the Fridays from January to June, as now arranged, commenced in 1826. Discourses (of which abstracts are printed) are given at these meetings by the professors of the institution, and other eminent scientific men.

ENDOWMENTS. In 1833, John Fuller, esq., of Rosehill, endowed two professorships, of chemistry and physiology; the former bestowed on Mr. Faraday for life; succeeded by Dr. Wm. Odling, 1868-73; by Dr. John Hall Gladstone, 1874; by James Dewar, 1877. The latter on Dr. Roget for three years, to be filled up afterwards by triennial election.—The Fullarian professors of physiology have been R. E. Grant, T. R. Jones, W. B. Carpenter, W. W. Gull, T. W. Jones, T. H. Huxley (twice), R. Owen, J. Marshall, Michael Foster, Wm. Rutherford, Alfred H. Garrod, and E. A. Schafer (1878-81).—In 1828, Mrs. Acton gave 1000*l.* to be invested for paying every seven years 100 guineas for the best essay on the beneficence of the Almighty, as illustrative of a department of science; which have been awarded—in 1844 to Mr. G. F. Fowkes; in 1851 to Mr. T. Wharton Jones; in 1858 no award was made; in 1865 to Mr. George Warrington; in 1872 to rev. George Henslow and B. Thompson Lowne; in 1879 to Mr. G. T. Boulger.

The "Fund for the Promotion of Experimental Researches" was founded on 6 July, 1863, by sir Henry Holland, professor Faraday, sir R. I. Murchison, Dr. Bence Jones, and others.

The first officers were sir Joseph Banks, president, till the charter was granted, afterwards the earl of Winchilsea; Mr. (afterwards sir Thomas) Bernard, treasurer; rev. Dr. Samuel Glasse, secretary.—Algernon, duke of Northumberland, K.G., elected president, 1842; succeeded by sir Henry Holland in 1865 (died 27 Oct. 1873); by Algernon George, duke of Northumberland, 1873. W. Pole, esq., treasurer, elected 1849; succeeded by Wm. Spottiswoode, esq., in 1865; by George Busk, esq., 1873. The rev. John Barlow, secretary, elected 1842; succeeded by Henry Bence Jones, M.D., 1860; by Wm. Spottiswoode, 1873; by Warren de la Rue, 1879. Librarians: Wm. Harris, 1803-23; S. Weller Singer, 1826-35; Wm. Mason, 1835-48; Benjamin Vincent, 1849.

Royal Society (London). In 1645 several learned men met in London to discuss philosophical questions and report experiments; the Norman Organon of Bacon, published in 1620, having given great impulse to such pursuits. Some of them (Drs. Wilkins, Wallis, etc.), about 1648-9, removed to Oxford, and with Dr. (afterwards bishop) Seth Ward, the hon. Robert Boyle, Dr. (afterwards sir) W. Petty, and several doctors of divinity and physic, frequently assembled in the apartments of Dr. Wilkins, in Wadham College, Oxford. They formed what has been called the Philosophical Society of Oxford, which only lasted till 1690. The members were, about 1658, called to various parts of the kingdom, on account of their respective professions; and the majority coming to London, constantly attended the lectures at Gresham College, and met occasionally till the death of Oliver Cromwell, 3 Sept. 1658; see Societies.

The society was organized in 1660, and constituted by Charles II. a body politic and corporate, by the appellation of "The President, Council, and Fellowship of the Royal Society of London, for Improving Natural Knowledge," 22 April, 1662. Evelyn records the first anniversary meeting, St. Andrew's day, 30 Nov. 1663.

The Philosophical Transactions began 6 March, 1664-5.

In 1668 Newton invented his reflecting telescope (now in the possession of the society), and on 28 April, 1686, presented to the society the MS. of his Principia, which the council ordered to be printed. This was done under the superintendence and at the expense of Halley the astronomer, at that time clerk to the society.

The society met for some years at Gresham College, and afterwards at Arundel House (1666), where it came into possession of a valuable library, presented by Mr. Howard, grandson of its collector, the earl of Arundel. After various changes the fellows returned to Gresham College, where they remained till their removal to Crane court, in a house purchased by themselves, 8 Nov. 1710.

The Bakerian lecture was established by Henry Baker, 1774. The first Copley medal was awarded to Stephen Gray in 1731; the royal medal to John Dalton, 1826; the Rumford medal (instituted in 1797) to count Rumford himself in 1800.

The society remove to apartments granted them in Somerset House, 1780; to apartments in Burlington House, Piccadilly, 1857.

Parliament votes annually 1000*l.* to the Royal Society for scientific purposes.

Regulations made by which only fifteen fellows are to be annually elected, who pay ten pounds on admission, and four pounds annually, or a composition of sixty pounds, March, 1847.

In consequence, the number of fellows was reduced from 839 in 1847, to 626 in 1866; to 667 in 1875; to 552 in 1877.

The entrance fee abolished, and the annual payment reduced to 3*l.*, announced, Nov. 1878.

The "Royal Society Scientific Fund" was founded in imitation of the "Literary Fund" in 1859; see Scientific Fund. The Davy medal (which see) first awarded, Nov. 1877.

Rubicon, a small river flowing into the Adriatic sea, separated Cisalpine Gaul from Italy proper. Roman generals were forbidden to pass this river at the head of an army. Julius Cæsar did so, Jan. 49 a.c., and thereby began a revolt and deadly civil war.

Rubidium, an alkaline metal, discovered by Bunsen by means of the spectrum analysis, and made known in 1861.

Rubrics, directions in church offices, often printed in red. New ones for the English service agreed to by convocation, 4 July, 1879.

Ruffles became fashionable about 1520; and went out about 1790.

Rugby School (Warwickshire), was founded in 1567 by Lawrence Sheriff, a London tradesman; its arrangements were affected by the Public Schools act 1868. Dr. Thomas Arnold, the historian, entered on the duties of head-master here in August, 1828, and under him the school greatly prospered. He died 12 June, 1842; see Rugby.

Dr. H. Hayman, one of his successors, was opposed by the masters of the school, and after much discussion and discussion, was dismissed by the trustees, Dec. 1873, and Dr

Jex Blake elected in his room, Feb. 1874. Vice-chancellor Malins decided against Dr. Hayman in his attempt to set aside his dismissal, but expressed his own opinion on "the grievous hardship of Dr. Hayman's case," 21 March, 1874. Mr. Disraeli, the premier, presented Dr. Hayman to the living of Aldingham, Lancaster, April, 1874.

Ruling Machines, used for ruling paper with faint lines, for merchants' account-books, etc. They were invented by an ingenious Dutchman, resident in London, in 1782, and were subsequently greatly improved by Woodmason, Payne, Brown, and others. They were improved in Scotland in 1803. An invention has lately rendered account-books perfect by the numbering of the pages with types, instead of the numbers being written by a pen, so that a page cannot be torn out from them without being discovered.

Rum (French rhum), ardent spirit distilled from sugar lees and molasses, deriving its peculiar flavor from a volatile oil. Rum is principally made in the West Indies. The duty (since 1858) on colonial rum imported into the United Kingdom is 8s. 2d. per gallon. The duty on rum to be employed as methylated spirits was reduced in 1863.

Russell Institution (Great Ceram street, London) was founded in 1808 by sir Samuel Romilly, Francis Horner, Dr. Mason Good, Henry Hallam, sir James Scarlett (since lord Abinger), and others. The building comprises a library, news-room, billiard-room, etc.

Russell Trial. William, lord Russell's trial for complicity in the Rye-house plot was marked by a most touching scene. When he requested to have some one near him to take notes to help his memory, he was answered that any of his attendants might assist him, upon which he said, "My wife is here, and will do it for me." He was beheaded in Lincoln's-inn fields, 21 July, 1688. Lady Russell survived him forty years, dying 29 Sept. 1723, in her eighty-seventh year. His attainder was reversed, 1 Will. III. 1689.

Russia, the eastern part of ancient Sarmatia. The name is generally derived from the Roxolani, a Slavonic tribe. Ruric, a Varangian chief, appears to have been the first to establish a government, 862. His descendants ruled amid many vicissitudes till 1598. The progress of the Russian power under Peter the Great and Catherine II. is unequalled for rapidity in the history of the world. The established religion of Russia is the Greek church, with toleration of other sects, even Mahometans. By an imperial ukase in 1802, six universities were established—viz., at St. Petersburg, Moscow, Wilna, Dorpat (in Livonia), Charcov, and Kasan; but literature made little progress till the present century, the native publications being very few, and the best books being translations. The Russian language, though not devoid of elegance, is, to a foreigner, of very difficult pronunciation: the number of letters and diphthongs is forty-two. The population of the empire in 1867, 82,159,630; in 1872, about 85,685,945; in 1877 (estimated), 86,952,247. By the first Russian budget (1862), the estimated revenue was 84,500,000*l.*; expenditure, 87,850,000*l.* Besides about 500 cathedrals, it has about 85,000 churches (Greek church, which see).

Russia Company, see Russia, 1553-4; see America.

Russo-Turkish War.* The Russian and French governments having each taken a side in the dispute between the Greek and Latin churches as to the exclusive possession of the Holy Places (which see) in Palestine, the Porte advised the formation of a mixed commission, which decided in favor of the Greeks; and a firman was promulgated accordingly, 9 March, 1853. To this decision the French acceded, although dissatisfied.

- The Russians make further claims, and prince Menschikoff (who arrived at Constantinople 28 Feb. 1853), by various notes (between 22 March and 18 May) demands that a convention should be signed by the sultan granting to the czar such a protectorate over the Greek Christians in Turkey as the sultan considered inimical to his own authority. . . . 22 March-18 May, 1853

* In 1844, when the czar was in England, he conversed with the duke of Wellington and lord Aberdeen (whom he had known many years) respecting the dissolution of the Turkish empire; and on his return he embodied his views in a memorandum drawn up by count Nesselrode, which was transmitted to London, but kept secret till March, 1854. In January and February of that year the czar had several conversations on the subject with the British envoy at St. Petersburg, sir G. H. Seymour, in one of which (Jan. 14) he compared Turkey to a "black man" in a state of decrepitude, on the point of death, and made proposals to the British government as to the disposal of his property. He stated frankly that he would not permit the British to establish themselves at Constantinople; but said, in another conversation, he would not object to their possessing Egypt. The purport of these conversations was conveyed in despatches to lord John Russell, who replied that the British government declined to make any provision for the contingency of the fall of Turkey. The czar made similar proposals to the French government with the same result.

Rustchuk, Turkish town on the Danube, one of the "quadrilateral" fortresses lost to Turkey with Bulgaria by treaty of Berlin, 18 July, 1878.

Ruthenium, a rare metal, discovered in the ore of platinum by M. Claus in 1845.

Rutherford's Act, Lord (18 and 14 Vict. c. 86), for simplifying law proceedings in Scotland, passed 1850.

Ruthven, RAID OF, a term applied to the seizure of the person of James VI. of Scotland by William Ruthven, earl of Gowrie, and other nobles, in 1582, to compel the king to dismiss his favorites, Arran and Lennox. Ostensibly for this, Gowrie was judicially put to death by his two opponents in 1584.

Rutland, Statute of, 10 or 12 Edw. I. 1282 or 1284.

Rye-house Plot, a plot (some think pretended) to secure the succession of the duke of Monmouth to the throne in preference to the duke of York (afterwards James II.), a Roman Catholic. Some of the conspirators are said to have projected the assassination of the king, Charles II., and his brother. This design is said to have been frustrated by the king's house at Newmarket accidentally taking fire, which hastened the royal party away eight days before the plot was to take effect, 22 March, 1683; see Newmarket. The plot was discovered 12 June following. Lord William Russell on 21 July, and Algernon Sidney on 7 Dec. following, suffered death for being concerned in this conspiracy. The name was derived from the conspirators' place of meeting, the Rye-house at Broxbourne, Hertfordshire.

Ryswick (Holland), where the celebrated peace was concluded between England, France, Spain, and Holland, signed, by their representatives, 20 Sept., and by the emperor of Germany, 30 Oct. 1697.

S.

Saalfeld (Saxony, N. Germany). Here the Prussians, under prince Louis of Prussia, were defeated and their leader slain by the French under Lannes, 10 Oct. 1806.

Saarbrück, the Roman Augusti Muri, or Saræ pons, an open town on the left bank of the Saar, in Rhenish Prussia, founded in the tenth century, long subject to the bishops of Metz; afterwards ruled by counts (about 1237), and by the house of Nassau about 1380. It was captured by the French and retaken by the Germans 1676, reunited to France 1794-1814, and ceded to Prussia 1815. On 2 Aug. 1870, it was bombarded by the French under Frossard (between 11 and 1 in the daytime), and the Prussians in small force were dislodged, and the town occupied by the French general Bataille. The mitrailleuses were said to be very effective. The emperor Napoleon, who was present with his son, said in a telegram to the empress, "Louis has gone through his baptism of fire. He has not been in the least startled. We stood in the foremost rank, and the rifle-balls were dropping at our feet, and Louis picked up one that fell near him. His bearing was such as to draw tears from the soldiers' eyes." On 6 Aug. the Prussian generals Goeben and Von Steinmetz, with the first army, recaptured Saarbrück, after a sanguinary conflict at the village of Spicheren. The heights taken by the French on the 2d are in Germany, those taken by the Germans on the 6th are in France, and both battles were fought between Saarbrück and the town of Forbach, which was captured, and has given a name to the second conflict. The loss was great on both sides. The French general François was killed, and the 2d corps under Frossard nearly destroyed. The French retreated to Metz. They were greatly superior in numbers at the beginning of the fight, but were badly commanded.

Sabbatarians. Traces exist of Sabbatarii, or Sabbathaires, among the sects of the sixteenth century on the continent. Upon the publication of the "Book of Sports" in 1618, a violent controversy arose among English divines on two points: first, whether the Sabbath of the fourth commandment was in force among Christians; and, secondly, whether, and on what ground, the first day of the week was entitled to be distinguished and observed as "the Sabbath." In 1628, Theophilus Brabourne, a clergyman, published the first work in favor of the seventh day, or Saturday, as the true Christian Sabbath. He and several others suffered great persecution for this opinion; but after the restoration there were three or four congregations observing the last day of the week for public worship in London, and seven or eight in the country parts of England. In 1851 there were three Sabbatarian or Seventh-day Baptist congregations in England; but in America (especially in the New England states) they are more numerous. Joseph Davis suffered imprisonment in 1670. He and his son bequeathed property to maintain the sect; and litigation respecting its disposal was settled by vice-chancellor Stuart in conformity with their intentions in June, 1870. Very few Sabbatarians then remained.

Sabbath: ordained by God, Gen. ii.; Exod. xx. 8; Isa. lviii. 13. Jews observe the seventh day in commemoration of the creation of the world, and of their redemption from the bondage of the Egyptians; Christians observe the first day of the week in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and the redemption of men; see Sunday.

Sabbath-schools. The first "Sabbath school" was founded by Ludwig Hacker between 1740 and 1747 at Ephrata, Lancaster county, Pa., among the German Seventh-day Baptists there. The school-room was used as a hospital after the battle of Brandywine, fought in 1777. This event occasioned the breaking-up of the schools, about five years before the first Sunday-school was instituted in England, at Gloucester, by Robert Raikes, about 1872; see Sunday-schools.

Sabbatical Year: a Jewish institution, 1491 a.c., Exod. xxiii. During every seventh year the very ground had rest, and was not tilled; and every forty-ninth year all debts were forgiven, slaves set at liberty, and estates, etc., that were before sold or mortgaged, returned to their original families, etc.

Sabellianism, from Sabellius (of Ptolemais, in Egypt), who flourished in the third century, and who taught that there was but one person in the Godhead, the other persons of the Trinity being but different names of the same person. This doctrine was condemned at a council at Rome, 260.

Sabines, from whom the Romans, under Romulus, took away their daughters by force, having invited them to some public sports or shows on purpose. When the Sabines determined to revenge this affront, the women became mediators to their fathers in behalf of their husbands, the Romans, and a lasting peace was made between them, 750 a.c. After many conflicts the Sabines became a part of the Roman people, about 266 a.c. One of the ecclesiastical provinces is still called Terra Sabina; chief town, Magliano.

Saccharimeter, an instrument for determining the amount of sugar in solutions. Soleil, an optician of Paris, in 1847 made use of rotary polarized light for this purpose in a saccharimeter, since improved by Dubosc.

Sacheverel Riots, see Riots, 1710.

Sackett's Harbor, DEFENCE OF. A British force attacked Sackett's Harbor, Lake Ontario, 29 May, 1813, and were repulsed.

Sacrament (from sacramentum, an oath, obligation; also mystery). The Christian sacraments are baptism and the Lord's supper. The council of Trent, in 1517, affirmed the doctrine of the schoolmen that there are seven sacraments: baptism, the Lord's supper, confirmation, penance, holy orders, matrimony, and extreme unction. The name was given to the Lord's supper by the Latin fathers. The wine was laid aside, and communion by the laity under one form alone, that of bread, took its rise in the West, under pope Urban II., 1096.—M. de Marca. Communion in one kind only was authoritatively sanctioned by the council of Constance in 1414.—Dr. Hook. Henry VII. of Germany was poisoned by a priest in the consecrated wafer, 24 Aug. 1518. The sacramental wine was poisoned by the grave-digger of the church at Zurich, by which sacrilegious deed a number of persons lost their lives, 4 Sept. 1776. In 1614 members of both houses of parliament were ordered to take the sacrament, as a guard against the introduction of Roman Catholics. In 1673 the Test act was passed; repealed in 1828; see Transubstantiation.

"Society of the Blessed Sacrament" (English churchmen), London, founded 1890; "Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament," founded 1862; the two united, 1867.

Sacramento, St., a Portuguese settlement in South America, claimed by Spain in 1680, but relinquished in 1713; several times seized; ceded in 1777; acquired by Brazil in 1825.

Sacred Band, see Thebes.

Sacred Books of the East. The publication of translations of the sacred books of the religion of the Brahmans, Buddhists, and Mahometans, and of the followers of Khung-fu-tze and Lao-tze, edited by professor Max Müller, began in 1879. Eight volumes have been published, 1881.

Sacred Harmonic Society, see Music.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, a form of devotion said to have been instituted in England in the seventeenth century, and much promoted by Marguerite Marie Alacoque, an enthusiastic French nun, who asserted that Christ had appeared to her, and taken out her heart, placed it in his own, glowing in flame, and then returned it. She died in 1690.

Her book, "Dévotion au Cœur de Jésus," published in 1698, much advocated by father Joseph Gallifet about 1726; and introduced into France by request. 1765
A pilgrimage from England, specially blessed by the pope, and headed by the duke of Norfolk, went to the shrine of Marguerite at Paray-le-Monial, and returned 1-6 Sept. 1873

The R. C. diocese of Salford dedicated to the Sacred Heart, 4 Sept. 1873; and a church at Montmartre, near Paris, founded for the same purpose. 16 June, 1875
The pope dedicated the universal church to "the Sacred Heart" 15 June, "

Sacred Wars. I. Declared by the Amphictyons against Cirrha, near Delphi, for robbery and outrage to the visitors to the oracle, 595 B.C. Cirrha was razed to the ground, 586. II. Between the Phocians and Delphians for the possession of the temple at Delphi, 448, 447. III. The Phocians, on being fined for cultivating the sacred lands, seized the temple, 357. They were conquered by Philip of Macedon, and their cities depopulated, 346; see Crusades.

Sacrifice was offered to God by Abel, 3875 B.C. Sacrifices to the gods were introduced into Greece by Phoroneus, king of Argos, 1778 B.C. Human sacrifices seem to have originated with the Chaldeans, from whom the custom passed into other Eastern nations. All sacrifices to the true God were to cease with the sacrifice of Christ, 33 A.D. (Heb. x. 12-14). Pagan sacrifices were forbidden by the emperor Constantius II., 341.

Sacrilege. In 1835, the punishment (formerly death) was made transportation for life. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 96, s. 50 (1861), breaking into a place of worship and stealing therefrom was made punishable with penal servitude for life.

Sacriportus (Latium, Italy). Here Sylla defeated the younger Marius and Papius Carbo with great slaughter, B.C. 82, and became dictator, 81.

Saddles. In the earlier ages the Romans used neither saddles nor stirrups. Saddles were in use in the third century, and are mentioned as made of leather in 804, and were known in England about 600. Side-saddles for ladies were introduced by Anne, queen of Richard II., in 1388.—Stow.

Sadducees, a Jewish sect, said to have been founded by Sadoc, a scholar of Antigonus, about 200 B.C., who, misinterpreting his master's doctrine, taught that there was neither heaven nor hell, angel nor spirit; that the soul was mortal, and that there was no resurrection of the body from the dead. The Sadducees rejected the oral law, maintained by the Pharisees; see Matt. xxii. 23; Acts xxiii. 8.

Sadler's Wells (N. London), so called after Mr. Sadler, who built an orchestra to entertain the invalids who used the waters medicinally, 1688. In time the orchestra was enclosed, and the building became a place for dramatic performances. The theatre was opened in 1765. Eighteen persons were trampled to death at this theatre, on a false alarm of fire, 18 Oct. 1807; see under Theatres. The theatre put up to auction and not sold, 31 Aug. 1875; and 30 July, 1878. Opened for miscellaneous entertainments, 6 Jan. 1877. Taken by Mrs. Bateman, Sept. 1878; partly rebuilt; opened as New Sadler's Wells on 9 Oct. 1879, with the opera "Rob Roy." Miss Isabella Bateman became manager after her mother's death, 13 Jan. 1881.

Sadowa, see Königgratz.

Safes. A National Safe Company, London, opened vaults for storage of valuables, 1876.

Safety-lamp. One was invented in 1815 by sir Humphry Davy, to prevent accidents which happen in coal and other mines. The safety-lamp is founded on the principle that flame, in passing through iron-wire meshes, loses so much of its heat as to be incapable of igniting inflammable gases. The father of all safety-lamps was Dr. Reid Clanny, of Sunderland, whose invention and improvements are authenticated in the Transactions of the Society of Arts for 1817. The "Geordy," constructed by George Stephenson, the engineer, in 1815, is said to be the safest. A miner's electric light, by MM. Dumas and Benoit, was exhibited in Paris on 8 Sept. 1862. On 14 Aug. 1867, safety-lamps were rigidly tested by several mining engineers, and serious doubts thrown upon their complete efficacy. Col. Shakespear's safety-lamp (light extinguished by opening) exhibited at Royal Institution, etc., May, 1879.

Saffron (saffran, French; saffrano, Italian), the flower of crocus, was first brought to England in the reign of Edward III. by a pilgrim, about 1839; probably from Arabia, as the word is from the Arabic sapher.—Miller. It was cultivated in England in 1582.

Sage (sauge, French; salvia, Latin), a wholesome herb, comfortable to the brain and nerves.—Mortimer. A species of this garden plant grew early in England, and some varieties were imported. The Mexican sage, Salvia Mexicana, was brought from Mexico, 1724. The blue African sage, Salvia Africana, and the golden African sage, Salvia aurea, were brought to England from the Cape of Good Hope in 1781.

Saguntum, or ZACYNTHUS, now Murviedro, in Valentia, E. Spain, renowned for the dreadful siege it sustained, 219 B.C. The citizens, after performing incredible acts of valor for eight months, chose to be buried in the ruins of their city rather than surrender to Hannibal. They burned themselves, with their houses, and the conqueror became master of a pile of ashes, 218 B.C.

Saigon, French colony in Cochinchina, founded in 1860, after a defeat of the Chinese, 17 Feb. 1859.

Sailors' Home, in Wells street, London Docks; established by Mr. George Green, 1830; opened 1835; enlarged 1865. In one year it admitted 5444 boarders, who, besides home, had evening instruction, the use of a savings-bank, etc. The establishment is self-supporting, aided by subscriptions. Similar institutions have since been established. Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, Hampstead, established 1829.

Saint. For names with this prefix, see the names themselves throughout the book.

St. James's Gazette, independent evening paper, edited by Fred. Greenwood, formerly editor of Pall Mall Gazette, first appeared 31 May, 1880.

Sakya Muni, see Buddhism.

Salado, a river, S. Spain; see Tarifa.

Salads are stated to have been in use in the middle ages; lettuces are said to have been introduced into England from the Low Countries, 1520-47.

Salamanca (W. Spain); taken from the Saracens 861. The university was founded 1240, and the cathedral built 1518. Near here the British and allies, commanded by lord Wellington, totally defeated the French army under marshal Marmont, 22 July, 1812. The loss of the victors was most severe, amounting in killed, wounded, and missing to nearly 6000 men. Marmont left in the victor's hands 7141 prisoners, 11 pieces of cannon, 6 stands of colors, and 2 eagles. This victory was followed by the capture of Madrid.

Salamis (near Athens). In a great sea-fight here, 20 Oct. 480 B.C., Themistocles, the Greek commander, with only 810 sail, defeated the fleet of Xerxes, king of Persia, which consisted of 2000 sail.—Near Salamis, in Cyprus, the Greeks defeated the Persian fleet, 449 B.C.; and Demetrius Poliorcetes defeated the fleet of Ptolemy and his allies, 306 B.C.

Salassi, a turbulent Alpine tribe, were thoroughly subdued by Terentius Varro, 25 B.C., and a Roman colony established in their territories (now Aosta).

Saldanha Bay, S. Atlantic ocean, northward of the Cape of Good Hope. Here, on 17 Aug. 1796, a Dutch squadron, under admiral Lucas, was captured by vice-admiral sir George Keith Elphinstone without resistance; sir George was created lord Keith.

Sale of Food and Drugs Act, passed 11 Aug. 1875; repeals all adulteration acts, and makes new arrangements.

Salenckemen, on the Danube. Here a victory was gained by the imperialists, under prince Louis of Baden, over the Turks, commanded by the grand-vizier Mustapha Kiuprigli, 19 Aug. 1691.

Salerno (Salernum, S. Italy), an ancient Roman colony. Its university, with a celebrated school of medicine, reputed to be the oldest in Europe, was founded by Robert Guiscard the Norman, who seized Salerno in 1077. Salerno suffered much in the wars of the middle ages.

Salford, near Manchester.

An incendiary explosion at the barracks caused one death; Fenians suspected. 14 Jan. 1881

Salique (or SALIC) Law, by which females are excluded from inheriting the crown of France, is said to have been instituted by Pharamond, 424, and ratified in a council of state by Clovis I., the real founder of the French monarchy, in 511.—Hénault. This law, introduced into Spain by the Bourbons, 1700, was formally abolished by decree, 29 March, 1830; and on the death of Ferdinand VII. his daughter succeeded as Isabella II., 29 Sept. 1833, see Spain. By this law also Hanover was separated from England, when queen Victoria ascended the English throne, 1837.

Salisbury (Wils), founded in the beginning of the thirteenth century, on the removal of the cathedral hither from Old Sarum. National councils or parliaments were repeatedly held at Salisbury, particularly in 1296, by Edward I.; in 1328, by Edward III.; and in 1384. Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was executed here, by order of Richard III., in 1483.—On SALISBURY PLAIN is Stonehenge (which see). This plain was estimated at 500,000 acres. On it were so many cross-roads, and so few houses to take directions from, that Thomas, earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at each milestone from Salisbury to Shaftesbury, for the traveller's guide. The autumn military manoeuvres took place on Salisbury Plain, Aug., Sept. 1872; see under Army.—The first seat of the Bishoptric was at Sherborne, St. Aldhelm being prelate, 705. Herman removed the seat to Old Sarum, about 1072; and the see was removed to Salisbury by a papal bull in 1217. It has yielded to the Church of Rome one saint and two cardinals. The building of the cathedral commenced 28 April, 1220, and was completed in 1258. This edifice is reckoned one of our finest ecclesiastical erections. Its spire, the loftiest in the kingdom, was considered in danger in April, 1861, and subscriptions were begun for its immediate repair. The choir was reopened, after restoration by sir G. G. Scott, 1 Nov. 1876. The bishopric is valued in the king's books at 1367l. 11s. 8d. Present income 5000l.

RECENT BISHOPS.

- 1797. John Fisher; died 2 July, 1825.
- 1825. Thomas Burgess; died 19 Feb. 1837.
- 1837. Edmund Denison; died 6 March, 1854.
- 1854. Walter Kerr Hamilton; died 1869.
- 1869. George Motley; elected 9 Sept.

Sallee, a port of Morocco, long a haunt for pirates, destroyed by the British in 1632, and about 300 captives released.

Salentini, allies of the Samnites, the only Italian tribe not subject to Rome, were overcome in war in 267 and 266 B.C., and Brundisium, their port, taken.

Salmon Fisheries. The laws relating to them were consolidated and amended in 1861, and the report of a commission of inquiry (including sir Wm. Jardine) was published, in Feb. 1862. An act restricting the capture of salmon at certain times, passed in 1863, was amended in 1869-70 and 1873. During the "salmon fence," 14 Sept. to 1 Feb., it is unlawful to catch fish of the salmon kind. A salmon-fishery congress opened at South Kensington, 7 June, 1867. Salmon eggs sent to New Zealand, Jan. 1878. Salmon were very abundant in all the New England rivers at the time of the first settlement of the country, but the many dams built upon some of these rivers—notably the Merrimac—have excluded the fish. The chief supply for American markets comes now from the Kennebec river in Maine, and from Canadian streams. Considerable attention has been given to the restocking of American streams with salmon by the United States Fish Commission. In Nov. 1871, the Russian method of artificial propagation was tried in the Penobscot region with remarkable success. Since that time the work of hatching the eggs and stocking rivers with salmon has been steadily prosecuted with good results.

SALMON OVA, packed in boxes with moss, charcoal, and ice, to retard development—a plan suggested and proved practicable by Mr. E. H. Moscrop in 1863; adopted successfully by Mr. J. A. Youl, who sent ova to Australia in the Norfolk 1864
Salmon disease, in rivers, announced 1879; commission of inquiry appointed, Mr. F. Buckland and others, Jun. 1880

Salonica, see Thessalonica.

Salt (chloride of sodium, a compound of the gas chlorine and the metal sodium) is procured from the rocks in the earth, from salt-springs, and from sea-water. The famous salt-mines of Wieliczka, near Cracow in Poland, have been worked 600 years. The salt-works in Cheshire, called the Wiches (Nantwich, Northwich, and Middlewich), were of great importance in the time of the Saxon heptarchy. The salt-mines of Staffordshire were discovered about 1670. Salt-duties were first exacted in 1702; they were renewed in 1732; reduced in 1823, and in that year were ordered to cease in 1825. During the French war the duty reached to 80l. per ton. For the salt-tax in France, see Gabelle. The government salt monopoly in India was abolished in May, 1863, by sir C. Trevelyan. Since 1810, twenty-three states of the United States have produced salt for market. Virginia salt-works were in operation before 1620. Salt was made in South Carolina in 1689, and acts to encourage the manufacture were passed in 1725. The Onondaga salt-springs, in N. Y., were worked by the Indians. Salt was first made near Syracuse by white men in 1788. The state of New York owns the salines, and, until 1846, charged a royalty of six cents a bushel for salt made from the water. In that year the royalty was reduced to one cent a bushel. Salt was first made in Ohio in 1798; in Michigan about 1859. Since 1797 salt has been largely employed in the manufacture of chloride of sodium or bleaching powder (by obtaining its chlorine), and soap (by obtaining its soda). On this are based the chemical works of Cheshire, Lancashire, and other places; see under Alkalies.

Salt Lake, see Mormons.

Saltaire, see Alpaca.

Saltpetre (from sal petra, salt of the rocks), or NITRE, is a compound of nitric acid and potash (nitrogen, oxygen, and potassium), and hence is called nitrate of potash. It is the explosive ingredient in gunpowder, many detonating powders, and lucifer-matches. Boyle in the seventeenth century demonstrated that saltpetre was composed of aquafortis (nitric acid) and potash; the discoveries of Lavoisier (1777) and Davy (1807) showed its real composition. Its manufacture in England began about 1625. During the French revolutionary war the manufacture was greatly increased by the researches of Berthollet.

Salute at Sea. It is a received maxim at sea that he who returns the salute always fires fewer guns than he receives; which is done even between the ships of princes of equal dignity; but the Swedes and Danes return the compliment without regarding how many guns are fired to them. The English claim the right of being saluted first in all places, as sovereigns of the seas; the Venetians claimed this honor within their gulf, etc. The admiralty issued a code of rules for salutes, Dec. 1876; see Flag and Naval Salute.

Salvador, San, one of the Bahamas, and the first point of land discovered in the West Indies or America by Columbus. It was previously called Guanahani, or Cat's Isle; and Columbus (in acknowledgment to God for his deliverance) named it San Salvador, 11 Oct. 1492. Population about 600,000. The capital, San Salvador, was destroyed by an earthquake, 16 April, 1854, and is now abandoned.

Salvador, San, one of the republics of Central America, with a constitution established 24 Jan. 1859. Gen. Barrios, elected president 1 Feb. 1860, was compelled to flee in Oct. 1863; when Francis Dueñas became provisional president; his formal election took place April, 1865. The ex-president, Gerard Barrios, was surrendered by Nicaragua, tried, and shot, Aug. 1876. A re-attempted revolution failed; Zaldívar fled; gen. Gonzales president, 1 Feb. 1872; K. Zaldívar, May, 1876. Population about 600,000. The capital, San Salvador, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, 19 March, 1878; about 50 persons perished. The convulsion began 5 March, and thus gave timely warning.

"Salvation Army," a name assumed by a body of persons terming themselves the "Christian Mission" (founded about 1865); Mr. William Booth was general.

A great "Hosanna" meeting to celebrate the formation of the 100th corps at Northampton was held at the headquarters (with prayers, addresses, and singing), 273 Whitechapel road, 30 June, 1879. Their meetings and processions are often violently interrupted, 1881.

Salsbach (Baden). Here the French general Turrene was killed, at the commencement of a battle, 27 July, 1676.

Salsburg, an ancient city of Germany, was annexed to Austria, 1805; to Bavaria, 1809; to Austria again, 1816. It was the birthplace of Mozart, 1756. The meetings of the emperors of Austria and France here, 18 Aug. 1867, and the emperors of Austria and Germany, 5 Sept. 1871, which caused some anxiety, were reported to be in favor of peace.

Sama, or SOMAS, see Drims.

Samanide Dynasty began with Ismail Samani, who overcame the army of the Saffarides, and established himself in the government of Persia, 903; his descendants ruled till 999.

Samarqand (in Tartary) was conquered by the Mahometans, 707; by Genghis Khan, 1220; and by Timur, or Tamerlane, who ruled here in great splendor. Samarqand was occupied by the Russians under Kaufmann, 26 May, 1868, after a conflict on the previous day. The garrison left resisted a fierce siege till relieved by Kaufmann, 13-20 June, 1868.

Samaritans. Samaria was built by Omri, 925 B.C.; and became the capital of the kingdom of Israel. On the breaking-up of that kingdom (721 B.C.), the conqueror Sennacherib placed natives of other countries at Samaria. The descendants of these mixed races were abominable to the Jews, and much more so in consequence of the rival temple built on Mount Gerizim by Sanballat the Samaritan, 382 B.C., which was destroyed by John Hyrcanus, 130 B.C.; see John iv. and viii. 48, and Luke x. 33. The Samaritan Pentateuch (of uncertain origin) was published in his Polyglot by Morinus, 1632.

Samnites, a warlike people of S. Italy, who strenuously resisted the Roman power, and were not subjugated till after three sanguinary wars, from 343 to 338 B.C. Their brave leader, Caius Pontius, who spared the Romans at Caudium, 320, having been taken prisoner, was basely put to death, 332. They did not acquire the right of citizenship till 88 B.C.

Samos, an island on the west coast of Asia Minor. Colonized by Ionians about 1048 B.C. The city was founded about 966. Polycrates, ruler of Samos (538-522 B.C.) was one of the most able, fortunate, and treacherous of the Greek tyrants, and possessed a powerful fleet. He patronized Pythagoras (born here) and Anacreon. Samos was taken by the Athenians, 440; and, with Greece, became subject to Rome, 146. It was taken by the Venetians, A.D. 1126, who here made velvet (sama), and became subject to the Turks about 1456.

It was made a principality by sultan Mahmood in 1802; present prince, Constantine Adamides; born 28 Feb. 1822; appointed 6 March, 1878.

Sampford Courtenay (Devon). Here John, lord Russell, defeated the Cornish and Devonshire Catholic rebels, the middle of Aug. 1848.

Sanction, see Pragmatic.

Sanctuaries, see Asylums. Privileged places for the safety of offenders are said to have been granted by king Lucius to churches and their precincts. St. John's of Beverley was thus privileged in the time of the Saxons. St. Bury's, in Cornwall, was privileged by Athelstan, 935; Westminster, by Edward the Confessor; St. Martin's-le-Grand, 1539. Being much abused, the privilege of sanctuary was limited by the pope in 1603 (at the request of Henry VII.), and much reduced in 1640. In London, persons were secure from arrest in certain localities: these were the Minorities, Salisbury court, Whitefriars, Fulwood's rents, Mitre court, Baldwin's garden, the Savoy, Clink, Deadman's place, Montague close, and the Mint. This security was abolished 1694, but lasted in some degree till the reign of George II. (1757).

Sandals, see Shoes.

Sand-blast. Gen. B. C. Tilghman, of Philadelphia, has invented a method of cutting stone or hard metal by a jet of quartz sand impelled by compressed air or steam. A hole of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches diameter and $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches deep was bored through a block of corundum, nearly as hard as diamond, in 25 minutes. The invention was submitted to the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, 15 Feb. 1871. It may be employed in the arts for etching, etc.; for this purpose a company was at work, 1874.

Sandemanians, see Glasites.

Sander's Creek (South Carolina, U. S.), BATTLE AT. Here a British force under Cornwallis defeated the Americans under Gates, 16 Aug. 1780.

Sandhurst Royal Military College founded first at High Wycombe, in 1799; removed to Great Marlow in 1802, and to Sandhurst in 1812. It consists of the staff college and cadets' college. Competitive examination for entrance into the latter begun in Feb. 1856. A wing of the college was destroyed by fire, 31 Jan. 1868.

Sandwich (Portus Rutupensis, Kent). It suffered by Danish invaders in 851, 998, and 1014; but was rebuilt by Canute, and became prosperous; it became chief of the Cinque Ports about 1066. It contributed 22 ships and 504 mariners to Edward III.'s French expedition. It was taken and plundered by the French under Brézel in Aug. 1457. Flemish silk and woollen manufactories were settled here by Elizabeth in 1561.

Sandwich Islands, or HAWAII ARCHIPELAGO, a group in the Pacific ocean, discovered by capt. Cook in 1778. In Owhyhee, or Hawaii, one of these islands, he fell a victim to the sudden resentment of the natives, 14 Feb. 1778. The king and queen visited London in 1824, and died there in July. These people have made great progress in civilization, and embraced Christianity before any missionaries were settled among them. Population in 1866, 62,959. King Kamehameha IV. married Miss Emma Rooker, 1866. She came to England in 1865; landing at Southampton, 18 July; and visited our queen, 9 Sept. An English bishopric was established at Honolulu in 1861, for which Dr. Thomas Staley was consecrated, 18 Aug. 1862.

Sandy Creek (Lake Ontario), BATTLE AT. Here a British force of 160 men attacked 120 Americans with a few Indian allies, 30 May, 1814. The whole British force was captured, except 70 killed.

San Francisco (California). The centenary of its foundation by Franciscan monks, 8 Oct. 1776, was celebrated in 1876; owes its present prosperity to the gold discovery in 1847; see California. Population 1880, 233,956.

Sanhedrim. An ancient Jewish council of the highest jurisdiction, of seventy, or, as some say, seventy-three members, usually considered to be that established by Moses (Numb. xi. 16), 1490 B.C. It was yet in being at the time of Jesus Christ (John xviii. 31). A Jewish Sanhedrim was summoned by the emperor Napoleon I., 23 July, 1806. A meeting of the Jewish deputies was held 18 Sept., and the Sanhedrim assembled 9 March, 1807.

Sanitary Commission of the UNITED STATES. Soon after the outbreak of the American civil war in 1861, there was organized a voluntary association with this name, designed to aid the medical department of the army in caring for the health of the troops. Its operations continued throughout the war, and contributed very largely to the comfort and health of the army. It had branches throughout the Northern states, and collected and expended vast sums of money.

Sanitary Institute of Great Britain, founded 13 July, 1876; president, the duke of Northumberland. Congress at Leamington, 3 Oct. 1877; at Stafford, 2 Oct. 1878; at Croydon, 21 Oct. 1879; opened a School of Hygiene in London, Nov. 1879.

Sanitary Legislation, etc. Strict cleanliness is enjoined in the law of Moses, 1490 B.C. Great attention has been paid to the public health in France since 1802. Tardieu published his "Dictionnaire de Hygiène," 1852-4. To Dr. Southwood Smith is mainly attributable the honor of commencing the agitation on the subject of public health in England about 1832; his "Philosophy of Health" having excited much attention. Since 1834 he has published numerous sanitary reports, having been much employed by the government. Professors of hygiene are now appointed.

Sanitas (health), a new antiseptic and disinfectant, invented by Mr. C. T. Kingzett, about 1875.

Having discovered that the salubrity of the air surrounding certain trees, such as the Eucalyptus globulus and pines, is due to their volatile oils producing peroxide of hydrogen and camphoric acid, he devised a method for procuring these re-agents by the decomposition of common turpentine, and in 1877 they were manufactured and sold as "Sanitas."

Sanscrit, the language of the Brahmins of India, spoken at the time of Solomon, has been much studied of late years. Sir Wm. Jones, who published a translation of the poem "Sakuntala" in 1783, discovered that a complete literature had been preserved in India, comprising sacred books (the Vedas), history and philosophy, lyric and dramatic poetry. Texts and translations of many works have been published by the aid of the East India Company, the Oriental Translation Fund, and private liberality. The professorship of Sanscrit at Oxford was founded by col. Boden. The first professor, H. H. Wilson, appointed in 1832, translated part of the "Rig-veda Samhitā," the sacred hymns of the Brahmins, and several poems, etc. Prof. Monier Williams (elected 1860) published an English and Sanscrit dictionary, 1851. Prof. Max Müller published his "History of Sanscrit Literature" in 1859, and has edited the original text of the Vedas. Philologists have discovered an intimate connection between the Sanscrit, Persian, Greek, Latin, Teutonic, Slavonian, Celtic, and Scandinavian languages.

Sans-culottes, a term of reproach applied to the leaders of the French republicans about 1790, on account of their negligence in dress, and afterwards assumed by them with pride. The complementary days of their new calendar were named by the Mountain party Sans-culottides.

Santiago de Compostella (N.W. Spain) was sacked by the Moors in 935, and held by them till it was taken by Ferdinand III. in 1235. The Order of Santiago, or St. James, was founded about 1170 to protect pilgrims to the shrine of St. James, said to be buried in the cathedral. The town was taken by the French in 1809, and held till 1814.—SANTIAGO, the capital of Chili, South America, founded by Valdivia in 1541, has suffered much by earthquakes, especially in 1822 and 1829.

About seven o'clock in the evening of 8 Dec. 1863, the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary, and the last day of a series of religious celebrations in the "month of Mary," the church of the Campana, when brilliantly illuminated in a dangerous manner, was burned down, the fire beginning amid the combustible ornaments, and above 2000 persons, principally women, perished; the means of egress being utterly insufficient.

On 20 Dec. the government ordered the church to be razed to the ground, and much public indignation was excited against the fanatical priesthood.

* Capt. Fremantle, the friend of Nelson, and his companion in most of his brilliant achievements, was also wounded in the arm immediately before Nelson had received his wound in the same limb. The following note, addressed to the lady of capt. Fremantle (who was on board with her husband at the time he wrote), has been preserved, as being the first letter written by the hero with his left hand:—"MY DEAR MRS. FREMANTLE.—Tell me how Tom is; I hope he has saved his arm. Mine is off; but, thank God! I am as well as I hope he is. Ever yours, HORATIO NELSON."

Sappers and Miners, a name given in 1812 to the non-commissioned officers and privates of the corps of Royal Engineers.—Brande.

Sapphic Verse, invented by Sappho, the lyric poetess of Mitylene. She was equally celebrated for her poetry, beauty, and a hopeless passion for Phaon, a youth of her native country, on which last account it is said she threw herself into the sea from Mount Leucas, and was drowned, about 600 B.C. The Lesbians, after her death, paid her divine honors, and called her the tenth muse. Some consider the story fabulous.

Sapphire, a precious stone of an azure color, and transparent; in hardness it exceeds the ruby, and is next to the diamond. One was placed in the Jewish high-priest's breastplate, 1491. Thamas Kouli Khan is said to have possessed a sapphire valued at 800,000*l.*, 1738. Artificial sapphires were made in 1857 by M. Gaudin. Equal parts of alum and sulphate of potash were heated in a crucible.

Saracens, an Arab race, the first disciples of Mahomet, who within forty years after his death (632) had subdued a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They conquered Spain in 711 et seq., and (under Abderahman) established the caliphate of Cordova in 755, which gave way to the Moors in 1237. The empire of the Saracens closed by Bagdad being taken by the Tartars, 1258.

Saragossa (N.E. Spain), anciently Cæsarea Augusta, founded 27 B.C., was taken by the Goths, 470; by the Arabs, 712; by Alfonso of Spain, 1118. Here Philip V. was defeated by the archduke Charles, 20 Aug. 1710. On 17 Dec. 1778, 400 of the inhabitants perished in a fire at the theatre. Saragossa, after successfully resisting the French in 1808, was taken by them after a most heroic defence by gen. Palafox, 20 Feb. 1809. The inhabitants, of both sexes, resisted until worn out by fighting, famine, and pestilence.

"Sarah Sands," see Wrecks, 1857.

Saratoga (New York state, U. S.). Here gen. Burgoyne, commander of a body of the British army, after a severe engagement with the Americans, 7 Oct., being surrounded, surrendered all his army (5791 men) to the American gen. Gates, 17 Oct. 1777. This was the greatest check the British suffered in the war.

Sarawak, see Borneo.

Sardinia, an island in the Mediterranean, successively possessed by the Phenicians, Greeks, Carthaginians (about 500 B.C.), Romans (238), Vandals (A.D. 456), Saracens (720-40), Genoese (1022), Pisans (1165), Aragonese (1352), and Spaniards. From settlers belonging to these various nations the present inhabitants derive their origin. Victor Amadeus, duke of Savoy, acquired Sardinia in 1720, with the title of king; see Savoy. Population of the Sardinian dominions in 1858, 5,194,807; of Sardinia alone (1875), 654,432. The king of Sardinia was recognized as king of Italy by his parliament in Feb. 1861; see Italy.

Sardis, see under Seven Churches.

Sarmatia, the ancient name for the country in Asia and Europe between the Caspian Sea and the Vistula, including Russia and Poland. The Sarmatae, or Sauromatae, troubled the early Roman empire by incursions. After subduing the Scythians, they were subjugated by the Goths, in the third and fourth centuries. They joined the Huns and other barbarians in invading Western Europe in the fifth century.

Sarno (S. Italy). Near this river Teias, king of the Goths, was defeated and slain by Justinian's general Narses, March, 553.

Sarum, Old (Wiltshire), an ancient British town, the origin of Salisbury (which see). Although completely decayed, it returned two members to parliament till 1832.

Sassanides, descendants of Artaxerxes, or Ardishir, whose father, Babek, was the son of Sassan. He revolted against Artabanus, the king of Parthia; defeated him on the plain of Hormuz, 226; and re-established the Persian monarchy. This dynasty was expelled by the Mahometans, 652; see Persia.

Satellites, see Planets, Jupiter, Mars, Saturn.

Satire. About a century after the introduction of comedy, satire made its appearance at Rome in the writings of Lucilius, called the inventor of it, 116 B.C.—Liry. The Satires of Horace (35 B.C.), Juvenal (about A.D. 100), and Persius (about A.D. 60) are the most celebrated in ancient times, and those of Churchill (1761) and Pope (1729) in modern times. Butler's "Hudibras," satirizing the Presbyterians, first appeared in 1663. "Satire Menippée," a celebrated satirical pamphlet, partly in verse and partly in prose, attacking the policy of the court of Spain and the league, written in the style of the biting satires of the cynic philosopher Menippus. The first part, "Catholicon d'Espagne," by Leroy, appeared in 1593; the second, "Abrégé des États de la Ligue," by Gillot, Pithou, Rapin, and Passerat, appeared in 1594.—Bouillet.

Satrapies, divisions of the Persian empire, formed by Darius Hystaspis about 516 B.C.

Sattara (W. India) was long a flourishing state, founded by Sevajee about 1646; subjugated by the Maharrattas about 1749; conquered by the British, 1818; ruled by a rajah under the protection of the Company. The last rajah died without issue in 1818, when the country was annexed.

Saturday (the last or seventh day of the week; the Jewish Sabbath; see Sabbath). It was so called from an idol worshipped on this day by the Saxons; and, according to Verstegan, was named by them Saterne's day.—Pardon. It is more probably from Saturn, dies Saturni.—Saturday Review, an independent literary weekly journal, was first published 3 Nov. 1855; see Hospital.

Saturn, the planet, ascertained to be about 900 millions of miles distant from the sun, and its diameter to be about 77,230 miles. One of the eight satellites was discovered by Huyghens (25 March, 1655), four by Cassini (1672-84), two by sir William Herschel (1789), and one by Bond and Lassells (1848). The ring was observed by Galileo about 1610; its annular form determined by Huyghens about 1655; and discovered to be twofold by Messrs. Ball, 13 Oct. 1655; an inner ring was detected in 1850 by Dawes in England (29 Nov.), and by Bond in America.

Saturnalia, festivals in honor of Saturn, father of the gods, were instituted long before the foundation of Rome, in commemoration of the freedom and equality which prevailed on the earth in his golden reign. Some, however, suppose that the Saturnalia were first observed at Rome in the reign of Tullus Hostilius (673-640 B.C.), after a victory obtained over the Sabines; while others suppose that Janus first instituted them in gratitude to Saturn, from whom he had learned agriculture. Others assert that they were first celebrated after a victory obtained over the Latins by the dictator Posthumus, when he dedicated a temple to Saturn, 497 B.C. During these festivals no business was allowed, amusements were encouraged, and distinctions ceased.—Light.

Savage Club, instituted by various literary men about 1857, facetiously terming themselves "savages," on account of their freedom from conventionalism. On some occasions they gave a war-whoop.—Sala. Mr. W. E. Gladstone was present at the 22d anniversary, 14 June, 1879.

Savandroog (Mysore, S. India), a strong fortress, was captured by the British without loss, 21 Dec. 1791.

Savannah (Georgia, U. S.), CAPTURE AND SIEGE OF. Col. Campbell, under orders from sir Henry Clinton, invaded Georgia at the end of 1778. Landing at Savannah, 29 Dec., he took the city after a stout resistance from the Americans under gen. Robert Howe, who retreated into South Carolina. A combined force of Americans under Lincoln and French under D'Estatina besieged Savannah in the autumn of 1779. The place was bombarded 4-9 Oct., and assaulted 9 Oct. The attempt was unsuccessful, the Americans losing 457 men, the French 637, and the British 120; see United States.

Savings-banks. The first of these was instituted at Berne, in Switzerland, in 1787, by the name of caisse de domestiques, being intended for servants only; another was set up in Basel in 1792, open to all depositors. The rev. Joseph Smith of Wendover began a Benevolent Institution in 1799; and in 1803-4 a "charitable bank" was instituted at Tottenham by Miss Priscilla Wakefield. The rev. Henry Duncan established a parish bank at Ruthwell in 1810. One was opened at Edinburgh in 1814. The benefit clubs among artisans having accumulated stocks of money for their progressive purposes, a plan was adopted to identify these funds with the public debt of the country, and an extra rate of interest was held out as an inducement; hence were formed savings-banks to receive small sums, returnable with interest on demand.

Rt. hon. George Rose developed the system, and brought it under parliamentary control, 1816.

In 1840 there were 550 banks; 766,354 depositors; amount, 22,000,904*l*.

Acts to consolidate and amend previous laws relating to savings-banks were passed in 1828 and 1847; extended to Scotland in 1845; again consolidated and amended in 1863.

On 20 Nov. 1851, the number of savings banks in Great Britain and Ireland was 574, besides above 20,000 friendly societies and charitable institutions. The depositors (in the banks) were 1,092,581, while the societies embraced a vast but unknown number of persons; the amount of deposits was 32,893,511*l*.

Savings-banks in the UNITED STATES. The first savings-bank established in the United States was the Philadelphia Saving Fund Society, organized 1816. It still exists in a prosperous condition. The second was established at Boston in 1816, and the third at New York in 1819. The system now extends to all parts of the country. Statistics from fourteen states for 1878-9 show that there were in those states 2,268,707 depositors in savings-banks, and that the aggregate of their deposits was $802,490,298.

Savona (a manufacturing town, N. Italy, long held by the Genoese) was captured by the king of Sardinia in 1746; by the French in 1809, and annexed; restored to Sardinia at the peace. Pope Pius VII. was kept here by Napoleon I., 1809-12. Soap is said to have been invented here, and hence its French name, savon.

Savoy, the ancient Sapaudia or Sabaudia, formerly a province in N. Italy, east of Piedmont. It became a Roman province about 118 B.C. The Alemanni seized it in A.D. 395, and the Franks in 490. It shared the revolutions of Switzerland till about 1048, when Conrad, emperor of Germany, gave it to Humbert, with the title of count. Count Thomas acquired Piedmont in the thirteenth century. Amadeus, count of Savoy, having entered his dominions, solicited Sigismund to erect them into a duchy, which he did at Cambray, 19 Feb. 1416. Victor Amadeus, duke of Savoy, obtained the kingdom of Sicily from Spain by a treaty in 1713, but afterwards exchanged it with the emperor for the island of Sardinia, with the title of king, 1720. The French subdued Savoy in 1792, and made it a department of France, under the name of Mont Blanc, in 1800. It was restored to the king of Sardinia in 1814; but with Nice annexed to France in 1860, in accordance with a vote by universal suffrage, 23 April, 1860. Savoy was visited by the emperor and empress of the French in Aug. 1860. The annexation was censured in England.

DUKES OF SAVOY.

1391. Count Amadeus VIII. is made duke in 1416; he was named pope, as Felix V. He abdicated as duke of Savoy, 1439; renounced the tiara, 1449; died in 1451.
1439. Louis.
1465. Amadeus IX.
1472. Philibert I.
1482. Charles I.
1489. Charles II.
1496. Philip II.
1497. Philibert II.
1504. Charles III.
1553. Emmanuel Philibert.
1590. Charles Emmanuel I.
1630. Victor Amadeus I.
1637. Francis Hyacinthe.
1638. Charles Emmanuel II.
1675. Victor Amadeus II. became king of Sicily, 1713; exchanged for Sardinia (which see) in 1720.

Savoy Palace (London) was built by Peter of Savoy, uncle of Eleanor, queen of Henry III., in 1245, on land granted to him. He gave it to the fraternity of Mountjoy (Monte Jovis), from whom it was purchased by queen Eleanor for her son Edmund. Here resided John, king of France, when a prisoner, 1357 et seq. The Savoy was burned by Wat Tyler and his followers, 1381. It was restored as a hospital of St. John the Baptist by Henry VII., about 1505. The fruitless CONFERENCE of bishops and eminent Puritans for the revision of the liturgy was held at the Savoy, April-July, 1661. The hospital was dissolved in 1702, and the buildings (then used as a military prison) removed for Waterloo Bridge and its approaches, 1817-19. The ancient Chapel (which once possessed the privilege of sanctuary), after several restorations, was destroyed by fire, 7 July, 1864, and was rebuilt at the queen's expense, and reopened 26 Nov. 1865.

Saw. Invented by Dædalus.—Pliny. Invented by Talus.—Apollodorus. Talus, it is said, having found the jawbone of a snake, employed it to cut through a piece of wood, and then formed an instrument of iron like it. Saw-mills were erected in Madeira in 1420; at Breslau in 1427. Norway had the first saw-mill in 1580. The bishop of Ely, ambassador from Mary of England to the court of Rome, describes a saw-mill there, 1556. The attempts to introduce saw-mills in England were violently opposed, and one erected by a Dutchman in 1668 was forced to be abandoned. Saw-mills were erected near London about 1770. The excellent saw-machinery in Woolwich dockyard is based upon the invention of the elder Brunel, 1806-13. The saw-gin for separating cotton-wool from the pod, invented by Eli Whitney, an American, in 1793, led to the immense growth of cotton in the southern states of the Union. Powis and James's band-saw was patented in 1858.

Saxe-Altenburg (formerly Hildburghausen), a duchy in central Germany. Population, 1871, 141,122. The dukes are descended from Ernest the Pious, duke of Saxony. Ernest, the first duke, died in 1715. The present duke, Ernest, born 16 Sept. 1826; succeeded his father, George, 3 Aug. 1853; he entered into alliance with Prussia, 18 Aug. 1866. Heir, his brother, Maurice, born 24 Oct. 1829. Population, 1875, 145,844.

Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (central Germany), capitals Gotha and Coburg. Population, 1875, 182,599. The reigning family is descended from John Ernest (son of Ernest the Pious, duke of Saxony), who died in 1729.

DUKES.

1826. Ernest I., duke of Saxe-Saalfeld-Coburg; born 2 Jan. 1784; married Louisa, heiress of Augustus, duke of Saxe-Gotha, and became by convention duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, 12 Nov. 1826; died 29 Jan. 1844.
- [His brother, Leopold, married the princess Charlotte of England, 2 May, 1816; became king of the Belgians, 12 July, 1831; and Ferdinand, the son of his brother Ferdinand, married Maria da Gloria, queen of Portugal, 9 April, 1836.]
1844. Ernest II., son (brother of Albert, prince-consort of Great Britain); born 21 June, 1818; married Alexandrina, duchess of Baden, 3 May, 1842; no issue. He entered into alliance with Prussia, 18 Aug. 1866.
- Heir (presumptive): Prince Alfred of England, duke of Edinburgh; born 6 Aug. 1844 (in whose favor the prince of Wales resigned his rights, 19 April, 1863).

Saxe-Meiningen (a duchy in central Germany). Population, Dec. 1875, 194,494. The dukes are descended from Ernest the Pious, duke of Saxony. The first duke, Bernard (1680), died in 1706. Bernard (duke, 24 Dec. 1803) abdicated in favor of his son, George II., 20 Sept. 1866, who professed his adhesion to the Prussian policy; he was born 2 April, 1826. Heir, his son, Bernard, born 1 April, 1851. By a fire at Meiningen, about 8000 persons became houseless, 6 Sept. 1874.

Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach (central Germany). The grand-dukes are descended from John Frederic, the Protestant elector of Saxony, who was deprived by the emperor in 1548; see Saxony. The houses of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Saxe-Gotha, Hilberghausen, and Saxe-Meiningen also sprang from him. They are all termed the senior or Ernestine branch of the old family.—Saxe-Weimar became a grand-duchy in 1815. The dukes have greatly favored literature, and their capital, Weimar, has been called the Athens of Germany. Population of the duchy, 1875, 292,938.

GRAND-DUKES.

1815. Charles Augustus.
1828. Charles Frederic; died 8 July, 1853.

- Heir: Charles Augustus; born 31 July, 1844.

Saxony, a kingdom in N. Germany. The Saxons were a fierce, warlike race, the terror of the inhabitants of the later Western empire, frequently attacked France and conquered Britain (which see). After a long series of sanguinary conflicts they were completely subdued by Charlemagne, who instituted many fiefs and bishoprics in their country. Wittkind, their great leader, who claimed descent from Woden, professed Christianity about 785. From him descended the first and the present ruling family (the houses of Supplinburg, Guelph, and Ascania intervened from 1106 to 1421). Saxony became a duchy, 880; an electorate, 1180; and a kingdom, 1806. It was the seat of war, 1813, the king being on the side of Napoleon. In the conflict of 1866 the king took the side of Austria, and his army fought in the battle of Königgrätz, 3 July. The Prussians entered Saxony 18 June. Peace between Prussia and Saxony was signed 21 Oct. (subjecting the Saxon army to Prussia), and the king returned to Dresden 8 Nov. Population, 1861, 2,225,240; 1871, 2,556,244; 1875, 2,760,596. Constitution of, 4 Sept. 1881; modified, 1849, 1851, 1860, 1861, 1868, and 1874.

Scandalum Magnatum, a special statute relating to any wrong, by words or in writing, done to high personages of the land, such as peers, judges, ministers of the crown, officers in the state, and other great public functionaries, by the circulation of the scandalous statements, false news, or horrible messages, by which any debate or discord between them and the commons, or any scandal to their persons, might arise.—Chambers. This law was first enacted 2 Rich. II. 1378.

Scandinavia, the ancient name of Sweden, Norway, and great part of Denmark (which see), whence proceeded the Northmen or Normans, who conquered Normandy (about 900), and eventually England (1066). They were also called Sea-kings, or Vikings. They settled Iceland and Greenland, and, it is thought, visited the northern regions of America, about the ninth century. A "National Scandinavian Society" has been formed at Stockholm; see Sweden, Dec. 1864.

Scarlet, or kermes dye, was known in the East in the earliest ages; cochineal dye, 1518. Kepler, a Fleming, established the first dye-house for scarlet in England, at Bow, 1643. The art of dyeing red was improved by Brewer, 1667.—Beckmann.

Sceptics, the sect of philosophers founded by Pyrrho, about 334 B.C. He gave ten reasons for continual suspense of judgment; he doubted of everything, never made any conclusions, and when he had carefully examined the subject, and investigated all its parts, he concluded by still doubting of its evidence. He advocated apathy and unchangeable repose. These doctrines were held by Bayle (died 1706).

Sceptre, a more ancient emblem of royalty than the crown. In the earlier ages the sceptres of kings were long walking-staves; afterwards carved and made shorter. Tarquin the elder was the first who assumed the sceptre among the Romans, about 468 B.C. The French sceptre of the first race of kings was a golden rod, A.D. 481.—Le Gendre.

Schaffhausen (N. Switzerland), a fishing village in the eighth century, became an imperial city in the thirteenth; was subjected to Austria, 1350; independent, 1415; became a Swiss canton, 1501.

Schaumburg Lippe (Germany), was formed into a county by Adolphus of Sondersleben, 1033. In 1640, on the death of count Otho IV., his mother, Elizabeth, transferred the domains to Philip of Lippe, from whom descended the reigning prince (the title assumed in 1807). Adolphus, born 1 Aug. 1817, succeeded his father, 21 Nov. 1860. Heir, his son, George, born 10 Oct. 1846. Population of the principality, 1875, 33,133.

Scheldt Tolls were imposed by the treaty of Munster (or Westphalia), 1648. The tolls were abolished for a compensation, 1867. The house of commons voted 175,650*l.* for the British portion on 9 March, 1864. The Scheldt was declared free on 3 Aug. with much rejoicing at Antwerp and Brussels.

Schiehallien, a mountain in Perthshire, where Dr. Neville Maskelyne, the astronomer-royal, made his observations with a plumb-line, 24 Oct. 1774, from which Hutton calculated that the density of the earth is five times greater than water.

Schipka Passes, on the Balkans, Turkey. Through these the Russian general Gourko entered Roumelia, 1877. After his retreat, they were fortified, and desperately, but on the whole unsuccessfully, assailed by the Turks under Suleiman Pacha, with great slaughter on both sides, 20-27 Aug. He took and lost fort St. Nicholas, 17 Sept. 1877. The Russians re-entered Roumelia, Jan. 1878.

Schism, see Heresy and Popes.

Schism Act, 13 Anne, c. 7, introduced by lord Bolingbroke, 1713; repealed by 5 Geo. I. c. 4, in 1719. By it teachers were required to declare their conformity to the established church.

Schoolmen, or SCHOLASTIC PHILOSOPHY, began in the schools founded by Charlemagne, 800-14; and prevailed in Europe from the ninth to the fifteenth century; see Doctors.

Schools. Charity schools were introduced into London to prevent the seduction of the infant poor into Roman Catholic seminaries, 3 James II. 1687.—Kapin. Charter schools were instituted in Ireland, 1733.—Scally. In England there were, in 1847, 13,642 schools (exclusively of Sunday-schools) for the education of the poor; and the number of children was 998,431. The parochial and endowed schools of Scotland were (exclusively of Sunday-schools) 4836; and the number of children 181,467. The schools in Wales were 841, and the number of children 38,164; in Ireland, 13,327 schools, and 774,000 children. In 1851 there were 2310 schools in connection with the Education Committee actually inspected in England and Scotland. They included: 1718 Church of England schools in England and Wales; 262 Protestant dissenting schools in England and Wales; 96 Roman Catholic schools in Great Britain; and 217 Presbyterian schools in Scotland, whereof 91 were of the Free church; the whole affording accommodation for 299,425 scholars; see Education, Design, Ascham, etc.

Schwarzburg (the seat of two principalities, N. Germany). Gunther, count of Schwarzburg, whose family dates from the twelfth century, was elected emperor of Germany in 1349. From the two sons of count Gunther, who died 1552, sprang the present rulers.

Scoilly Isles (the Cassiterides or Tin islands). They held commerce with the Phœniciana, and are mentioned by Strabo. They were conquered by Athelstan, 936, and given to the monks. They were granted by Elizabeth to the Godolphin family, by whom they were fortified; the works were strengthened in 1649 by the royalists, from whom they were taken by Blake, 1651. Mr. Augustus Smith, the owner, and termed the king of these isles, after a long paternal rule, died in Aug. 1872.

A British squadron under sir Cloudesley Shovel was wrecked here, when returning from an expedition against Toulon; he mistook rocks for land, and struck upon them. His ship, the Association, in which were persons of rank, and 800 brave men, went instantly to the bottom. The Eagle, capt. Hancock, and the Romney and Firebrand, were also lost; the rest of the fleet escaped, 22 Oct. 1707. Sir Cloudesley's body was conveyed to London, and buried in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory.

KINGS OF SCOTLAND.

BEFORE CHRIST.

[The early accounts of the kings are in a great measure fabulous. The series of kings is carried as far back as Alexander the Great.]

330. Fergus I.: ruled 25 years; lost in the Irish Sea. [Fergus, a brave prince, came from Ireland with an army of Scots, and was chosen king. Having defeated the Britons and slain their king Coilus, the kingdom of the Scots was entailed upon his posterity forever. He went to Ireland, and, having settled his affairs there, was drowned on his return, launching from the shore, near the harbor, called Carriekfergus to this day, 3699 A.M.—Anderson.]

AFTER CHRIST.

357. Eugenius I., son of Fincormachus; slain in battle by Maximus, the Roman general, and the Picts.

* * With this battle ended the kingdom of the Scots, after having existed from the coronation of Fergus I., a period of 706 years; the royal family fled to Denmark.—Boece, Buchanan.

[Interregnum of 27 years.]

401. Fergus II. (I.), great grandson of Eugenius, and 40th king; slain in battle with the Romans.

420. Eugenius II. or Euenus; reigned 31 years.

451. Dongardus or Domangard, brother: defeated and drowned.

457. Constantine I., brother: assassinated.

479. Congallus I., nephew; just and prudent.

501. Goranus, brother; murdered.—Boece. Died while Donald of Athol was conspiring to take his life.

535. Eugenius III., nephew; "none excelled him in justice."

558. Congallus II., brother.

569. Kinnatellus, brother; resigned for

570. Aidanus or Aidan, son of Goranus.

605. Kenneth, son of Congallus II.

606. Eugenius IV., son of Aidanus.

621. Fercharad or Ferquhard I., son; confined for misdeeds to his palace, where he laid violent hands upon himself.—Scott.

632. Donald IV., brother; drowned in Loch Tay.

646. Fercharad II., son of Fercharad I.; "most execrable."

664. Maldunius, son of Donald IV.; strangled by his wife for his supposed infidelity, for which crime she was immediately afterwards burned.

644. Eugenius V., brother.

688. Eugenius VI., son of Fercharad II.

698. Amberketus, nephew; fell by an arrow from an unknown hand.

699. Eugenius VII., brother; some ruffians designing the king's murder, entered his chamber, and, he being absent, stabbed his queen, Sionnata, to death.—Scott.

715. Mordachus, son of Amberketus.

730. Ethnus, son of Eugenius VII.

761. Eugenius VIII., son of Mordachus; sensual and tyrannous; put to death by his nobles.

764. Fergus III., son of Ethnus; killed by his jealous queen, who afterwards stabbed herself to escape a death of torture.

767. Solvathus, son of Eugenius VIII.

787. Achais; just and wise.

819. Congallus III.; a peaceful reign.

824. Dougal or Dougal, son of Solvathus; drowned.

831. Alpine, son of Achais; beheaded by the Picts.

834. Kenneth II., son; surnamed Mac Alpine; defeated the Picts, slew their king, and united them and the Scots under one sceptre, and became the first sole monarch of all Scotland, 843.

854. Donald V., brother; dethroned; committed suicide.

858. Constantine II., son of Kenneth II.; taken in battle by the Danes and beheaded.

874. Eth or Ethus, surnamed Lightfoot; died of grief in prison; confined for sensuality and crime.

876. Gregory the Great; brave and just.

893. Donald VI., son of Constantine II.; excellent.

904. Constantine III., son of Ethus; became a monk, and resigned in favor of 944. Malcolm I., son of Donald VI.; murdered.

953. Indulfus or Gundulph; killed by the Danes in an ambuscade.

961. Duff or Duffus, son of Malcolm; murdered by Donald, the governor of Forres castle.

965. Cullen or Culcun, son of Indulfus; avenged the murder of his predecessor; assassinated.

970. Kenneth III., brother of Cullen; murdered by Fencella, the lady of Fettercairn.

994. Constantine IV., son of Duff; slain.

995. Kenneth IV. or Grimus, the Grim, son of Duffus; reuled and slain in battle by Malcolm, the rightful heir to the crown, who succeeded.

1003. Malcolm II., son of Kenneth III.; assassinated on his way to Glamis; the assassins in their flight crossing a frozen lake were drowned.
1033. Duncan I., grandson; assassinated by his cousin.
1039. Macbeth, usurper; slain by Macduff, the thane of Fife.
- . Historians so differ up to this reign in the number of the kings, the dates of succession, and the circumstances narrated, that no account can be taken as precisely accurate.
1057. Malcolm III. (Canmore), son of Duncan; killed while besieging Alnwick castle.
1093. Donald VII. (Donald Bane), brother; usurper; fled to the Hebrides.
1094. Duncan II., natural son of Malcolm; murdered.
1094. Donald VII. again; deposed.
1098. Edgar, son of Malcolm (Henry I. of England married his sister Maud).
1107. Alexander I., the Fierce, brother.
1124. David I., brother; married Matilda, daughter of Waltheof, earl of Northumberland.
1153. Malcolm IV., grandson.
1165. William the Lion; brother.
1214. Alexander II., son; married Joan, daughter of John, king of England.
1249. Alexander III., married Margaret, daughter of Henry III. of England; dislocated his neck when hunting near Kinghorn.
1285. Margaret, the "Maiden of Norway," granddaughter of Alexander, "recognized by the states of Scotland, though a female, an infant, and a foreigner;" died on her passage to Scotland.
- A competition for the vacant throne; Edward I. of England decides in favor of 1292. John Balliol, who afterwards surrendered his crown, and died in exile.
[Interregnum.]
1306. Robert (Bruce) I.; a great prince.
1329. David (Bruce) II., son; Edward Balliol disputed the throne with him.
1332. David II. again; a prisoner in England, 1346-57 (Edward Balliol king, 1352-4).
1371. Robert (Stuart) II., nephew; died 19 April.
1390. Robert (John Stuart) III., son; died 4 April.
1406. James I., second son; imprisoned 18 years in England; set at liberty in 1423; conspired against, and murdered at Perth, 21 Feb.
1437. James II., son; killed at the siege of Roxburgh castle by a cannon bursting, 3 Aug.
1460. James III., son; killed in a revolt of his subjects at Bannockburn field, 11 June.
1488. James IV., son; married Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII. of England; killed at the battle of Flodden, 9 Sept.
1513. James V., son; succeeded when little more than a year old; a sovereign possessing many virtues; died 14 Dec.
1542. Mary, daughter; born 7 Dec. 1542; succeeded 14 Dec. (see Annals above).
1567. James VI., son; succeeded to the throne of England, and the kingdoms were united, 1603.
(See England.)

Scott Centenary, celebrated in London and throughout Scotland, 9 Aug. 1871. Sir Walter Scott was born 15 Aug. 1771.

Scottish Corporation (charitable), established 1665. The old hall, Crane court, Fleet street, built by Wren, burned 14 Nov. 1877; new hall inaugurated 21 July, 1880.

Scouring of the White Horse, see Ashdown.

Screw was known to the Greeks. The pumping-screw of Archimedes, or screw-cylinder for raising water, invented about 236 B.C., is still in use. It is stated that with the assistance of the screw one man can press down or raise up as much as 150 men can do without it.—The SCREW-PROPELLER consists of two or more twisted blades, like the vanes of a windmill, set on an axis, running parallel with the keel of a vessel, and revolving beneath the water at the stern. It is driven by a steam-engine. The principle was shown by Hooke in 1681, and since by Du Quet, Bernouilli, and others. Patents for propellers were taken out by Joseph Bramah in 1784; by Wm. Lyttelton in 1794; and by Edward Shorter in 1799. But these led to no useful result. In 1836 patents were obtained by Francis Pettit Smith (knighted July, 1871; died 12 Feb. 1874) and capt. John Ericsson, and to them the successful application of the screw-propeller must be attributed. The first vessels with the screw were the Archimedes, built on the Thames in 1838 by H. Wimshurst, and the Rattler, built in the United States (1844), and tried in England in 1845. Double screw-propellers are now employed. A new form of screw-propeller, invented by col. W. H. Mallory, of the U. S. army, was tried on the Thames and reported successful, Aug. 1878.

Scribblers Club, a literary club, founded by Swift in 1714, included among its members Dolingbroke, Pope, Gay, and Arbuthnot.

Scripture Knowledge Institution, Bristol, was founded by George Müller, a Prussian (born in 1806). He came to Bristol as a minister of the "Brethren" in 1832, and on 5 March, 1834, founded this institution, the objects of which are: 1. Assistance of schools giving instruction on scriptural principles; 2. Circulation of the scriptures; 3. Assistance to missions; 4. Circulation of tracts; 5. Provision for destitute orphans, see Orphan-houses. Without application, Mr. Müller, since he began, up to 1868, had received by voluntary contribution 480,000*l*.

Scrofula, see King's-evil.

Scrutin (French for ballot). In scrutin de liste the voter writes on his paper as many names as there are persons to be elected; for instance, for the whole department. In scrutin d'arrondissement, the members are elected separately. The adoption of one of these modes was much discussed in France in 1875. The conservatives prefer the latter, the radicals the former; see France, Nov. 1875. The scrutin de liste was adopted in the elections of 1848, 1849, 1871, and 1875.

M. Bardioux's bill for adopting the scrutin de liste (warmly advocated by M. Gambetta) was passed by the chamber of deputies (243-235), 18 May, 1881; rejected by the senate (148-114), 9 June, 1881.

Soullabogue, see Massacres, 1798.

Sculpture is said to have begun with the Egyptians. Bezaleel and Aholiab built the tabernacle in the wilderness, and made all the vessels and ornaments, 1491 B.C., and their skill is recorded as the gift of God (Exod. xxxi. 3). Dipenus and Scyllis, statuaries at Crete, established a school at Sicyon. Pliny speaks of them as being the first who sculptured marble and polished it; all statues before their time being of wood, 568 B.C. Alexander gave Lysippus the sole right of making his statues, 326 B.C. He left no less than 600 pieces, some of which were so highly valued in the age of Augustus that they sold for their weight in gold. Sculpture did not flourish among the Romans, and in the middle ages, with some fine exceptions, was generally degraded. With the revival of painting, it revived also; and Donato di Bardi, born at Florence A.D. 1383, was the earliest professor among the moderns. An institute of sculptors was established in 1861.

Among the more eminent American sculptors are Acra, Crawford, Powers, Story, Greenough, Brown, and Harriet Hosmer.

Scutage, or ESCUAGE. The service of the shield (scutum) is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord; and is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. The first tax levied in England to pay an army, 5 Hen. II. 1159.—Cowel.

Scutari, Asiatic Turkey, opposite Constantinople, of which it is a suburb. It was anciently called Chrysopolis, golden city, in consequence, it is said, of the Persians having established a treasury here when they attempted the conquest of Greece. Near here Constantine finally defeated Licinius, 323. The hospital was occupied by the sick and wounded of the Anglo-French army in 1854-5, whose sufferings were much alleviated by the kind exertions of Miss Florence Nightingale and a band of nurses under her, aided by a large fund of money (15,000*l.*) subscribed by the public and placed in the care of the proprietors of the Times newspaper; see Times.

Scythia, situate in the most northern parts of Europe and Asia. The boundaries were unknown to the ancients. The Scythians made several irruptions upon the more southern provinces of Asia, especially 624 B.C., when they remained in possession of Asia Minor for twenty-eight years, and at different periods extended their conquests in Europe, penetrating as far as Egypt; see Tartary.

Sea. Lieut. Maury first published his "Physical Geography of the Sea" in 1854, and other important works since; he died Feb. 1873; see Deep Sea.

Seals, or SIGNETS. Engraved gems were used as such by the Egyptians, Jews, Assyrians, and Greeks; see Exod. xxviii. 14. Ahab's seal was used by Jezebel, 899 B.C. (1 Kings xxi. 8). The Romans in the time of the Tarquins (about 600 B.C.) had gemmed rings. They sealed rooms, granaries, bags of money, etc. The German emperor, Frederick I. (A.D. 1152) had seals of gold, silver, and tin. Impressions of the seals of Saxon kings are extant; and the English great seal is attributed to Edward the Confessor (1041-66). "A seal with armorial bearings before the eleventh century is certainly false."—Fosbroke. The most ancient English seal with arms on it is said to be that of Richard I. or John. White and colored waxes were used. Our present sealing-wax, containing shellac, did not come into general use in Germany and England until about 1556. Red wafers for seals came into use about 1624, but were not used for public seals till the eighteenth century.—For SEALED LETTERS, see Great Seal and Lettres de Cachet.

Seamen. In consequence of the great loss of life by wrecks of merchant vessels, attributed to bad ships and overloading, a commission of inquiry was agreed to by parliament on the motion of Mr. S. Plimsoll (who published "Our Seamen: an Appeal"), 4 March, 1873. The duke of Edinburgh was on the commission; the duke of Somerset, chairman. Mr. Plimsoll has been censured for exaggeration.

The report issued in September tended to justify the public apprehensions, but suggested no remedy. The report presented to parliament, 2 July, 1874, condemned the present insurance system, and recommended increased responsibility of owners and others, and strengthening the powers of the Board of Trade for investigation.

The Merchant Shipping Survey bill was rejected (173-179)..... 24 June, 1874
After much excitement, an act was passed to give further powers to the Board of Trade to stop unseaworthy ships..... 13 Aug 1875

Seas, SOVEREIGNTY OF THE. The claim of England to rule the British seas is of very ancient date. Arthur is said to have assumed it, and Alfred afterwards supported this right. It was maintained by Selden, and measures were taken by government in consequence, 8 Chas. I. 1633. The Dutch, after the death of Charles I., made some attempts to obtain it, but were roughly treated by Blake and other admirals. Russia and other powers of the north armed to avoid search, 1780; again, 1800; see Armed Neutrality and Flag. The international rule of the road at sea was settled in 1862; yet near Great Britain alone there have been 13,000 collisions in six years. Mr. Wm. Stirling Lacon proposes to reduce the rules from 749 words to 144, for simplicity and security. His form had been nine times before parliament, 1873.

Sebastian, St. (N. Spain), was taken by the French, under the duke of Berwick, in 1719. It was besieged by the British and allied army under Wellington. After a most heavy bombardment, by which the whole town was laid nearly in ruins, it was stormed by gen. Graham (afterwards lord Lynedoch), and taken 31 Aug. 1813.—On 5 May, 1836, the fortified works, through the centre of which ran the high-road to Hernani, were carried by the English auxiliary legion under gen. Evans, after very hard fighting. The British naval squadron, off St. Sebastian, under lord John Hay, lent very opportune aid to the victors in this contest.—A vigorous assault was made on the lines of gen. De Lacy Evans, at St. Sebastian, by the Carlists, 1 Oct. 1836. Both parties fought with bravery. The Carlists were repulsed, after suffering severely. The loss of the Anglo-Spanish force was 376 men and 37 officers, killed and wounded. Gen. De Lacy Evans was slightly wounded; see under Leagues.

Sebastopol, or SEVASTOPOL, a town and once a naval arsenal, at southwest point of the Crimea, formerly the little village of Aktiar. The buildings were commenced in 1784, by Catherine II., after the conquest of the country. The town is built in the shape of an amphitheatre on the rise of a large hill flattened on its summit, according to a plan laid down before 1794, which has been since adhered to. The fortifications and harbor were constructed by an English engineer, col. Upton, and his sons, since 1830. The population in 1834 was 15,000. This place underwent eleven months' siege, by the English and French in 1854 and 1855. Immediately after the battle of the Alma, 20 Sept. 1854, the allied army marched to Sebastopol, and took up its position on the plateau between it and Balaklava, and the grand attack and bombardment commenced 17 Oct. 1854, without success.* After many sanguinary encounters by day and night, and repeated bombardments, a grand assault was made on 8 Sept. 1855, upon the Malakhoff tower and the Redans, the most important fortifications to the south of the town. The French succeeded in capturing and retaining the Malakhoff. The attacks of the English on the great Redan and of the French upon the little Redan were successful, but the assailants were compelled to retire after a desperate struggle with great loss of life. The French lost 1616 killed, of whom 5 were generals, 24 superior and 116 inferior officers, 4500 wounded, and 1400 missing. The English lost 385 killed (29 being commissioned and 42 non-commissioned officers), 1886 wounded, and 176 missing. In the night the Russians abandoned the southern and principal part of the town and fortifications, after destroying as much as possible, and crossed to the northern forts. They also sank or burned the remainder of their fleet. The allies found a very great amount of stores when they entered the place, 9 Sept. The works were utterly destroyed in April, 1856, and the town was restored to the Russians in July; see Russo-Turkish War.

* In consequence of the sufferings and disasters of the army in the winter of 1854-5, the Sebastopol Inquiry Committee was appointed, and the Aberdeen administration resigned, Feb. 1855. The committee sat from 1 March to 15 May, lord Aberdeen being the last person examined. Its report was presented 18 June. Mr. Roebuck, the chairman, moved on 17 July that the house should pass a vote of severe reprobation on every member of the Aberdeen administration. On 19 July his motion was lost by a majority of 107 against it. In 1855 the government sent sir John M'Neill and col. Tulloch to inquire into the state of the armies in the Crimea. Their report was presented to parliament in Feb. 1856. A commission was appointed to consider the statements in the report (which were very unfavorable to many officers), but the substance of the report was unshaken.

Seceders; Secession Church, see Burghers.

Secession Ordinances. The beginning of the civil war in the United States dates from the secession from the Union of the Southern states in the spring of 1861. The ordinances of secession were passed by these states in the following order: By South Carolina, 20 Dec. 1860; Florida, 7 Jan. 1861; Mississippi, 9 Jan. 1861; Alabama, 11 Jan. 1861; Georgia, 19 Jan. 1861; Louisiana, 26 Jan. 1861; Texas, 7 Feb. 1861; Virginia, 17 April, 1861; Arkansas, 6 May, 1861; Tennessee, 6 May, 1861; North Carolina, 20 May, 1861.

Secondary of London, an ancient office, resembling that of under-sheriff in counties. The place was purchasable till early in the present century, when it was bought up by the corporation.

Secret Societies, see Assassins, Fenians, Ribbonism, Vehmich Tribunal, Rosicrucians, etc.

Secretaries of State. The earliest authentic record of a secretary of state is in the reign of Henry III., when John Maunsell is described as "Secretarius Noster," 1253.—Rymer. Towards the close of Henry VIII.'s reign, two secretaries were appointed; and upon the union with Scotland, Anne added a third as secretary for Scotch affairs; this appointment was afterwards laid aside; but in the reign of George III. the number was again increased to three, one for the American department. In 1782 this last was abolished by act of parliament; and the secretaries were appointed for home, foreign, and colonial affairs. When there were but two secretaries, one held the portefeuille of the Northern department, comprising the Low Countries, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, Russia, etc.; the other, of the Southern department, including France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Turkey; the affairs of Ireland belonging to the elder secretary; both secretaries then equally directed the home affairs.—Beaumont. There are now five secretaries—home, foreign, colonial, war, and (in 1858) India, all in the cabinet; see Administrations, and separate articles, Liverpool, etc., to Gludstone.

Sects, Religious, see under Worship, and their respective titles.

Secular Games (Ludi Sæculares), very ancient Roman games, celebrated on important occasions. Horace wrote his "Carmen Sæculare" for their celebration in the reign of the emperor Augustus (17). They took place again in the reign of Claudius (47), of Domitian (88), and, for the last time, of Philip (248), believed to be 2000 years after the foundation of the city.

Secularism, a name given to the principles advocated by G. J. and Austin Holyoake, about 1846, and since by Mr. Bradlaugh.

Its central idea is free, not lawless, thought, and it considers scepticism to be scrutiny. It advocates liberty of action without injury to others. It is not against Christianity, but independent of it. Its standard is utilitarian; it is the religion of the present life only; teaching men to seek morality in nature, and happiness in duty. Mr. Austin Holyoake and other secularists repudiated atheism; Mr. Bradlaugh and others profess it.

Security from Violence Act, passed in 1863, appointed whipping as part of the punishment for attempts at garroting.

Sedan, an ancient fortified city in the valley of the Meuse, N.E. of France, the seat of a principality long held by the dukes of Bouillon. On 6 July, 1641, a victory was gained at La Marfée, near Sedan, by the count of Soissons and the troops of Bouillon and other French princes, over the royal army supporting Richelieu; but the count was slain on 23 June, 1642. The duke was arrested in the midst of his army, and was made to cede Sedan to the crown. The Protestant university was abolished after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, 22 Oct. 1685. Around this place a series of desperate conflicts on 29, 30, and 31 Aug. between the French army of the north, under marshal MacMahon (about 150,000 men), and the greater part of the three German armies under the king and crown-prince of Prussia, and the crown-prince of Saxony (about 250,000 men), was brought to a close on 1 Sept. 1870.

The battle began with attacks on the French right and left about 5 A.M., and was very severe at 2 P.M. At 4 P.M. the Germans remained masters of the field, and the crown-prince of Prussia announced a complete victory, the chief part of the French army retreating into Sedan.

The emperor Napoleon was present during the battle, and, it is said, stood at Igles, near Sedan, exposed for four hours to the German grenades. The impossibility of further resistance was then evident. The Germans had contracted their circle close round Sedan; their formidable artillery held all the heights, from which they could at pleasure wholly destroy the town and the army, and only 2000 men were in a condition to respond to their commander's call, and to make a supreme effort to break through the enemy with the emperor and escape to Montmédy.

At first gen. De Wimpffen (called to the command when MacMahon was wounded) indignantly rejected the terms offered by the victor, and the emperor had a fruitless interview with count Bismarck to endeavor to mitigate them.

On 2 Sept. the emperor wrote in autograph to the king of Prussia, "Mon frère, n'ayant pu mourir à la tête de mes troupes, je dépose mon épée au pied de votre majesté. NAPOLEON." A capitulation of Sedan and the whole army therein was signed by generals Von Moltke and De Wimpffen at the château of Bellevue, near Frenois, at 11.30 A.M. and at 2 P.M. an interview took place between the king and the emperor, who was downcast but dignified.

The conflict was principally carried on by the artillery, in which (according to the emperor) the Germans had the advantage, not only in number (600 to 500), but also in weight, range, and precision. The carnage was awful, and the field the next day was a mass of shattered bones, torn flesh, and colored rags.

About 25,000 French prisoners were taken in the battle, and 33,000 surrendered the next day, together with 70 mitrailleuses, 400 field-pieces, and 150 fortress guns. About 14,000 French wounded were found lying in the neighborhood, and about 3000 escaped into Belgium and laid down their arms. The great army of the north had ceased to exist. 'Among the killed was lieut.-col. Pemberton, a correspondent of the Times, who had approached too near the conflict.

The French emperor and his suite arrived at Wilhelmshöhe, a castle near Cassel appointed for his residence (formerly inhabited by his uncle Jerome, when king of Westphalia), in the evening of 5 Sept.

On 1 Sept. the village of Bazailles was stormed by the Bavarians and burned, it was said, because the inhabitants fired on the ambulances; many women and children perished. The French denied the provocation. The place had been previously twice bombarded and stormed by the maddened combatants.

In a letter dated 12 May, 1872, the emperor Napoleon took upon himself the whole responsibility of the surrender of Sedan.

Sedan Chairs (so called from Sedan) were first seen in England in 1581. One used in the reign of James I., by the duke of Buckingham, caused great indignation, and the people exclaimed that he was employing his fellow-creatures to do the service of beasts. Sedan chairs came into London in 1634, when sir Francis Duncomb obtained the sole privilege to use, let, and hire a number of such covered chairs for fourteen years. They came into very general use in 1649.

Sedgmoor (Somersetshire), where the duke of Monmouth (natural son of Charles II. by Lucy Walters), who had risen in rebellion on the accession of James II., was completely defeated by the royal army, 6 July, 1685. The duke was made a prisoner in the disguise of a peasant, at the bottom of a ditch, overcome with hunger and fatigue. He was tried and beheaded on 15 July following.

Sedition. Sedition acts were passed in the reign of George III. The proclamation against seditious writings was published May, 1792. The celebrated Sedition bill passed Dec. 1795. Seditious societies were suppressed by act, June, 1797. The Seditious Meetings and Assemblies bill passed 31 March, 1817. In Ireland, during the Roman Catholic and Repeal agitation, acts or proclamations against sedition and seditious meet-were published from time to time until 1848; see Alien and Sedition Laws.

Seeds. An act was passed to prevent the adulteration of seeds (a common practice), 11 Aug. 1869; amended in 1878.

Seekers, see Quakers.

Segedin, or SZEGEDIN (Hungary). Here was concluded a treaty between Ladislaus IV. and Amurath II., 12 July, 1444. It was treacherously annulled at the instigation of cardinal Julian, who with Ladislaus perished in the fatal battle of Varna, 10 Nov. 1444; see Varna.

Selcento, see under Italian.

Selidice (Poland), where a battle was fought 10 April, 1831, between the Poles and Russians. The Poles obtained the victory after a bloody conflict, taking 4000 prisoners and several pieces of cannon; but this success was soon followed by fatal reverses.

Seismometer (from σείσμος, Greek for earthquake), an apparatus for measuring the violence of the shocks. One is described by Mr. Robert Mallet in his work on earthquakes, published in 1858.

Sela, see Petra.

Selection, NATURAL, see Species.

Selectmen, the earliest officers of the townships formed by the first colonists of New England, about 1635.

Selenium, a grayish-white elementary substance (chemically resembling sulphur), discovered in the stone rhotite by Berzelius, in 1817.

The variation in its resistance to the electric current when subjected to light was observed by Mr. Willoughby Smith in 1873, and utilized in the photophone (which see). Dr. C. William Siemens constructed a "selenium eye."

Seleucia (Syria), made the capital of the Syrian monarchy by its builder, Seleucus Nicator, 312 B.C. On the fall of the Seleucidae, it became a republic, 65 B.C. It was taken by Trajan, A.D. 116; several times given up and retaken; subjugated by the Saracens, and united with Ctesiphon, 636.

Seleucides, ERA OF TIME, dates from the reign of Seleucus Nicator. It was used in Syria for many years, and frequently by the Jews until the fifteenth century, and by some Arabians. Opinions vary as to its commencement. To reduce it to our era (supposing it to begin 1 Sept. 312 B.C.), subtract 311 years 4 months.

Self-denying Ordinance, which ordained that no member of parliament should hold any civil or military office or command conferred by either or both of the houses, or by authority derived from them, after much discussion, was passed 3 April, 1655, by the influence of Cromwell, who thus removed the earl of Essex and other Presbyterians out of his way. A somewhat similar ordinance was adopted by the parliament at Melbourne in Australia, in 1858. The name was given to an arrangement made respecting British naval promotions and retirements in 1870.

Sellasia (Laconia). Here the Spartans, under Cleomenes, were defeated by Antigonus Doson and the Achæans, 221 B.C.

Selsey, see Chichester.

Semaphore, see Telegraphy.

Sematology (Greek σημα, a sign), the science of signs, a term proposed by B. H. Smart, who died 1872.

Seminara (Naples). Near here Gonsalvo de Cordova, the great captain, was defeated by the French, in 1495; but defeated them, 21 April, 1503.

Semincas, see Simancas.

Seminole War. Towards the close of 1835, the Seminole Indians in Florida, guided by their head sachem, Micanopy, and led by their principal chief, Osceola, commenced a most distressing warfare upon the frontier settlements of Florida and Georgia. The cause of the outbreak was an attempt, by the federal government, to remove them to the wilderness beyond the Mississippi. Provision had been made for their peaceable removal. The Indians refused to go, and United States troops were sent into Florida, to remove them by force, if necessary. For almost seven years the Seminoles, in their swamps and everglades, resisted the large number of United States troops who were sent there under the most eminent army officers. At one time the Creeks, who were about to be removed from Georgia and Alabama, aided their brethren in Florida by attacking white settlers within their domain. This war cost the United States many valuable lives and millions of treasure; see Battles.

Sempach (Switzerland). Here the Swiss gained a great victory over Leopold, duke of Austria, 9 July, 1386. The duke was slain, and the liberty of their country established. The day is still commemorated.

Semper Eadem ("Always the same"), one of the mottoes of queen Elizabeth, was adopted by queen Anne, 13 Dec. 1702. Many suspected this motto to denote her Jacobitism, and it ceased to be used after her reign.

Semperingham, see Gilbertines.

Senate (Senatus). In the ancient republics the government was divided between the senatus (from senis, old; in Greek, γερουσία, from γέρων, old), an assembly of elders, and the popular assembly (comitia, Latin; εκκλησία, Greek), the king being merely the executive. The Roman senate, said to have originally been composed of 100 members, was raised to 300 by Tarquinius Priscus; to about 600 by Sylla, about 81 B.C.; and to 900 by Julius Cæsar. It was reformed and reduced to 600 by Augustus; and gradually lost its power and dignity under the emperors. The mere form existed in the reign of Justinian. A second senate, formed at Constantinople by Constantine, retained its office till the ninth century. S.P.Q.R. on the Roman standard stood for "Senatus Populusque Romanus," "the Roman senate and people." A senatus consultum was a law enacted by the senate. The constitution of the United States provides congress shall consist of a senate and house of representatives. In the senate, representation is by states, without regard to population, each state having two senators. The constitution forbids the impairment of this equality of representation. In cases of the impeachment of high officers of the government the senate sits as a court of impeachment.

The French senate was created by the constitution of the year 8, promulgated 24 Dec. 1799, to watch over the administration of the laws. The number of senators was raised gradually from 60 to 137. The senate was replaced by the chamber of peers in 1814; re-established by Napoleon III., 14 Jan. 1852; and abolished, 6 Sept. 1870. Its re-establishment was proposed in 1873.

Establishment of a senate of 300 voted; 225 to be elected by the departments; 75 (for life) by national assembly, 22 Feb. 1875.

The 75 elected, 9-21 Dec. 1875; see France.

Seneffe (Belgium). Near here was fought a severe but indecisive battle between the Dutch, under the prince of Orange (afterwards our William III.), and the French, led by the great Condé, 11 Aug. 1674.

Senegal, French colonies on the river of that name in Senegambia, W. Africa, settled about 1626; several times taken by the British, but recovered by the French, to whom they were finally restored in 1814.

Seneschal, a high officer of the French royal household. In the reign of Philip I., 1059, the office was esteemed the highest place of trust.

Senlac, see Hastings.

Senones (see Gauls), defeated by Camillus, 367 B.C. They defeated Metellus, the consul at Arretium, 284, but were almost exterminated by Dolabella, 283. They invaded Greece in 279; were defeated by Antigonus Gonatas, 278; and sued for peace.

Senova, near Schipka, in the Balkans. Here Salim-pacha and the Turks were defeated by the Russian general Skobelev, 9 Jan. 1878. This victory virtually closed the war, and opened the road to Adrianople. About 26,000 Turks and 283 officers were made prisoners, with 40 Krupp guns. About 8000 Turks and 3000 Russians were killed or wounded.

Sentinum (central Italy). The site of a great victory of the Romans over the Samnites and Gauls, whose general, Gellius Egnatius, was slain, 396 B.C.

Sephardim, the name given to the descendants of the highly civilized Jews of Spain and Portugal, who fled from the persecutions of the Inquisition, 1492-1506. The Jews interpret Sephard, in Obadiah 20, as Spain.

Sepoys (a corruption of sipahi, Hindostanee for a soldier), the term applied to the native troops in India. Under able generals, they greatly aided in establishing British rule in India. For their mutinies, see Fallorv, 1806; Madras, 1809; and India, 1857.

September, the seventh Roman month, reckoned from March (from septimus, seventh). It became the ninth month when January and February were added to the year by Numa, 713 A.C. The Roman senate would have given this month the name of Tiberius, but the emperor opposed it; the emperor Domitian gave it his own name, Germanicus; the senate under Antoninus Pius gave it that of Antoninus; Commodus gave it his surname, Hercules; and the emperor Tacitus his own name, Tacitus.—"September 4 government," see France, Sept. 1870.

Septembrizars. In the French Revolution, a dreadful massacre took place in Paris, 2-5 Sept. 1792. The prisons were broken open, and the prisoners butchered, among them an ex-bishop, and nearly 100 non-juring priests. Some accounts state the number of persons slain at 1200, others at 4000. The agents in this slaughter were named Septembrizars.

Septennialists, the party in France who support the septennate or seven years' government of marshal MacMahon, enacted by the assembly, 19, 20 Nov. 1873; see France, 1874.

Septennial Parliaments. Edward I. held but one parliament every two years. In 4 Edward III. it was enacted "that a parliament should be holden every year once." This continued to be the statute-law till 16 Charles I., 1641, when an act was passed for holding parliaments once in three years at least; repealed in 1664. The Triennial act was re-enacted in 1694. Triennial parliaments thence continued till 2 Geo. I., 1716, when, in consequence of the allegation that "a popish faction were designing to renew the rebellion in this kingdom, and the report of an invasion from abroad," it was enacted that "the then parliament should continue for seven years." This Septennial act, entitled "An Act for Enlarging the Continuance of Parliaments" (1715 in the statutes, 4to, given as 1 Geo. I. stat. 2, c. 38), was passed 7 May, 1716; see Parliaments. Several unsuccessful motions have been made for its repeal; one in May, 1837.

Septimania, a Roman province, S. France; see Languedoc.

Septuagesima Sunday, 13 Feb. 1881; 5 Feb. 1882; see Quadragesima Sunday and Week. Septuagesima is the season between Epiphany and Lent.

Septuagint Version or the Bible, made from Hebrew into Greek, 277 A.C. Seventy-two translators were shut up in thirty-six cells; each pair translated the whole; and, on subsequent comparisons, the thirty-six copies did not vary by a word or letter.—Justin Martyr. St. Jerome affirms that they translated only the Pentateuch; others say they translated the whole. Ptolemy Philadelphus gave the Jews about a million sterling for a copy of the Old Testament, and seventy translators half a million more for the translation.—Josephus. Finished in seventy-two days.—Hesiod. The above statements are merely traditional; see Bible and Alexandrian Codex.

Sequestration of Banatians Act, passed 13 July, 1871.

Seraing, Belgium, on the Meuse, near Liège, formerly the site of a palace of the prince-bishops of Liège; now containing great iron-works, established in 1817 by John Cockerill, an Englishman. His father, who had works at Liège, died in 1818. Nearly the whole town has been built by Cockerill.

Serajevo, capital of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with about 80,000 inhabitants, was founded in 1463, by two nobles. It was taken by Matthias, king of Hungary, in 1480, and by prince Eugene of Savoy in 1698. In pursuance of the treaty of Berlin, 13 July, 1878, the Austrians entered Serajevo, after a sharp conflict with the Bosnians, and bombardment of the city, 19 Aug. 1878. By a fire, 8, 9 Aug. 1878, above 20,000 persons were rendered homeless.

Serapia, Tauris or (near Naples), was excavated in 1780. The investigations of Lyell and Babbage into the history of the sinking and burying of this temple were of great geological interest.

Seraskier, the Turkish minister of war.

Serfs, see Slavery (note), and Russia, 1861, 1862.

Sergeants-at-Law are pleaders from among whom the judges are ordinarily chosen, and who are called sergeants of the cof. The judges call them brothers; see Coif. Their exclusive rights of addressing Court of Common Pleas suspended, 1884; restored, 1840; abolished, 1846. By the Supreme Court of Judicature act, judges on their appointment need not be made sergeants, 1878; see Law of Court.

Seringapatam (S. India), the capital of Hyder Ali, sovereign of Mysore (which see). The battle of Seringapatam, called also the battle of Arikera, in which the British defeated Tippee Sahib, was fought 15 May, 1791. The redoubts were stormed, and Tippee was reduced by lord Cornwallis, 6 Feb. 1792. After this capture, preliminaries of peace were signed, and Tippee agreed to cede one half of Mysore, and to pay 88,000,000 rupees (about 2,800,000 sterling) to England, and to give up to lord Cornwallis his two eldest sons as hostages.—In a new war, the Madras army, under gen. Harris, arrived before Seringapatam, 5 April, 1799; it was joined by the Bombay army, 14 April; and the place was stormed and carried by major-gen. Baird, 4 May, same year. In this engagement Tippee was killed; see Mysore.

Serpentine, see Hyde Park.

Servants. An act levying a duty on male servants was passed in 1777, which was augmented in 1781 et seq. A tax on female servants, imposed in 1786, was repealed in 1792. The tax on servants yielded, in 1800, about 250,000*l.* per annum; in 1840 the revenue from it had fallen to 201,482*l.*; in 1880 it produced about the same sum. The license duty for male servants is now 1*l.* each. It produced in the year 1876-7, 167,004*l.*; 1877-8, 184,641*l.*; 1878-9, 144,081*l.* The law respecting servants was amended by the Master and Servants act, passed in 1867.

Servia, an hereditary principality, nominally subject to Turkey, south of Hungary. The Servians are of Slavonic origin. They embraced Christianity about 640. The emperor Manuel subjugated them in 1150; but they recovered their independence in 1180, and were ruled by princes, generally named Stephen, till their country was finally subdued by the sultan Mahomet II., in 1459. Population in 1864, 886,000; 1878, 1,222,506; 1879, 1,266,928.

An empire founded by king Deschaw, 1240; later, emperor, defeated, 15 June, 1280; country annexed by Turks.

1868. Milan (Obrenovitch) IV., grand-nephew; again proclaimed, 2 July, 1868; married Natalie Koschko (born 1850), 17 Oct. 1875.
Heir: Alexander, born 14 Aug. 1876.

Servile Wars, insurrections of slaves against their masters. Two were quelled in Sicily, after much slaughter, 132, 99 B.C.; see Spartans.

Session Courts in England were appointed to be held quarterly in 1113, and the times for holding them regulated in 1831; see Quarter Sessions, and Court of Session. The kirk session in Scotland consists of the minister and elders of each parish. They superintend religious worship and discipline, dispense money collected for the poor, etc.

Sestus, on the Thracian Chersonesus; see Hellaspont. Near Sestus was the western end of Xerxes' bridge, across the Hellespont, 480 B.C. Sestus was retaken from the Persians by the Athenians, 478, and held by them till 404, giving them the command of the trade of the Euxine.

Settled Estates Act, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 18, consolidates and amends the law relating to their leases, sales, etc. (passed 28 June, 1877).

Settlement, Act of, for securing the succession to the British throne, to the exclusion of Roman Catholics, was passed in 1689. This name is also given to the statute by which the crown, after the demise of William III. and queen Anne, without issue, was limited to Sophia, electress of Hanover, granddaughter of James I., and her heirs being Protestants, 1702. The Irish Act of Settlement, passed in 1662, was repealed in 1689; see Hanover.

Settlement, Law of, of the poor, the subject of many statutes since 1535, was somewhat changed by the Poor-law act of 1834.

Seven Bishops, see Bishops, 1688.

Seven Brothers, martyrs at Rome, under Antoninus; their feast is kept 10 July.

Seven Churches of Asia, to the angels (ministers) of which the apostle John was commanded to write the epistles contained in the second and third chapters of his Revelation — viz., Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, 96.

1. Ephesus (which see). Paul founded the church here, 57. In 53, he was in great danger from a tumult created by Demetrius; to the elders of this church he delivered his warning address, 60 (Acts xix. xx). Ephesus was in a ruinous state even in the time of Justinian (527), and still remains so.

2. Smyrna. An ancient Greek city, claiming to be the birth-place of Homer; was destroyed by the Lydians; about 627 B.C. rebuilt by Antigonos and Lysimachus. Its first bishop, Polycarp, was martyred here about 169. It has been frequently captured. It was sacked by Tamerlane in 1402; and finally taken by the Turks, 1421. It is now the chief city of Asia Minor, and the seat of the Levant trade. Earthquake, above 2000 perished, 12 May, 1875.

3. Pergamos. Capital of the kingdom of the same name, founded by Philetarus, whom Lysimachus, one of Alexander's generals, had made governor, 283 B.C. He was succeeded by Eumenes I., 263; Attalus (who took the title of king), 241; Eumenes II. (who collected a great library), 197; Attalus II., 159; Attalus III., 138. He bequeathed his kingdom to the Romans, 133. It revolted, was subdued, and made the Roman province Asia. Pergamos is still an important place, called Bergamo. Parchment is said to have been invented here.

4. Thyatira. Now a mean town of 2000 houses, called Ak-hissar, "White Castle."

5. Sardis. Formerly the capital of Lydia, the kingdom of Croesus (560 B.C.); taken by Cyrus, 548; burned by the Greeks, 499; it flourished under the Roman empire; was taken by the Turks, and destroyed by Tamerlane about 1402; it is now a miserable village, named Sart.

6. Philadelphia was built by Attalus (III.) Philadelphus, king of Pergamos (159-138 B.C.); was taken by Bajazet I., A.D. 1390. It is now called Allah Shehr, "The city of God," and is a miserable town of 3000 houses.

7. Laodicea. In Phrygia, near Lydia; has suffered much from earthquakes. It is now a deserted place, called Eskelissar, "The Old Castle."

Seven Days' Battles AROUND RICHMOND, VA., U.S.A. A series of severe conflicts between the confederates under Lee, and the United States army under McClellan, lasting from 25 June to 1 July, 1862, during which McClellan retired from his position in siege of Richmond to Harrison's Landing on the James River. See Penninsular Campaign, and United States, 1862.

Seven Days' War, see Army, 1871.

Seven Sleepers. According to an early legend, seven youths, in 251, commanded to worship a statue set up in Ephesus by the emperor Decius, refused, and fled to a cavern in the mountain, where they were enclosed, and slept, according to Durandus, for 300 years. Other writers give shorter periods, and various accounts of the incidents which accompanied the awakening. A festival in their honor is kept by the Roman Catholic church on 27 July.

Seville (S.W. Spain), the Hispalis of the Phenicians and the Julia of the Romans, was the capital until Philip II. finally established his court at Madrid, 1563. It opened its gates to the Saracens in 712, and was taken from them by the Christians in 1472, after an obstinate siege. The peace of Seville between England, France, and Spain, and also a defensive alliance to which Holland acceded, signed 9 Nov. 1729. In the peninsular war, Seville surrendered to the French, 1 Feb. 1810; and was taken by assault by the British and Spaniards, after the battle of Salamanca, 27 Aug. 1812. It was besieged but not taken by Espartero, July, 1845. Visit of prince of Wales, 20 April, 1874.

Sèvres, see Porcelain.

Sewers, see Cloaca Maxima. An act was passed in 1847 enforcing the conveyance of the sewage of houses in London into the public sewers. The commissioners of sewers in London were superseded by the metropolitan commissioners of sewers, nominated by the government. They abolished the large brick sewers, introducing pipe-drains, and turned the contents of 80,000 cesspools into the river Thames. The necessity for purifying the polluted river led to the construction of a new system of drainage, under the superintendence of the Metropolitan Board of Works (which see). The main drainage (the plan of Mr. J. W. Bazalgette) consists of the northern high-level, middle-level, and low-level, and southern high-level and low-level. On 14 March, 1865, the works were said to be completed, except the low-level sewer on the north side, which was waiting for the completion of the Thames embankment, etc. On 4 April, 1865, the prince of Wales started the engines which commenced lifting the waters of the southern outfall, at Crompton Point, near Erith.* The main drainage works of the metropolis (92 miles) were finally completed Aug. 1875. The sewage is carried 14 miles down the river. Total cost, 4,500,000; see Carbolic Acid.

Sewing-machine. It is said that Thomas Saint patented one for boots and shoes in 1790. Similar inventions are ascribed to Duncan (1804), Adams and Dodge (American, 1818), Thimmonier (French, 1834), and Walter Hunt (1834). The first really practical sewing-machine was the invention of Elias Howe, an American mechanic, of Cambridge, in Massachusetts, about 1841, who died in Brooklyn, 2 Oct. 1867, aged 47. It is now known under an improved form as Thomas's shuttle machine, by whom it was introduced into England in 1846. Many improvements have been since made.

Sextant, an instrument used like a quadrant, containing sixty degrees, or the sixth part of a circle, invented by Tycho Brahe, at Augsborg, in 1580. The Arabian astronomers are said to have had a sextant of fifty-nine feet nine inches radius, about 905.

Seychelles Isles (Indian ocean), settled by the French about 1769; captured by the British, 1794; ceded to them, 1815.

* The utilization of disinfected sewage as manure is now much advanced. Great success is said to have been attained at Edinburgh, Carlisle, Croydon, and other places. Much hot controversy has arisen respecting the disposal of the London sewage. On 15 Nov. 1864, the Metropolitan board accepted a contract for its disposal from Messrs. Bazalgette and Napier. Sewage utilization acts were passed in 1865 and 1867, and the Metropolitan Sewage and Faeces Reclamation acts were passed in June, 1865. The sewage farm near Barking, Essex, was reported to be flourishing in 1868, good grass and corn crops raised.

Shaftesbury Park Estate, near Wandsworth, London, S.W., a model village, and termed "a workman's city;" built here for clerks, artisans, and laborers, by a company, was opened by the earl of Shaftesbury, 8 Nov. 1873, and 18 July, 1874.

Shaftesbury's Act, Lond. 10 & 19 Vict. c. 86 (1865), relates to religious worship.

Shakers, an English sect, now chiefly found in America, arose in the time of Charles I., and derived its name from their voluntary convulsion. It existed for a short time only, but was revived by James Wardley in 1747, and still more by Ann Lee (or Standish), expelled Quakers, about 1757. The sect emigrated to America, May, 1772, and settled near Albany, N.Y., 1774. They have several communities in the United States; they hold all goods in common, live uprightly, and are noted for their frugality, industry, integrity, and thrift. They denounce marriage as sinful, regard calisthenics as holy, oppose war, disown baptism and the Lord's supper, and use dancing as part of their worship.—Moravia. One of their elders, Fred. W. Evans, lectured in London, Aug. 1871.

Above a hundred of them settled in the New Forest, near Lymington, Hampshire, on property obtained for them by a Miss Wood, not paying the interest of a mortgage, they were ejected in severe weather, and suffered much, end of Dec. 1874. They are called "Bible Christians," and Gillingham, from Mrs. Gilling, a leader among them. Goods seized for debt, about 27 July; expelled, 28 Aug.; permitted to remain in the neighborhood, Oct. 1875. Miss Wood was confined as a fanatic, 27 Feb. 1876.

Shakespeare's Plays. William Shakespeare was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, 23 April, 1564, and died on his birthday, 1616. The first collected edition of his works is dated 1623 (a fac-simile of this edition was published, 1862-5); the second, 1632; the third, 1664; the fourth, 1835; all in folio. Critical editions of the text, edited by Alexander Dyce, were published in 1837 and 1844-6; Boydel's edition, with numerous plates, was published in 9 vols. folio, in 1802. Ainsworth's Index to Shakespeare was published in 1790; Twiss's Index, in 1805, and Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's Concordance, 1847; "Key to Shakespeare," 1873. John Bartlett's "Shakespeare Concordance," published in Boston, U. S., 1881.

SHAKESPEARE'S GLOBE THEATRE, London, built 1594, situated near the spot still called Bankside. Shakespeare was himself part proprietor, here some of his plays were first produced, and he himself performed in them. It was of a horse-shoe form, partly covered with thatch. After it was licensed, the thatch took fire, through the negligent discharge of a piece of ordnance, and the whole building was consumed, 29 June, 1613. The house was crowded to excess to witness the play of "Henry VIII.," but the audience escaped unhurt, see Globe.

SHAKESPEARE'S JUBILEE, projected by David Garrick, was celebrated at Stratford-upon-Avon, 8-9 Sept. 1769. A similar festival was kept 26 April, 1864. The anniversary of Shakespeare's birth was celebrated, with many festivities, at Stratford-upon-Avon, 26-29 April, 1864.

SHAKESPEARE'S HOUSE. In 1847, a number of persons of distinction interested themselves for the preservation of the house in which Shakespeare was born, then actually put up for sale. They held a meeting at the Thatched house tavern, London, 26 Aug. in that year, and took measures for promoting a subscription set on foot by the Shakespearean Club at Stratford-upon-Avon, and a committee was appointed to carry out their object. In the end, Shakespeare's house was sold at the Auction Mart in the city of London, where it was "stocked down" to the United Committee of London and Stratford for the large sum of 2000*l.*, 10 Sept. 1847. In 1856, a learned Oriental scholar, John Shakespeare (no relation of the poet), gave 3000*l.* to purchase the adjoining house, that it might be pulled down in order to insure the poet's house from the risk of fire.

SHAKESPEARE'S FURNACE, established in Oct. 1861, to purchase Shakespeare's garden, birthplace estate, and to erect and † In 1848, Mr. J. P. Collier, editor of an edition of Shakespeare, purchased a copy of the second folio, on which was written in pencil a number of corrections, supposed to have been made soon after the time of publication. At first he thought little of these marks, but in 1859 he was induced to publish "Notes and Emendations," derived from this volume. Much controversy ensued as to the authenticity of these corrections; and in 1869 it was generally agreed that they were of modern date, and consequently of little value.

Shamrock. It is said that the shamrock used by the Irish as a national emblem was adopted by Patrick M'Alpine, since called St. Patrick, as a simile of the Trinity, about 432.

Shanghai, or Shanghai (China), captured by the British, 19 June, 1842; by the Taeping rebels, 7 Sept. 1853; retaken by the imperialists, 1855. The rebels were defeated near Shanghai by the English and French, allies of the emperor, 1 March, 1862; see China.

Shawls, of Oriental origin, were introduced into Paris after the return of Napoleon Bonaparte from Egypt, 1801. The manufacture was introduced by Barrow and Watson in 1784, at Norwich. It began at Paisley and Edinburgh about 1805.—Cze.

Sheep were exported from England to Spain, and, the breed being thereby improved, produced the fine Spanish wool, which proved detrimental to our woollen manufacture, 1467.—Anderson. Their exportation was prohibited on pain of fine and imprisonment, 1522. The number of sheep in the United Kingdom has been variously stated—by some at 43,000,000, by others at 49,000,000, and by more at 60,000,000, in 1840. The number must have progressively increased to the present time, particularly as the unrestricted importation since 1846 vastly swells the amount. In 1851 there were imported into England 201,859 sheep and lambs; in 1858, 184,482; in 1864, 496,243. In Aug. and Sept. 1862, many sheep in Wiltshire died of small-pox; and on 11 Sept. government declared its intention of enforcing the act for the prevention of contagion. The evil soon abated. In April, 1866, when the disease reappeared, the preventive regulations were reissued.

Mortality among sheep through flukes, etc. April, 1880
In 1865, 914,170 sheep and lambs were imported; in 1868, 341,155; 1871, 916,799; 1874, 758,915; 1875, 985,652; 1876, 1,041,329; 1877, 874,055; 1878, 892,125; 1879, 944,888. For number in Great Britain, see under Cattle.

Sheepshanks's Donations. On 2 Feb. 1857, Mr. John Sheepshanks, by a deed of gift, presented to the nation his valuable collection of paintings and drawings, valued at 60,000*l*. In accordance with the donor's directions, the pictures were placed in the South Kensington Museum. The collection is rich in the works of Mulready, Landseer, and Leslie. He died 5 Oct. 1863.—On 2 Dec. 1858, the trustees of his brother, the late rev. Richard Sheepshanks, presented 10,000*l*. stock to Trinity College, Cambridge, for the promotion of the study of astronomy, meteorology, and magnetism.

Sheerness (N. Kent), a royal dockyard, planned by Charles II. in 1663, was taken by the Dutch, under De Ruyter, 9 June, 1667. Improved since 1815; new fortifications still in progress.

Sheffield, on the river Sheaf, West Riding, Yorkshire; renowned for cutlery, plated goods, etc. Sheffield thwytles are mentioned by Chaucer. In the time of Edward III. Sheffield in the time of the Conqueror was obtained by Roger de Buisli, and has since been held by the Lovetots, Nevils, Talbots, and Howards.

Sheriff, or shire-reve, governor of a shire or county. London had its sheriffs prior to William I.'s reign, but some say that sheriffs were first nominated for every county in England by William in 1079. According to other historians, Henry Cornhill and Richard Reynere were the first sheriffs of London, 1 Rich. I. 1189. The nomination of sheriffs, according to the present mode, took place in 1461.—Stour. Anciently sheriffs were hereditary in Scotland, and in some English counties, as Westmoreland. The sheriffs of Dublin (first called bailiffs) were appointed in 1308, and obtained the name of sheriff by an incorporation of Edward VI. 1548. Thirty-five sheriffs were fined, and eleven excused, in one year, rather than serve the office for London, 1734; see Bailiffs. The high-sheriffs of the counties of England and Wales, except Middlesex and Lancaster, are nominated on the morrow of St. Martin, Nov. 12.

Sherman's March. This designates the bold and important movement of Sherman's army, 60,000 to 70,000 strong, from Atlanta to Savannah, and thence through the Carolinas to Goldsborough, 16 Nov. 1864 to 22 March, 1865. When Hood, after the loss of Atlanta, moved against Sherman's communications, the latter followed him with nearly his entire army, to protect the railroad until it should have served his purpose. After the confederate reverse

* William Petty, earl of Shelburne, born 1737; secretary of state under lord Chatham, July, 1766; premier, 1782-3; created first marquess of Lansdowne, 1784; died 7 May, 1805.

at Allatoona Pass, Hood evaded a battle, and Sherman gave up the chase, left the department of the Mississippi virtually in Thomas's hands, and, on 16 Nov., having destroyed Atlanta and made a wreck of the railroad back to Dalton, marched eastward for the Atlantic coast. He destroyed the railroad as he moved, threatened both Macon and Augusta, thus forcing the confederates to divide their forces, then passed both, and moved down the peninsula between the Ogeechee and Savannah rivers. About the middle of Dec., Sherman stood before Savannah, then held by the confederate general Hardee, almost completely invested the city, and captured Fort McAllister (13 Dec.), thus gaining access to Dahlgren's fleet. Hardee evacuated Savannah 20 Dec., and the next day Sherman's army entered that city. Over 200 guns were captured with Savannah, and 35,000 bales of cotton were seized as a legitimate prize of war. Sherman transferred the forts and city to gen. Foster (18 Jan. 1865), and began his march through the Carolinas. He threatened at once Augusta and Charleston, and passed both. On 12 Feb., Charleston, evacuated by Hardee, was occupied by the national forces. While Sherman was approaching Goldsborough, Hardee's forces, with the remnants of Hood's old army and detachments from other sources, were gathered together in North Carolina and placed under gen. Johnston. A portion of this force, under Hardee, contested Sherman's approach to Goldsborough (16 March) at Averysborough, and was defeated. Johnston's entire army was encountered at Bentonville (18 March), but Slocum held his ground until the right wing came to his support, and Johnston retreated on the 22d. Terry and Schofield in the meantime joined Sherman. After Lee's surrender (9 April), Johnston and Sherman entered into negotiations for surrender, which were disapproved by the government. Johnston's army was surrendered on 26 April. This was followed by the surrender of Richard Taylor (4-9 May), and of Kirby Smith (26 May). Jefferson Davis was captured 10 May.

Shibboleth, the word by which the followers of Jephthah tested their opponents the Ephraimites, on passing the Jordan, about 1143 B.C. (Judg. xii.). The term is now applied to any party watchword or dogma.

Shilling. The value of the ancient Saxon coin of this name was fivepence, but it was reduced to fourpence about a century before the Conquest. After the Conquest the French solidus of twelve pence, in use among the Normans, was called shilling. The true English shilling was first coined, some say, in small numbers, by Henry VII., 1504.—Ruding. A peculiar shilling, value nine pence, but to be current at twelve, was struck in Ireland, 1560; and a large but very base coinage in England for the service of Ireland, 1598. Milled shillings were coined 13 Char. II. 1662; see Coins.

Ship-building. The first ship (probably a galley) was brought from Egypt to Greece by Danaus, 1485 B.C.—Blair. The first double-decked ship was built by the Tyrians, 786 B.C.—Lenglet. The first double-decked one built in England was of 1000 tons burden, by order of Henry VII.; was called the Great Harry, and cost 14,000*l.*—Stow. Port-holes and other improvements were invented by Descharges, a French builder at Brast, in the reign of Louis XII., about 1500. Ship-building was first treated as a science by Hoste, 1696. A 74-gun ship was put upon the stocks at Van Diemen's Land, to be sheathed with India-rubber, 1829. Iron is now greatly used in ship-building; see Navy, Steam, Carrack, etc.

Shipka, see Schipka.

Ship-money was first levied about 1007, to form a navy to oppose the Danes. This impost, levied by Charles I. in 1634-6, was much opposed, and led to the revolution. He assessed London in seven ships, of 4000 tons, and 1560 men; Yorkshire in two ships of 600 tons, or 12,000*l.*; Bristol in one ship of 100 tons; Lancashire in one ship of 400 tons. Among others, John Hampden refused to pay the tax; he was tried in the Exchequer in 1636. The judges declared the tax legal, 12 June, 1637. Ship-money was included in the grievances complained of in 1641. The five judges who had given an opinion in its favor were imprisoned. Hampden received a wound in a skirmish with prince Rupert, at Chalgrove, 18 June, and died 24 June, 1643.

Shipping, BRITISH. Shipping was first registered in the river Thames in 1798; and throughout the empire in 1787. In the middle of the eighteenth century, the shipping of England was but half a million of tons—less than London now. In 1880, the number of ships in the British empire was 22,785. The merchant shipping act of 1854 was amended in 1867; see Navy and Navigation Acts.

The following are the numbers of the registered sailing and steam vessels (exclusive of river steamers) of the United Kingdom, engaged in the home and foreign trade:

Shoddy, a kind of soft woollen goods, manufactured from old woollen rags, or the refuse, to which new wool is added, is stated to have been first manufactured about 1813, at Batley, near Dewsbury, Yorkshire.

Shoeblack Society Brigades (Blue, Red, and Yellow) were established at various times, especially in 1851, by the Ragged-school Union (which see), founded 1844. In 1855, 108 boys had cleaned 544,800 pairs of boots and shoes, and thus earned 2270*l.*; of which 1235*l.* had been paid to the boys, 519*l.* to their bank, and 516*l.* to the society. The brigades earned 4518*l.* in 1859; 11,031*l.* in 1871; 10,939*l.* (in nine districts) in 1875.

Shoeburyness (Essex). Some ground here, purchased in 1842 and 1855, by an act of parliament in 1862, was set apart as "ranges for the use and practice of artillery," and a school for gunnery was established; see Cannon, note. Experiments with Mr. Whitworth's projectiles, on 12 Nov. 1862, showed their great improvement in form and material. Shells were sent through 5½ inch plate and the wood-work behind it. It was objected that they might not do this with ships in motion. The National Volunteer Artillery Association began their annual meetings here in July, 1865.

Shoes among the Jews were made of leather, linen, rush, or wood. Moons were worn as ornaments in their shoes by Jewish women (Isa. iii. 18). Pythagoras would have his disciples wear shoes made of the bark of trees; probably that they might not wear what were made of the skins of animals, as they refrained from the use of everything that had life. The Romans wore an ivory crescent on their shoes; and Caligula enriched his with precious stones. In England, about 1462, the people wore the beaks or points of their shoes so long that they encumbered themselves in walking, and were forced to tie them up to their knees; the fine gentlemen fastened theirs with chains of silver or silver gilt, and others with laces. This was prohibited, on the forfeiture of 20*s.* and on pain of being cursed by the clergy, 7 Edw. IV. 1467; see Dress. Shoes, as at present worn, were introduced about 1633. The buckle was not used till 1668.—Star; Mortimer. The buckle-makers petitioned against the use of shoestrings in 1791.

Shooting-stars, see Meteorites.

Shop-tax enacted in 1785; caused so great a commotion, particularly in London, that it was deemed expedient to repeal it in 1789. The statute whereby shoplifting was made a felony, without benefit of clergy, was passed 10 & 11 Will. III. 1699. This statute has been some time repealed.

Short-hand, see Stenography.

"Short-lived" Administration—that of William Pulteney, earl of Bath, lord Carlisle, lord Winchelsea, and lord Granville—existed from 10 Feb. to 12 Feb. 1716.

Shot. In early times various missiles were shot from cannon. Bolts are mentioned in 1413; and in 1418 Henry V. ordered his clerk of the ordinance to get 7000 stone shot made at the quarries at Maidstone. Since then chain, grape, and canister shot have been invented, as well as shells; all of which are described in Scoffern's work on "Projectile Weapons of War and Explosive Compounds," 1858; see Bombs and Cannon.

Shrewsbury (Shropshire) arose after the ruin of the Roman town Uriconium (see Worcester), and became one of the chief cities of the kingdom, having a mint till the reign of Henry III. Here Richard II. held a parliament in 1397.—On 23 July, 1103, was fought a sanguinary battle at Hatley field, near Shrewsbury, between the army of Henry IV. and that of the nobles, led by Percy (surnamed Hotspur), son of the earl of Northumberland, who had conspired to dethrone Henry. Henry was seen in the thickest of the fight, with his son, afterwards Henry V. The death of Hotspur by an unknown hand gave the victory to the king.—Illum. Shrewsbury grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. in 1551, endowed by Elizabeth, and opened 1562. Its arrangements were modified by the Public-school act, 1868.

Shrewsbury Administration. Charles, duke of Shrewsbury, was made lord-treasurer 29 July, 1714, two days before the death of queen Anne. His patent was revoked soon after the accession of George I., 29 Oct. following, when the earl of Halifax became first lord of the treasury; see Halifax. The office of lord-treasurer has been executed by commissioners ever since.

Shropshire, BATTLE OF, in which the Britons were completely subjugated, and Caractacus, the renowned king of the Silures, became, through the treachery of the queen of the Brigantes, a prisoner to the Romans, 50.

Shrove Tuesday, the day before Ash-Wednesday, the first day of the Lent fast; see Carnival.

Siam, a kingdom in India, bordering on the Burmese empire. Siam was rediscovered by the Portuguese in 1511, and a trade established, in which the Dutch joined about 1604. A British ship arrived about 1613. In 1683 a Cephelonian Greek, Constantine Phaulcon, became foreign minister of Siam, and opened a communication with France; Louis XIV. sent an embassy in 1685 with a view of converting the king, without effect. After several ineffectual attempts, sir John Bowring succeeded in obtaining a treaty of friendship and commerce between England and Siam, which was signed 30 April, 1855, and ratified 5 April, 1856. Two ambassadors from Siam arrived in Oct. 1857, and had an audience with the queen; they brought with them magnificent presents, which they delivered crawling, on 16 Nov. They visited Paris in June, 1861. By a treaty with France, the French protectorate over Cambodia was recognized; signed 15 July, ratified 21 Oct. 1867. The king, Khoulalankorn, born 21 Sept. 1853, has reigned since 1 Oct. 1868; the king was entertained at Calcutta, 7-12 Jan. 1872; a political constitution was decreed, 8 May, 1874. Queen Victoria received the order of the White Elephant from the Siamese minister at Windsor, 2 July, 1880. Population of Siam (1871) about 6,300,000.

King: Khoulalankorn (born 21 Sept. 1853); succeeded his father, Mongkout, 1 Oct. 1868. Various changes and political reforms were begun by the king, 16 Nov. 1873. On 9 Oct. 1874, he invited astronomers to Bangkok to view the eclipse of 5 April, 1875.

SIAMESE TWINS. Two persons born about 1811, enjoying all the faculties and powers usually possessed by separate and distinct individuals, although united together by a short cartilaginous band at the pit of the stomach. They were named Chang and Eng, and were first discovered on the banks of the Siam river by an American, Mr. Robert Hunter, by whom they were taken to New York, where they were exhibited. Capt. Coffin brought them to England. After having been exhibited for several years in Britain, they went to America, where they settled on a farm, and married two sisters. In 1865 they were in North Carolina in declining health. Their exhibition in London began again, 8 Feb. 1869. Their deaths in America, within two hours of each other, took place 16, 17 Jan. 1874.

Siberia (N. Asia). In 1580 the conquest was begun by the Cossacks under Jermak Timofejew. In 1710 Peter the Great began to send prisoners thither. An insurrection broke out among the Poles in Siberia in June, 1866, and was soon suppressed.

Sibyls, Sibyllæ, women believed to be inspired, who flourished in different parts of the world. Plato speaks of one, others of two, Pliny of three, Elian of four, and Varro of ten. An Erythrean sibyl is said to have offered to Tarquin II. nine books containing the Roman destinies, demanding for them 300 pieces of gold. He denied her, whereupon the sibyl threw three of them into the fire, and asked the same price for the other six, which being still denied, she burned three more, and again demanded the same sum for those that remained; when Tarquin, conferring with the pontiffs, was advised to buy them. Two magistrates were created to consult them on all occasions, 531 B.C.; see Quindrocmvira.

Sicilian Vespers, the term given to the massacre of the French (who had conquered Sicily, 1266), commenced at Palermo, 30 March, 1282.

On Easter Monday conspirators assembled at Palermo, and while the French were engaged in festivities a Sicilian bride passed by with her train. One Drochet, a Frenchman, used her rudely under pretence of searching for arms. A young Sicilian stabbed him with his own sword, and a tumult ensuing 200 French were instantly murdered. The populace ran through the city, crying out, 'Let the French die!' and, without distinction of rank, age, or sex, slaughtered all of that nation they could find, to the number of about 8000. Even the churches proved no sanctuary, and the massacre became general throughout the island.

Sicily (anciently Trinacria, three-cornered). The early inhabitants were the Sicani, or Siculi, a people of Spain, and Etruscans, who came from Italy about 1294 B.C. A second colony, under Sculcus, arrived 80 years before the destruction of Troy, 1284 B.C. The Phœnicians and Greeks settled some colonies here (735-507). It is supposed that Sicily was separated from Italy by an earthquake, and that the straits of the Charybdis were thus formed. Its government has frequently been united with and separated from that of Naples (which see); the two now form part of the kingdom of Italy. Population of Sicily in 1854, 2,281,020; 1871, 2,465,223; 1875, 2,696,672.

Sick Children, Hospital for, Great Ormond street, London; established 1851. The princess of Wales laid the foundation of new buildings, 11 July, 1872. A branch has been set up at Highgate.

"Sick Man," an epithet applied to Turkey, by the czar Nicholas, 14 Jan. 1854; see Russo-Turkish War, note.

Sicyon, an ancient Grecian kingdom in the Peloponnese, founded, it is said, about 2080 B.C. Its people took part in the wars in Greece, usually supporting Sparta. In 352 it became a republic and joined the Achaean league formed by Aratus. It was the country of the sculptors Polykleitos (486) and Lysippos (336 B.C.).

Siderostat (from sides, Latin for a star), an apparatus constructed by M. Leon Foucault, shortly before his death, 11 Feb. 1868, for observing the light of the stars in precisely the same way in which the light of the sun may be studied in the camera-obscura. It consists of a mirror moved by clockwork, and a fixed objective glass for concentrating the rays into a focus.

Sidon, or Zidon (Syria), a city of Phœnicia, to the north of Tyre. It was conquered by Cyrus about 557 B.C., and surrendered to Alexander, 332 B.C.; see Phœnicia. The town was taken from the pacha of Egypt by the troops of the sultan and of his allies, assisted by some ships of the British squadron, under command of Charles Napier, 27 Sept. 1840; see Syria and Turkey.

Sieges. Azoth, which was besieged by Psammetichus the Powerful, held out for nineteen years.—Usher. It held out for twenty-nine years.—Herodotus. This was the longest siege recorded in the annals of antiquity. The siege of Troy was the most celebrated, and occupied ten years, 1184 B.C. The following are the most memorable sieges since the twelfth century; for details of many of them see separate articles.

Sienna (formerly Sena Julia, Italy), in the middle ages a powerful republic rivaling Florence and Pisa, weakened through intestine quarrels, was subjugated by the emperor Charles V., and given to his son in 1553, who ceded it to Cosmo of Tuscany, 1557. It was incorporated with France, 1808-11.

Sierra Leone (W. Africa), discovered in 1460. In 1786, London swarmed with free negroes living in idleness and want; and 400 of them, with sixty whites, mostly women of bad character and in ill-health, were sent out to Sierra Leone at the charge of government to form a settlement, 9 Dec. 1786. The settlement was attacked by the French, Sept. 1794; by the natives, Feb. 1802. Sir Charles Macarthy, governor of the colony, was defeated and killed by the Ashantee chief, 21 Jan. 1824. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 16, relates to the government, etc., of this colony. It was made a bishopric in 1852; see Ashantes and West Africa.

Silchester (Hants). Here are the remains of the Roman town Calleva (built on the site of the British Caer Segint, or Segont); including walls of excellent masonry, a basilica and forum, private dwellings, etc. Many discoveries have been made during excavations made under the patronage of the duke of Wellington, since 1863. Coins of Claudius I. and later emperors have been found.

Sillesia, formerly a province of Poland, was invaded by John of Bohemia, 1326, and ceded to him, 1356. It was taken by the king of Hungary, 1478, and added to the Austrian dominion, 1526. It was conquered and lost several times during the Seven Years' war by Frederick of Prussia, but was retained by him at the peace in 1763. The emperor William was most enthusiastically received during his visit, Sept. 1875.

Silicon, or SILICIUM (from ellor, flint), a non-metallic element, next to oxygen the most abundant substance in the earth, as it enters into the constitution of many earths, metallic oxides, and a great number of minerals. The mode of procuring pure silicon was discovered by Berzelius in 1823. — Umetin. See Water-glass and Ramsden's Stone.

Silistria, a strong military town in Bulgaria, European Turkey. It was taken by the Russians, 30 June, 1829, and held some years by them as a pledge for the payment of a large sum by the Porte; but was eventually returned. In 1854 it was again besieged by the Russians, 30,000 strong, under prince Paskiewitch, and many assaults were made. The Russian general was compelled to retire in consequence of a dangerous contumency. On 2 June, Musa Pacha, the brave and skilful commander of the garrison, was killed. On 9 June, the Russians stormed two forts, which were retaken. A grand assault took place on 15 June, under prince Gortschakoff and gen. Schilders, which was vigorously repelled. On the 15th, the garrison assumed the offensive, crossed the river, defeated the Russians, and destroyed the siege works. The siege was thus raised, and the Russians commenced their retreat as Omar Pacha was drawing near. The garrison was ably assisted by two British officers, capt. Butler and lieut. Nasmyth, the former of whom, after being wounded, died of exhaustion. They were highly praised by Omar Pacha and lord Hardinge, and lieut. Nasmyth was made a major.

Silk. Wrought silk was brought from Persia to Greece, 323 B.C. Known at Rome in Tiberius's time, when a law passed in the senate prohibiting the use of plate of massive gold, and also forbidding men to debase themselves by wearing silk, fit only for women. Heliogabalus first wore a garment of silk, A.D. 220. Silk was at first of the same value with gold, weight for weight, and was thought to grow in the same manner as cotton on trees. Silk-worms were brought from India to Europe in the sixth century. Charlemagne sent Offa, king of Mercia, a present of two silken veils, 780. The manufacture was encouraged by Roger, king of Sicily, at Palermo, 1146, when the Sicilians not only bred the silk-worms, but spun and wore the silk. The manufacture spread into Italy and Spain, and also into the south of France, a little before the reign of Francis I. about 1510, and Henry IV. propagated mulberry-trees and silk-worms throughout the kingdom about 1600. In England, silk mantles were worn by some noblemen's ladies at a ball at Kenilworth castle, 1286. Silk was worn by the English clergy in 1534. Manufactured in England in 1604; and broad silk wove from raw silk in 1620. Brought to perfection by the French refugees in London at Spitalfields, 1666. A silk-throwing mill was made in England, and fixed up at Derby, by sir Thomas Lombe, merchant of London, modelled from the original mill then in the king of Sarinina's dominions, about 1714. He obtained a patent in 1719, and died 3 Jan. 1733. Six new species of silk-worm were rearing in France, 1861.* James I. sought to introduce silk culture into the American colonies, and himself forwarded eggs to Virginia, and offered bounties on silk grown there, but the superior profit of tobacco culture brought the experiment to naught. Silk culture was introduced in Louisiana in 1723, and government encouragement was given to the industry in Georgia. Artisans were sent to Georgia to carry on silk industries in 1732. The first export of raw silk (eight pounds) was made in 1734. In 1749 the production at Ebenezer, on the Savannah river, amounted to 1000 lbs. A public silature was set up in Savannah in 1761. From 1761 to 1764 the exports amounted to $6000, and for the next eighteen years there was an annual export averaging 946 lbs. In 1769, 15,000 lbs. of cocoons were delivered at the silature. The production rapidly declined under British taxation, and was destroyed entirely by the Revolutionary war. The history of silk culture in South Carolina was almost identical with that in Georgia. In Connecticut 300 lbs. of raw silk were made in 1750. In 1790, fifty families in New Haven and thirty in Norfolk were engaged in the business. In 1880 the product of Mansfield, Connecticut, was about 5 tons. A silature was established in Philadelphia in 1770. In 1875, one cocoonery in San Jose, California, had 1,000,000 silk-worms. There are now nearly 300 silk factories in the United States, and the cultivation of native silk seems to be reviving. The Women's Silk-culture Association held an exhibition in Philadelphia, 1881-2.

SILK WORM DISEASE. In 1869 the annual produce of sericulture in South France was estimated at about 4,000,000 lbs. Soon after a disease broke out in the worms, which reduced the value of the silk crop to about one third that amount. In 1869 a commission was appointed to inquire into the nature of the disease, then termed pebrine, and M. Guérin-Meneville, in 1869, proved that it is hereditary, contagious, and infectious. M. Filippi discovered in the blood of the diseased worms a multitude of cylindrical corpuscles, since named paratyphus, which Pasteur, who took up the study in 1868, has demonstrated to be parasitical, and the cause of the disease. He has since devised a way by which, it is hoped, the organic germs may be got rid of, and the disease extirpated.

Silures, a British tribe, occupying the counties of Devonmouth and Hereford, was subdued by the Roman general Ostorius Scapula, 60; see Shropshire. From this tribe is derived the geological term "Silurian strata," among the lowest of the palaeozoic, or primary series, from their occurrence in the above-mentioned counties. Murchison's "Siluria" was published 1840.

Silver exists in most parts of the world, and is found mixed with other ores in various mines in Great Britain. The silver mines of South America are far the richest. A mine was discovered in the district of La Paz in 1600, which was so rich that the silver of it was often cut out with a chisel. In 1749, one mass of silver weighing 270 lbs. was sent to Spain. From a mine in Norway, a piece of silver was dug, and sent to the Royal Museum at Copenhagen, weighing 660 lbs., and worth 1600*l*. In England silver plate and vessels were first used by Wulfred, a Northumbrian bishop, a lofty and ambitious man, 700.—Tyrrid. Silver knives, spoons, and cups were great luxuries in 1800; see Mirrors. In 1855, 561,906 oz.; in 1867, 682,998 oz.; in 1865, 734,256 oz.; in 1870, 784,642 oz.; in 1876, 486,422 oz. were obtained from mines in Britain. Pattinson's process for obtaining silver from lead ore was introduced in 1823. The production of silver in the United States during the fiscal year 1880, amounted to $20,200,000; see Cuba, Goldsmiths, Mirrors, Plate; India, 1876; United States, 1879.

Silimones (Castile, Spain). Near it Ramiro II. of Leon, and Fernando of Castile, gained a great victory over Abderrahman, the Moorish king of Cordova, 8 Aug. 938.

* In 1854, M. Guérin Meneville introduced into France a Chinese worm termed the Cynthia bonasia, which feeds on the Alnus glutinosa, a hardy tree of the oak kind. The Cynthia yields a silk like mohair termed Alantane. It was brought to Turin by Fantoni in 1868.

Simonians, a sect named from the founder, Simon Magus, the first heretic, about 41. A sect of social reformers called St. Simonians sprang up in France in 1819, and attracted considerable attention; the doctrines were advocated in England, particularly by Dr. Prati, who lectured upon them in London, 24 Jan. 1834. St. Simon died in 1825, and his follower, Père Enfantin, died 1 Sept. 1864.

Simony (trading in church offices), derives its name from Simon desiring to purchase the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts viii. 18, 19). It is forbidden in England by the canon law, and by statute 31 Eliz. c. 6, "for the availing of simony and corruption in presentations, collations, and donations of and to benefices," etc., 1588-9; and by statute of 12 Anne 2. stat. 12 (1713). The rev. James John Merest was convicted of simony, 26-29 Nov. 1809, and deprived.

The bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Magee) moved for a committee on the laws relating to simony, appointed, 21 April, 1874.

Simplon, a mountain road leading from Switzerland into Italy, constructed by Napoleon in 1801. It winds up passes, crosses cataracts, and passes by galleries through solid rock, and has eight principal bridges. The number of workmen employed at one time varied from 30,000 to 40,000.

Sinai, Mount. Here the ten commandments were promulgated, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xx.) After much investigation and discussion by many persons, Dr. Beke stated that he had discovered the true Sinai, Feb. 1871.

Sinalunga, or ASINALUNGA (near Sienna, Italy). Here Garibaldi, when about to enter the papal territory, was seized and conveyed to Alexandria, 23 Sept. 1867; see Italy.

Sinde (N.W. India), was traversed by the Greeks under Alexander, about 326 B.C., conquered by the Persian Mahometans in the eighth century A.D.; tributary to the Ghaznevide dynasty in the eleventh century; conquered by Nadir Shah, 1739; reverted to the empire of Delhi after his death, 1717; after various changes of rulers, Sinde was conquered by the English, and annexed, March, 1843.

Sinking Fund. First projected by sir Robert Walpole to redeem the debt to the Bank of England; act passed in 1716. The act establishing the sinking fund of Mr. Pitt, devised by Dr. Price, was passed in March, 1786. A then estimated surplus of 900,000*l.* in the revenue was augmented by new taxes to make up the sum of 1,000,000*l.*, which was to be invariably applied to the reduction of the national debt. The fallacy of the scheme was shown by Dr. Hamilton in 1813. In July, 1824, the sinking fund was limited to one fourth of the actual surplus of revenue. A new sinking fund was established by act passed 2 Aug. 1875. The annual charge of the national debt of the year ending 31 March, 1877, to be 27,700,000*l.*; subsequent years to be 28,000,000*l.*

Sinope, an important Greek colony on the Euxine, after resisting several attacks was conquered by Mithridates IV., king of Pontus, and made his capital. It was the birthplace of Diogenes, the cynic philosopher. On 30 Nov. 1853, a Turkish fleet of seven frigates, three corvettes, and two smaller vessels was attacked by a Russian fleet of six sail of the line, two sailing-ramens, and three steamers, under admiral Nachimoff, and totally destroyed, except one vessel, which conveyed the tidings to Constantinople. Four thousand lives were lost by fire or drowning, and Osman Pacha, the Turkish admiral, died at Sebastopol of his wounds. In consequence of this act (considered treacherous) the Anglo-French fleet entered the Black Sea, 3 Jan. 1854.

Sion College and Hospital, situated on the site of a nunnery, which, having fallen to decay, was purchased by William Elaynge, a citizen and mercer, and converted into a college and hospital, called from his name Elaynge Spital. In 1340 he changed it to an Austin priory, which was afterwards granted by Henry VIII. to sir John Williams, master of the jewel-office, who, with sir Roland Hayward, inhabited it till its destruction by fire. In 1623, Dr. Thomas White having bequeathed 8000*l.* towards purchasing and building a college and almshouse on the ancient site, his executors erected the present college. It is held by two charters of incorporation, 6 Chas. I. 1630 and 16 Chas. II. 1664. It contains a valuable library (easily accessible to the public), and an almshouse for ten men and women.

Sirene, an instrument for determining the velocity of aerial vibrations corresponding to the different pitches of musical sounds, was invented by baron Cagniard de la Tour of Paris in 1819. The principle was shown in an apparatus exhibited by Robert Hooke before the Royal Society, 27 July, 1681.

Sisterhoods in the English church were begun by Lydia Priscilla Sellon about 1846, in Devonshire; she died Nov. 1876.

Sisters of Charity, an order for the service of the sick poor, was founded by Vincent de Paul, in 1634. Their establishment in London began in 1834.

Six Acts, a term given to certain acts, also named "lagging Acts," 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. cc. 1, 2, 4, 6, 8, 9, passed in 1819 to suppress seditious meetings and publications.

Six Articles, see Articles.

Six Clerks, officers of the Court of Chancery, who were anciently clerici or clergy. They were to conform to the laws of celibacy, and forfeit their places if they married; but when the constitution of the court began to alter, a law was made to permit them to marry; statute 24 & 25 Hen. VIII. 1533. The six clerks continued for many years officers of the Chancery Court, and held their offices in Chancery lane, London, where proceedings by bill and answer were transacted and filed, and certain patents issued.—Law Dict. The six clerks were discontinued by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 108, 1841.

Sixteen (seize), a large French political club, in the reigns of Henry III. and IV., sixteen members of which took charge of the sixteen quarters of Paris. They at first supported the Catholic League, and attempted to overthrow Henry III. in 1587, but vacillating in their policy, and committing many crimes, their power was annihilated by Mayenne in 1591, and several of them were executed.

Skalitz (Bohemia) was stormed by the Prussian general Steinmetz, 28 June, 1866; whereby the junction of the divisions of the Prussians was greatly facilitated.

Slade Professorship of Fine Art, Cambridge, established in pursuance of the will of Felix Slade, 24 June, 1869; sir Matthew Digby Myall, the first professor, 1869-73; Sidney Colvin, 1873; re-elected since.

Slate. Fifteen persons were killed by the fall of a mass of rock and rubble at the Delaboll slate quarries, Cornwall, 21 April, 1869.

Great strike at lord Penrhyn's slate quarries, Bethesda, Wales, in Sept.-Oct.; and Nov. 1874

Slaughter-houses Act for the metropolis, passed 7 Aug. 1874.

Slavery. The traffic in men came from Chaldaea into Egypt, Arabia, and all over the East. In Greece, in the time of Homer, all prisoners of war were treated as slaves. The Lacedaemonian youths, trained up in the practice of deceiving and butchering slaves, were from time to time let loose upon them to show their proficiency; and once, for amusement only, murdered, it is said, 3000 in one night; see Helots. Alexander, when he razed Thebes, sold the whole people for slaves, 885 B.C. There were 400,000 slaves in Attica, 817 B.C. In Rome slaves were often chained to the gate of a great man's house, to give admittance to the guests invited to the feast. By one of the laws of the XII. Tables, creditors could seize their insolvent debtors, and keep them in their houses, till by their services or labor they had discharged the sum they owed. C. Pollio threw such slaves as gave him the slightest offence into his fish-ponds, to fatten his lampreys, 42 B.C. Cæcilius Iadorus left to his heir 4116 slaves, 12 B.C. The first Janissaries were Christian slaves, 1829.

Serfdom was abolished by Frederick I. of Prussia in 1702; by Christian VII. of Denmark in 1766; by Joseph II., emperor of Germany, in his hereditary states, in 1781; by Nicholas I. of Russia, in the imperial domains, in 1842; and by his successor, Alexander II., throughout his empire 3 March, 1861
Slavery ceased in the Dutch West Indies on 1 July, 1863
It was decreed in Brazil, in 1867, that all children born to slaves henceforth were to be free, and all slaves were to be free in twenty years from that time. In Nov. slaves of the state became free when made soldiers. Slavery was ordered to be abolished gradually, 27 Sept. 1871

Slavery abolished in Porto Rico 23 March, 1873
Immediate suppression of slavery in the colonies of St. Thomas, etc., by Portugal, announced Feb. 1876
Gradual emancipation in Cuba; bill passed in Spanish senate, 24 Dec. 1879; by deputies, 21 Jan.; promulgated 18 Feb. 1880
Slavery to be abolished in Egypt end of July, 1881

Slavery in ENGLAND. Laws respecting the sale of slaves were made by Alfred. The English peasantry were commonly sold for slaves in Saxon and Norman times; children were sold in Bristol market like cattle for exportation. Many were sent to Ireland and to Scotland. Under the Normans, the vassals (termed villeins, of and pertaining to the vill) were devisable as chattels during the feudal times.

Severe statutes were passed in the reign of Richard II., 1377 and 1385; the rebellion of Wat Tyler, 1381, arose partly out of the evils of serfdom.

A statute was enacted by Edward VI., that a runaway, or any one who lived idly for three days, should be brought before two justices of the peace, and marked V with a hot iron on the breast, and adjudged the slave of him who bought him for two years. He was to take the slave and give him bread, water, or small drink, and refuse meat, and cause him to work by beating, chaining, or otherwise; and if, within that space, he absented himself fourteen days, he was to be marked on the forehead or cheek by a hot iron, with an S, and be his master's slave forever; second desertion was made felony. It was lawful to put a ring of iron round his neck, arm, or leg. A child might be put apprentice, and, on running away, become a slave to his master... 1547

Queen Elizabeth ordered her bondsmen in the western counties to be made free at easy rates 1574
Serfdom was finally extinguished in 1660, when teneures in capite, knights' service, etc., were abolished.

A slave named Somerset, brought to England, was, because of his ill state, turned adrift by his master. By the charity of Mr. Granville Sharp, he was restored to health, when his master again claimed him. A suit was the consequence, which established, by decision of the Court of King's Bench in favor of Somerset, that slavery could not exist in Great Britain. 23 June, 1773

Act for the abolition of slavery throughout the British colonies, and for the promotion of industry among the manumitted slaves, and for compensation to the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such slaves by the grant from parliament of 20,000,000*l.* sterling, passed 28 Aug. 1833

Slavery terminated in the British possessions; 770,290 slaves became free 1 Aug. 1834
Slavery was abolished in the East Indies 1 Aug. 1836

In 1863, John Anderson, a runaway slave, killed Septimus Digges, a planter of Missouri, who attempted to arrest him, and escaped to Canada. The American government claimed him as a murderer. The Canadian judges deciding that the law required his surrender, Mr. Edwin James, Q. C. (15 Jan.), obtained a writ of habeas corpus for his appearance before the Court of Queen's Bench. Anderson was discharged on technical grounds 16 Feb. 1861

Circular from the Admiralty concerning the surrendering fugitive slaves on board British ships to their owners, dated 31 July; much censured by the public, Sept., Oct.; withdrawn Nov. 1876

A revised circular issued near end of Dec. 1876; met with much adverse criticism Jan. 1876

Government commission appointed (the duke of Somerset, chief-justice Cockburn, sir Henry S. Maine, and others), Feb.; report unfavorable to the circulars; published 13 June, "

New admiralty instructions: fugitive slaves to be received and not given up; action left to captain's discretion; breach of international faith and comity to be avoided; issued 10 Aug. "

Slavery in UNITED STATES. Before the war of independence all the states contained slaves. In 1783, the statement in the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, "All men are born free and equal," was declared in the Supreme Court, at Boston, to bar slaveholding in that state. Slaves in the United States in 1790, 697,697; in 1810, 1,191,864; in 1820, 2,009,081; in 1850, 8,204,318; in 1860, 4,002,996. In 1870, 4,889,198 free colored persons; in 1880, 6,577,151.

Congress passed unanimously the celebrated ordinance "for the government of the territory to the N.W. of the Ohio," which contained an "unalterable" article, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude in the said territory, 13 July, 1787; after 1800, several of the north-western territories prayed, without effect, to be relieved from this prohibition.

Louisiana purchased, which was considered by many as fatal to the constitution 1808

The enormous increase in the growth of cotton in the southern states (see bottom) led to a corresponding increase in the demand for slave labor. The Missouri Compromise (drawn up by Henry Clay, by which slavery was permitted in that state, but was prohibited in all states thereafter to be created west of the Mississippi and north of 36° 30' N. lat.) carried 3 March, 1820
Another compromise effected; California admitted as a free state; but the fugitive slave act passed (which see), 1850

The Missouri compromise was abrogated by the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, which left to the people of those territories the question whether or not they should be organized as slave states; civil war ensued (see Kansas) 1854

Dred Scott's case (see United States) 1857

Slave-trade. The slave-trade from Congo and Angola was begun by the Portuguese in 1481. The commerce in man has brutalized a tract fifteen degrees on each side of the equator, and forty degrees wide, or of 4,000,000 square miles; and men and women have been bred for sale to the Christian nations during the last 250 years, and war carried on to make prisoners for the Christian market. The Abbé Raynal computed (1777) that, at the time of his writing, 9,000,000 of slaves had been consumed by the Europeans. The slave-trade is now approaching extinction.

In 1758 the slaves taken from Africa amounted to 104,100. In 1786 the annual number was about 10,000.

In 1807 it was shown by documents, produced by government, that since 1792 upwards of 3,500,000 Africans had been torn from their country, and had either perished on the passage or been sold in the West Indies.

Slave-trade abolished in the United States, 1808.

SLAVE-TRADE OF ENGLAND: begun by Sir John Hawkins. His first expedition, with the object of procuring negroes on the coast of Africa, and conveying them for sale at the West Indies, took place in Oct. 1562; see Guinea and Asiento. England employed 130 ships, and carried off 42,000 slaves, 1786.

Thomas Clarkson, at a spot in Wadesmill, Hertford, devotes his life to the abolition of the slave-trade. June, 1785.

Thomas Clarkson died, aged 85, Sept. 1846.

An obelisk, as a memorial to Thomas Clarkson, erected by Mr. Arthur Giles Fuller, at Wadesmill; inaugurated 9 Oct. 1879.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES: the trade was abolished by Austria in 1782; by the French convention in 1794; by the United States in 1808.

The allies at Vienna declared against it, Feb. 1815.

Napoleon, in the Hundred Days, abolished the trade, 29 March, 1815.

Treaty for its repression with Spain, 1817; with the Netherlands, May, 1818; with Brazil, Nov. 1826.

Its revival was proposed in the congress of the United States of America, 14 Dec. 1856, and negatived by 183 votes to 58.

In June, 1857, the French government gave permission to M. Regis to convey free negroes from Africa to Guadeloupe and Martinique, French colonies.

This having led to abuses and consequent troubles (see Charles G. Grey), was eventually given up in Jan. 1859.

It is said that about 40,000 slaves were landed at Cuba in 1860.

A treaty between Great Britain and the United States, for the abolition of the slave trade, was signed 7 April; ratified, 20 May, 1862.

The Spanish government denounce the slave trade as piracy, Nov. 1865.

Sir Samuel Baker headed an expedition to put down slave-trading on the Nile (see Egypt), Jan. 1870; reported to be partially successful, 30 June, 1873. He published "Ismaelin," a history of the expedition, 1874. He estimates that at least 50,000 are captured and sold as slaves, Nov. 1874.

A species of slave-trade has lately risen in the South Seas; the natives being enticed on board certain British vessels and shipped to Queen-land, Australia, and the Fiji Isles; the subject was brought before parliament (see Melanesia), 1871-2.

The ship Carl (owner, Dr. James P. Murray; master, Joseph Armstrong) left Melbourne for South Sea Isles; it anchored off Malakolo, Solomon's, and Bougainville Isles, and kidnapped many natives as laborers for the Fiji Isles; while about 20 miles from Lund, the prisoners rose and attempted to set fire to the ship; were fired on; about 50 killed and 20 wounded were cast into the sea. At Melbourne, Murray gave evidence, and Armstrong was committed for trial, 16 Aug.; the master and mate sentenced to death, Nov. 1872.

Sir Bartle Frere went to Zanzibar on a mission to suppress the East African slave-trade; see Zanzibar, 1872-3.

An act of parliament, for consolidating with amendments the acts for carrying into effect treaties for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade (36 & 37 Vict. c. 89), was passed, 5 Aug. 1873.

Several African kings and chiefs, at Cape Coast Castle, agreed to give up slave-trade, at an interview with governor Strahan, 3 Nov. 1874.

The slave-trade on the Gold Coast abolished, by proclamation of governor Strahan, 17 Dec. 1874.

Convention with Egypt forbidding the traffic, 4 Aug. 1877; col. Gordon's efforts in the Sudan reported successful, 1879.

Slavonia, or SLAVONIA, a province of Austria, derives its name from the Slavs, a Sarmatian people who replaced the Avars in Pannonia early in the ninth century. In 861, Cyril and Methodius, Greek missionaries, preached here, and adapted the Greek alphabet to the Slavonian language, the letters of which have since been a little altered. The country, after having been held at times by the Greeks, Turks, and Hungarians, and the cause of sanguinary conflicts, was ceded finally to Hungary in 1699, at the peace of Carlowitz. Deputies from the Slavonian provinces of Austria were entertained at Moscow and St. Petersburg, May, 1867. The Croatian-Slavonian diet at Agram was dissolved, May, 1867. It protested against incorporation with Hungary. The Slavonian family of languages includes Russian, Polish, Servian, Bohemian, Bulgarian, Wendic, Slovak, and Polabian. For the war, see Turkey, 1875-6.

Estimated number of Slavs in Europe in 1875, 90,365,632: Russians and Ruthenians, 66,129,590; Serbo-Croats, 5,940,539; Bulgarians, 5,123,952; Slovenes, 1,260,000; Slovaks, 2,223,830; Czechs, 4,815,154; Poles, 9,492,162.

Lord Ilchester's bequest to promote the study of Slavonian literature at Oxford; lectures first given, May, 1876.

Sling. In Judg. xx, 16 is mentioned the skill of the Benjamite Goliath (about 1406 B.C.), and with a sling David slew Goliath, 1053 B.C. (1 Sam. xvii.). The natives of the Balearic Isles (Majorca, Minorca, and Ivica) were celebrated slingers, and served as mercenaries in the Carthaginian and Roman armies. Slings are said to have been used by the Huguenots at the siege of Sancerre, in 1672, to economize their powder.

Slough, near Eton, Bucks. Mrs. Ann Reville, a butcher's wife, was barbarously murdered here early in the evening, 11 April, 1881. Alfred Payne, a lad, was tried and acquitted, same month.

Sluys (Holland), near which Edward III. gained a signal naval victory over the French. The English had the wind of the enemy, and the sun at their backs, and began this sanguinary action. Two hundred and thirty French ships were taken; thousands of Frenchmen were killed, with two of their admirals; the loss of the English was inconsiderable; 21 June, 1340.

Smalcald (Hesse), TREATY OF, entered into between the elector of Brandenburg and the other princes of Germany in favor of Protestantism, 31 Dec. 1530; see Protestants. The emperor, apprehensive that the kings of France and England would join this league, signed the treaty of Passau, 31 July, 1532, allowing liberty of conscience.

Small Tenements Acts (59 Geo. III. c. 12, 1819; 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 99), provided for owners paying rates of houses instead of the occupiers. This was annulled by the new Reform act, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, s. 7 (1867).

Small-pox, variola (diminutive of varus, a pimple), a highly contagious disease, supposed to have been introduced into Europe from the East by the Saracens. Rhazes, an Arabian, described it accurately about 900. From Europe it was carried to America, soon after its discovery, and raged there with great severity, destroying the Indians by thousands. In 1694, queen Mary of England died of small-pox, as did in 1711 and 1712 the emperor of Germany, the dauphin and dauphiness of France and their son, in 1730 the emperor of Russia, in 1741 the queen of Sweden, and in 1774 Louis XV. of France. It is stated that in the middle of the last century two millions perished by it in Russia. In London, in 1723, one out of fourteen deaths was caused by small-pox, and in France, in 1754, the rate was one in ten. For the attempts to alleviate this scourge, see Inoculation, introduced into England in 1722, and Vaccination, announced by Dr. Jenner in 1798. Small-pox Hospital, established 1746. Small-pox raged in parts of London, and thousands died, 1870-1; a temporary hospital was established at Hampstead (which see). The Anti-vaccination Society has been active, and many parents have been fined for opposing the vaccination of their children, 1870-6. In Sept. and Oct. 1862, a great many sheep died of small-pox in the west of England, till successful preventive measures were resorted to. Many cases in London, 1876-8; deaths principally of unvaccinated persons.

Small-pox prevalent in London: 88 deaths, 1-7 May; 103 deaths, 15-21 May; diminish ng, July, 1881.

Deaths, June, 1880-June, 1881, 1832; 637 not vaccinated.

Small-pox declared epidemic in the United States by the National Board of Health, Dec. 1881.

(See Vaccination.)

Smectymnus, the initials of certain nonconformist writers against episcopacy in the seventeenth century—Stephen Marshall, Edmund Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, William Spurston. They were answered by bishop Hall in his "Divine Right of Episcopacy," 1640.

Smithfield, West, in the heart of London, was once a favorite walk of the London citizens, outside the city walls. Sir W. Wallace was executed here, 23 Aug. 1305. On 15 June, 1381, Wat Tyler was met by Richard II. at this place, and was stabbed by Walworth the mayor. Many tournaments were also held here. In the reign of Mary (1553-8), many persons perished by fire; and Bartholomew Leggatt, an Arian, was burned here, 18 March, 1612.—Bartholomew fair was held here till 1853.—This place is mentioned as the site of a cattle-market as far back as 1150. The space devoted to this purpose was enlarged from about three acres to four and a half, and in 1834 to six and a quarter. The ancient regulations were called the "statutes of Smithfield." In one day there were sometimes assembled 4000 beasts and 30,000 sheep. The annual amount of the sales was about 7,000,000*l*.

Sold here 226,132 beasts, 1,593,270 sheep and lambs, 26,356 calves, 33,531 pigs (about 160 salesmen). 1846
The contracted space of the market, the slaughtering places adjoining, and many other nuisances, gave ground to much dissatisfaction, and, after investigation, an act was passed appointing metropolitan market commissioners with powers to provide a new market, slaughtering places, etc., and to close the market at Smithfield. 1 Aug. 1851

Smithfield was used as a cattle-market for the last time on 11 June; and the new market in Copenhagen Fields was opened on 13 June (see Metropolitan Market). 1855

A dead-meat and poultry market ordered to be erected in Smithfield, and Newgate market to cease. 1861

A tender for its erection, from designs by Horace Jones, accepted from Messrs. Browne and Robinson for 134,460*l*. Nov. 1866

The market inaugurated by the lord mayor Lawrence, 24 Nov.; opened to the public. 1 Dec. 1868

New poultry-market, inaugurated by lord mayor Cotton, 30 Nov. 1875

New central fruit and vegetable market determined on, 14 July, 1879
The Smithfield Club, to promote improvements in the breed of cattle, was established 17 Dec. 1798: first president, Francis, duke of Bedford; first secretary, Arthur Young. The members established an annual cattle-show, held first in Dolphin Yard, Smithfield, Dec. 1799; next in Barbican, 1805; in Goswell street, 1803; removed to Baker street, 1839; and to the new Agricultural Hall, Liverpool road, Islington, 1862.

The show, suspended in Dec. 1866 on account of the plague, was partially resumed Dec. 1867; wholly, Dec. 1868.

Smith's Charity (FOR POOR KIN). Alderman Henry Smith, by will dated 26 April, 1647, left 1000*l*. for relief of captives held by Turkish pirates, and 1000*l*. for his poor kinsmen.

The former object having become obsolete, an act was passed in 1772 to divert all the property to the poor kinsmen. In 1848 these were 412 in number. The value of the property is now about 11,000*l*. a year, and still increasing. The master of the rolls decided in Dec. 1877 that the funds should be applied to general charitable purposes. On appeal, the decision was in favor of the "poor Smiths," 12 Feb. 1878.

Smithsonian Institution, "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men," a handsome building at Washington, U. S., was founded in 1846 by means of a legacy of above 100,000*l*. bequeathed for the purpose to the United States government by James Smithsonian, illegitimate son of sir Hugh Smithson, who became duke of Northumberland in 1766. It publishes and freely distributes scientific memoirs and reports. The library was burned on 25 Jan. 1865. Prof. Joseph Henry, the first secretary, died 13 May, 1878; succeeded by Mr. Baird.

Smoke Nuisance. An act was passed in 1858 to abate this nuisance, proceeding from chimney-shafts and steamers above London Bridge. In 1856 another act, obtained for its further application to steamers below London Bridge, and to potteries and glass-houses previously exempted, came into operation, 1 Jan. 1858; enactments have been made for all the kingdom.

Meeting at Mansion House for the abatement of smoke in London, 7 Jan. 1881.

Smolensko (Russia). The French in most sanguinary engagements here were three times repulsed, but ultimately succeeded in entering Smolensko, and found the city, which had been bombarded, burning and partly in ruins, 16, 17 Aug. 1812. Barclay de Tolly, the Russian commander-in-chief, incurred the displeasure of the emperor Alexander because he retreated after the battle, and Kutusoff succeeded to the command.

Smugglers. The customs duties, instituted to enable the king to afford protection to trade against pirates, afterwards became a branch of public revenue, and gave rise to much smuggling. The Smugglers' act was passed in 1736, and its severity was mitigated in 1781 and 1784. A revision of these statutes took place, 1826 and 1835.

Smyrna, see Seren Churches.

Sneezing. The custom of saying "God bless you" to the sneezer originated, according to Strada, among the ancients, who, through an opinion of the danger attending it, after sneezing made a short prayer to the gods, as "Jupiter, help me." The custom is mentioned by Homer, the Jewish rabbis, and others, and is found among savages. Polydore Vergil says it took its rise at the time of the plague, 558, when the infected fell down dead sneezing, though seemingly in good health.

Snider Gun, see under Fire-arms.

Snuff-taking took its rise in England from the captures made of vast quantities of snuff by sir George Rooke's expedition to Vigo in 1702, and the practice soon became general. In 1839 there were imported 1,622,493 lbs. of snuff, of which 196,305 lbs. were entered for home consumption; the duty was 88,263*l*. see Tobacco. In 1858, 2,573,925 lbs. of snuff and cigars, 1861, 2,110,480 lbs.; 1871, 3,852,236 lbs.; 1877, 3,762,831 lbs. were imported.

Soane Museum, etc., No. 13 Lincoln's-inn fields, was gradually formed by sir John Soane, the architect, who died in 1837, after making arrangements for its being open to the public by an act passed in 1838. It contains Egyptian and other antiquities, valuable paintings, rare books, etc. 150*l*. are distributed annually to distressed architects or their widows and children.

Soap is a salt, a compound of a fatty acid with an alkali, soda or potash. The Hebrew bôrith, translated soap, is merely a general term for cleansing substances (Job ix. 30; Jer. ii. 22). Pliny declares soap to be an invention of the Gauls, though he prefers the German to the Gallic soap. Nausicaa and her attendants, Homer tells us, washed clothes by treading upon them with their feet in pits of water.—Odyssey, book vi. The Romans used fuller's earth. Savon, the French word for soap, is ascribed to its having been manufactured at Savona, near Genoa. The manufacture of soap began in London in 1524, before which time it was supplied by Bristol at one penny per pound. The duty upon soap, imposed in 1711, after several reductions from 8*d*. per pound, was totally repealed in 1833. It then produced, according to the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Gladstone, about 1,126,000*l*. annually.

Sobraon (N.W. India). The British army, 85,000 strong, under sir Hugh (afterwards viscount) Gough, attacked the Sikh force on the Sutlej, 10 Feb. 1846. The enemy was dislodged after a dreadful contest, and all their batteries taken; and in attempting the passage of the river by a floating bridge in their rear, the weight of the masses that crowded upon it caused it to break down, and thousands of Sikhs were killed, wounded, or drowned. The British loss was 2538 men.

Social Science. The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science originated in a meeting at lord Brougham's in May, 1857. Its object is to promote improvements in the administration of law, in education, in public health, and in social economy. It holds annual meetings, and publishes its proceedings.

Social Wars, see Athens and Marsi.

Socialism was warmly advocated in London, 24 Jan. 1834, by the celebrated Robert Owen. He had, beginning at New Lanark, in Scotland, about 1801, established a settlement at New Harmony, Indiana, in America, in 1824. He died 17 Nov. 1858, aged 90. The French socialists, termed Communists, became a powerful political body in that country, were implicated in the revolution of 1818, and made an insurrection at Paris, 1871; see France, Positive Philosophy, and Workingmen (who, in Great Britain, have received by legislation nearly all they require).

The Rev Charles Kingsley, Mr Thomas Hughes, and others, endeavored to set up Christian Socialism, about 1855-60

All in the list below are in London, except otherwise stated. An act was passed 11 Aug. 1851, "to afford facilities for the establishment of institutions for the promotion of literature and science," by grants of land, etc.; and for their regulation. The Royal and London Institutions were exempted from the operation of the act.

Society Islands, in the Pacific ocean, discovered by De Quirós in 1606; rediscovered by Capt. Wallis, 1767, who gave Otaheite or Tahiti the name of King George's island. Capt. Cook, who visited them in 1769 and 1777, named them Society Islands in honor of the Royal Society, see Otaheite.

Socinians, persons who accept the opinions of Faustus Socinus (died 1602) and his nephew Laelius (died 1604), Silesian noblemen. They held—1. That the Eternal Father was the one only God, and that Jesus Christ was no otherwise God than by his superiority to all other creatures; 2. That Christ was not a mediator; 3. That hell will endure for a time, after which the soul and body will be destroyed; 4. That it is unlawful for princes to make war.—Hook. The Socinians established a church at Rakow, in Poland, and made proselytes in Transylvania, 1568. They were expelled from Poland in 1658. The Rakovian Catechism was established in 1574; see Unitarians.

Socotra (Dioscoridis insula), an island in the Indian ocean, belonging to the Imam of Muscat, 130 miles east of cape Guardafui, eastern Africa. In the summer of 1878, it was said to have been given up to the British.

Sodium, a remarkable metal, first obtained in 1807 by Sir Humphry Davy, from soda (which was formerly confounded with potash, but proved to be a distinct substance by Duhamel in 1786). This metal, like potassium, was obtained by the agency of the electric battery. In consequence of Deville's improved processes, sodium is now manufactured by Bell Brothers, of Newcastle, at 10s. a pound (1880). Common salt (chloride of sodium) is a compound of sodium and chlorine; see Alkalies.

Sodom and Gomorrah (Palestine), with their inhabitants, were destroyed by fire from heaven 1083 a.c. (Gen. xix.).

Sodor, said to be derived from Soder-eyn, or South Isles (the Fribides or Hebrides), in distinction from Orkney, the North Isles. The southern or western Isles were made an episcopal diocese by Magnus, king of Norway, 1000, and joined to the Isle of Man about 1113; see Man.

Soissons (France), capital of the Gallic Suessiones, was subdued by Julius Cæsar, 57 a.c. It was held by Syagrius, after his father Ægidius, till his defeat by Clovis, a.d. 486. Several councils have been held at Soissons (in 744, 1092, 1123). Its academy was established in 1674. During the Franco-Prussian war, Soissons, after three weeks' investment and four days' bombardment, surrendered to the Germans under the grand-duke of Mecklenburg, 16 Oct. 1870. 90 officers, 4000 men, 120 guns, etc., were said to be taken. The Germans then obtained a second line of railway from Châlons to Paris.

Solar System, nearly as now accepted, is said to have been taught by Pythagoras of Samos, about 500 a.c. He placed the sun in the centre, and all the planets moving in elliptical orbits round it—a doctrine superseded by the Ptolemaic system (which see). The system of Pythagoras, revived by Copernicus (1543), is called the Copernican system. Its truth was demonstrated by Sir Isaac Newton in 1687; see Planets.

Soldiers' Daughters' Home was established at Hampstead, near London, in Aug. 1857, by the surplus of the money collected by the central association in aid of the wives and families of soldiers in active service during the Crimean war, and opened by the prince consort, 10 June, 1858. It has been much indebted to the exertions of Major Pevry.

Solebay, or SOUTHWOLD BAY (Suffolk), where a fierce naval battle was fought between the fleets of England and France on one side, and the Dutch on the other; the former commanded by the duke of York, afterwards James II., 28 May, 1672. The English lost four ships, and the Dutch three; but the enemy fled, and were pursued to their coast. The earl of Sandwich was blown up, and thousands were killed and wounded.

Sol-in System, see Musie.

Solfarino (in Lombardy), the site of the chief struggle on the great battle of 24 June, 1848, between the allied French and Sardinian army, commanded by their respective sovereigns, and the Austrians under Gen. Bismarck, the emperor being present. The Austrians, after their defeat at Magenta, gradually retreated across the Mincio, and took up a position in the celebrated quadrilateral, and were expected there to await the attack. But the advance of Garibaldi on one side, and of prince Napoleon and the Tuscans on the other, induced them to recross the Mincio and take the offensive on 28 June. The conflict began early on the 24th, and lasted fifteen hours. At first the Austrians had the advantage; but the successful attack of the French on Cavriana and Solfarino changed the fortune of the day, and the Austrians, after desperate encounters, were compelled to retreat. The French attribute the victory to the skill and bravery of their emperor and the generals MacMahon and Niel; the Austrians, to the destruction of their reserve by the rifled cannon of their adversaries. The Sardinians maintained a fearful contest of fifteen hours at San Martino, it is said against double their number. Loss of the Austrians, 630 officers and 19,811 soldiers; of the allies, 6 generals, 900 officers, and 17,005 soldiers killed and wounded. This battle closed the war; preliminaries of peace being signed at Villafranca, 12 July. On 24 June, 1870, on the site of the battle, three crosses, containing the bones of thousands of the slain, were solemnly consecrated in the presence of representatives of Austria, France, and Italy.

Solicitor, see Attorney. By the Supreme Judicature act, attorneys in future are to be styled solicitors; an act for regulating their examination was passed 26 July, 1877.

Solidians (from solus, only, and fides, faith), a name given to the Antinomians (which see).

Solomon's Temple, see Temple.

Solway Moss (Cumberland, bordering on Scotland). On 13 Nov. 1771, it swelled, owing to heavy rains. Upwards of 400 acres rose to such a height above the level of the ground that at last it rolled forward like a torrent above a mile, sweeping along with it houses, trees, etc. It covered 600 acres at Netherby, and destroyed about 30 small villages. Near Solway Moss the Scots were defeated by the English, 25 Nov. 1512.

Somaj, see Deism.

Sombrero (West Indies). On this desert isle Robert Jeffery, a British man-of-war's man, was put ashore by his commander, the hon. capt. W. Lake, for having tapped a barrel of beer when the ship was on short allowance. After sustaining life for eight days on a few limpets and rain-water, he was saved by an American vessel, 13 Dec. 1807, and returned to England. Sir Francis Burdett advocated his cause in parliament, and he received 600*l.* as a compensation from capt. Lake, who was tried by a court-martial, and dismissed the service, 10 Feb. 1810.

Somerset House (London), formerly a palace, founded on the site of several churches and other buildings levelled in 1549, by the protector Somerset, whose residence fell to the crown after his execution, 22 Jan. 1552. Here resided at times queen Elizabeth, Anne of Denmark, and Catherine, queen of Charles II. Old Somerset house, a mixture of Grecian and Gothic, was demolished in 1775, and the present edifice, from a design by Sir William Chambers, was erected for public offices. The Royal Academy of Arts first assembled in the apartments given to the members by the king, 17 Jan. 1771. The Royal Society met here, 1780-1857; and apartments here were also held by the Society of Antiquaries and the Geological Society—all three now at Burlington house. Large suites of government buildings were erected in 1774. The Navy office, Pipe office, Victualling, and other offices, were removed here in 1788, and various government departments since. The east wing, forming the King's College (see King's College), was completed in 1833. By an act passed in 1854, the offices of the duchy of Cornwall were transferred to Pimlico.

Somers-town, a populous district in St. Pancras parish, N. London, named after earl Somers, whose family acquired the property about 1695. The building began about 1786, and many French refugees settled in it. Much of the district has been occupied by the railway companies.

Somnath Gates, the gates of an ancient Hindoo temple at Guzerat, which was destroyed by Mahmoud of Ghuznee in 1025. The priests wished to preserve the idol, but Mahmoud broke it to pieces, and found it filled with diamonds, etc. He carried the gates to Ghuznee. When that city was taken by gen. Nott, 6 Sept. 1842, lord Ellenborough ordered the gates to be restored, after an exile of 800 years, and issued a proclamation much censured at the time. The gates are made of sandal-wood, and are described and figured in the "Archæologia" of the Society of Antiquaries, vol. xxx.

Sonderbund, see Switzerland, 1846.

Sonnet, a poem in fourteen lines, with rhymes adjusted by rules, was invented, it is said, by Guido d'Arezzo about 1024. The most celebrated sonnets are those by Petrarch (about 1327), Shakespeare (1609), Milton (about 1650), and Wordsworth (1820).

Sonnites, the orthodox Mahometans who now possess the Turkish empire; see Mahometanism.

Sons of the Clergy, see Clergy.

Sonthals, a tribe of N. India, brought to Bengal about 1830, where they prospered till, partly from the instigation of a fanatic, and partly from the exactions of money-lenders, they broke out into rebellion in July, 1855, and committed fearful outrages. They were quite subdued early in 1856, and many were removed to the newly conquered province of Pegu.

Sophia, St. (in Constantinople). The first church was dedicated to St. Sophia (holy wisdom) by Constantius II., 360; this having been destroyed, the second, the present edifice, was founded by Justinian, 531, and dedicated 537. Since the Mahometan conquest, in 1453, it has been used as an imperial mosque. Its length is 269 feet, and its breadth 243 feet. Six of its pillars are of green jasper, from the temple of Diana at Ephesus, and of porphyry, from the temple of the Sun at Rome. Four minarets were added by Selim II., who reigned in 1566. The interior of the dome is beautifully ornamented with mosaic work.

Sophists, teachers of youth in Athens, who were censured by Socrates, and consequently were instrumental in causing his judicial murder, 399 B.C. The controversy against them was carried on by Plato and his disciples.

Sorbonne, a society of ecclesiastics at Paris, founded by Robert de Sorbonne in 1252. The members lived in common, and devoted themselves to study and gratuitous teaching. They soon attained a European reputation as a faculty of theology, their judgment being frequently appealed to, from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century. The influence of the Sorbonne was declining when the society was broken up in 1789. The buildings are now devoted to education.

Sorcerers and Magicians. A law was enacted against their seductions, 33 Hen. VIII. 1541; and another statute, equally severe, was passed, 5 Eliz. 1563. The pretension to sorcery was made capital, 1 James I. 1603; see Witchcraft.

Soudan, or SOUDJAH, the title of the lieutenant-generals of the caliphs, which they bore in their provinces and armies. The officers afterwards made themselves sovereigns. Saladin, general of the forces of Nouredin, king of Damascus, was the first that took upon him this title in Egypt, 1165, after having killed the caliph Caym.

Soudan, or NIGRITIA, a region of Central Africa, partly subjected to the khedive of Egypt since 1874. It was well governed by col. Gordon till 1879.

Soulares Collection. About 1827 M. Soulares of Toulouse collected 790 specimens of Italian art and workmanship, etc. These were bought for 11,000*l.* by 73 English gentlemen, with the view of first exhibiting them to the public and afterwards selling them to the government (who gradually purchased them between 1858 and 1865). They formed part of the "Art Treasures" exhibited at Manchester in 1857.

Sound, see Acoustics.

Sound Duties. Till the year 1857 no merchant ship was allowed to pass the Sound (a narrow channel separating Zealand from Sweden) without clearing at Elsinore and paying toll. These duties had their origin in an agreement between the king of Denmark and the Hanse towns (1348), by which the former undertook to maintain light-houses, etc., along the Cattagat, and the latter to pay duty for the same. The first treaty with England in relation to this was in 1450; other countries followed. In 1855 the United States determined to pay the dues no more; and in the same year the Danish government proposed that these dues should be capitalized, which was eventually agreed to, the sum being 30,476,325 rix-dollars. In Aug. 1857, the British government paid 10,126,855 rix-dollars (1,125,206*l.*) to the Danes as their proportion.—The passage of the Sound was effected, in defiance of strong fortresses, by sir Hyde Parker and lord Nelson, 31 March, 1801; see Baltic Expedition.

Soundings at Sea. Capt. Ross, of H.M.S. Edipus, in 1840, took extraordinary soundings at sea. One taken 900 miles west of St. Helena extended to the depth of 6000 fathoms. In the latitude 33° S. and longitude 9° W., about 300 miles from the cape of Good Hope, 2266 fathoms were sounded; the weight employed amounted to 450 pounds. On 13 July, 1857, lieut. Joseph Dayman, in the North Atlantic ocean, lat. 51° 9' N., long. 40° 2' W., in sounding, found a bottom at 2424 fathoms. The deepest sounding known (3875 fathoms) was taken by the Challenger, capt. Nares, 24 March, 1873, in the North Atlantic, north of St. Thomas.

South African Confederation: to comprise the three British colonies—Cape Town, Natal, and West Griqua Land (1873)—and the two Dutch republics—Orange River free state and the South African or Transvaal republic (1852). The formation was proposed by the earl of Carnarvon, colonial secretary, in a despatch to sir Henry Barkly, governor of Cape Town, 4 May, 1875, and advocated by the historian, J. A. Froude, on a visit. It was much opposed at the Cape; see Cape. A conference of delegates in London was opened 5 Aug. 1876.

The South Africa act, "for the union under one government of such of the South African colonies and states as may agree thereto," was passed 10 Aug. 1877.

South African Republic, name assumed by the Boers in the Transvaal (which see) in 1880–1.

South America, see America.

South Australia was visited by capt. Sturt in 1830, and explored shortly after by capt. Parker and Mr. Kent, the former of whom was killed by the natives. The boundaries of the province were fixed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 95 (1834); and it was occupied 26 Dec. 1836, by capt. Hindmarsh, the first governor. It was colonized according to Mr. E. Gibbon Wakefield's scheme, which was carried out by the South Australian Colonization Association. The colony for several years underwent severe trials through the great influx of emigrants, land-jobbing, building speculations, etc., which produced almost universal bankruptcy in 1839. In five years after, the energy of the colonists had overcome their difficulties, and the prosperity of the colony appeared fully established. In 1842 the highly productive Burra-Burra copper-mines were discovered, and large fortunes were suddenly realized; but in 1851 the discovery of gold in New South Wales and Victoria almost paralyzed this province by drawing off a large part of the laboring population. Very little gold was found in South Australia; but a reaction took place in favor of the copper-mines, agriculture, etc. Before the discovery of gold, little trade existed between Adelaide (the capital of South Australia) and Melbourne; but in 1852 gold was transmitted from the latter to the former to the amount of 2,215,167*l.*, principally for breadstuffs, farm produce, etc. The bishopric of Adelaide was founded in 1847. Sir Dominic Daly, appointed governor in Nov. 1861, died 19 Feb. 1868; succeeded by sir James Fergusson, Dec. 1868; by Anthony Musgrave, Jan. 1873; by William Wellington Cairns, Jan. 1877; sir W. F. D. Jervois, June, 1877. Population in 1855, 85,821; in 1865, 156,605; in 1871, 185,626; in 1877, 225,677.

South Kensington Museum, near Brompton old church (containing the pictures presented by Mr. Vernon, Mr. Sheepshanks, Mrs. Ellison, and those bequeathed by Turner, the great painter, as well as specimens of sculpture and art, educational collections, products of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms, etc.), was opened on 24 June, 1857. A special exhibition of works of art, of immense value, lent for the occasion, was opened here in the summer of 1862, and closed in November. In July, 1873, a testimonial to Mr. Henry Cole, C.B., was proposed for his exertions in organizing this museum, and in promoting its objects.

Mr. John Forster, biographer of Dickens, bequeathed his library of books, MSS., paintings, and drawings to this museum. He died 1 Feb. 1876
Scientific Apparatus Loan Exhibition (which see) opened 13 May, closed. 30 Dec. "

South Mountain (Maryland), BATTLE OF, fought 14 Sept. 1862, three days before the drawn battle at Antietam. South Mountain is the name given to a prolongation of a range of the Blue Ridge north of the Potomac from Harper's Ferry. Turner's Gap affords a passage from Frederick City to Williamsport; Crampton's Gap gives a similar opening towards Harper's Ferry. Lee, after crossing the Potomac, had divided his army, so that an opportunity was given McClellan to cut in between and attack each portion. Franklin was ordered through Crampton's Gap to cut off M'Laws and relieve Harper's Ferry. The remainder of the army was to move by way of Turner's Gap upon the rear of Lee's main column. The confederate general D. H. Hill succeeded in reaching the summit of Turner's Gap before the arrival of the Union force. The battle of the 14th consisted of an attempt to wrest this position from the confederates, soon reinforced by Longstreet's corps. The national troops were successful. 80,000 Union troops were engaged and 17,000 confederates. National loss, 812 killed and 1234 wounded; confederate, 2000. This battle was really the decisive one of the campaign, and forced Lee to fight the battle of Antietam. At Crampton's Gap, six miles south, an action was at the same time going on between Franklin and M'Laws, in which the latter was driven from his position.

Southampton, a seaport (S. England), a county of itself, near the Roman Clausentum and the Saxon Hamtune. It frequently suffered by Danish incursions; Canute, when king, occasionally resided here. The charter was granted by Henry I. and confirmed by Richard I. and John; and the free grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. On 17 July, 1861, a monument to Dr. Isaac Watts, a native, was inaugurated, and on 15 Oct. 1862, the Hartley institution was opened by lord Palmerston. The prince of Wales laid the foundation of the parish church of St. Mary, built as a memorial of Samuel Wilberforce, bishop of Winchester, 12 Aug. 1878; consecrated 19 June, 1879.

Southcott, Joanna, a fanatic, born in 1750, came from Exeter to London, where her followers at one period amounted to many thousands, the low and ignorant being her principal dupes. In 1792 she announced herself as the woman spoken of in Rev. chap. xii., and a disease favored the delusion that she would be the mother of the promised Shiloh. She died 27 Dec. 1814. In 1851 there existed in England four congregations, professing to expect her return. Her successor, Mrs. Peacock, died March, 1875, aged 103 (?).

Southeastern Railway, from London to Folkestone, opened 28 June, 1843; to Dover, 7 Feb. 1844.

Southern Confederate States, see Confederates.

Southern Continent. The Southern ocean was first traversed by Magellan in 1520; and explored by Wallis and Carteret in 1760, and by Cook in 1778 and 1774. Of the southern continent little more is known than that it is icebound, and contains active volcanoes. It was discovered in the first instance by capt. John Hise, on 27 Feb. 1831, in lat. 65° 57' S., long. 47° 20' E., extending east and west 200 miles—this he named Enderby Land, after the gentleman who had equipped him for the voyage. Capt. Biscoe also discovered Graham's Land on 15 Feb. 1832, situated in lat. 67° 1' S., long. 71° 48' W. The Messrs. Enderby equipped three other expeditions in search of the southern continent, the last (in connection with some other gentlemen) in 1838, when capt. Balleeny had command, who, on 9 Feb. 1839, discovered the Balleeny islands, in lat. 67° N., long. 165° E., and in March, 1839, Sabrina Land, in lat. 65° 10' N., long. 118° 30' E. In 1840, a French expedition under the command of admiral D'Urville, and an American expedition under the command of commodore Wilkes, greatly added to our knowledge in respect to the existence of a southern continent, and this was again increased by the expedition which sailed from England in 1839, under the command of capt. or James Clark Ross, who discovered Victoria Land in 1841, and subsequently penetrated as far south as 78° 11'.

South-sea Bubble commenced with the establishment of the South-sea Company in 1710, which was at first unwisely and afterwards dishonestly managed. It exploded in 1724, ruining thousands of families; and the directors' estates, to the value of 2,014,000*l.*, were seized in 1721 and sold. Mr. Knight, the cashier, absconded with 100,000*l.*; but he compounded the fraud for 10,000*l.*, and returned to England in 1743. Almost all the wealthy persons in the kingdom had become speculators; the artificers of the directors having raised the shares, originally 100*l.*, to the price of 1000*l.*. A parliamentary inquiry took place in Nov. 1720, and Aislahe, chancellor of the exchequer, and several members of parliament were expelled the house in 1721; see Law's Dict.

Southwark (S. London) was governed by its own bailiffs till 1357. The city, however, found great inconvenience from the number of malefactors who resorted thither, in order to be out of the reach and cognizance of the city magistrates; and a grant was made of Southwark to the city of London by the crown for a small annuity. In Edward VI.'s reign it was formed into a city ward, and was named Bridge Ward Without, 1550.—Southwark bridge was designed by John Rennie, and built by a company, 1813-19, at an expense of 800,000*l.*. It consists of three great cast-iron arches, resting on massive stone piers and abutments; the distance between the abutments is 708 feet; the centre arch is 240 feet span, the two others 210 feet each; and the total weight of iron 5000 tons. The bridge was freed from toll on 8 Nov. 1864, the company receiving a compensation from the city. An act for the payment of dividends to shareholders was passed in 1872.—Southwark park was opened 19 June, 1862.

Southwell (Nottinghamshire), an ancient Roman town, where a church was founded by Paulinus, archbishop of York, 657; made collegiate before the Conquest, re-founded by Henry VIII., and made a bishopric by Henry VIII., 1541; dissolved by Edward VI. Collegiate church restored by Elizabeth, 1566. Near here Charles I. surrendered himself to the Scotch army in 1646. The bishopric act, authorizing the establishment of a see at Southwell, was passed 16 Aug. 1674.

Southwold, see Saltary

Sovereign, an ancient and modern British gold coin. In 1489 2*½* pence, in value 2*½*., to be called the sovereign, were ordered to be coined out of a pound of gold.—Boiling. In 1542 sovereigns were coined in value 2*½*., which afterwards, in 1550 and 1552 (4 & 6 Edw. VI.), passed for 2*½* and 3*½*.. "Sovereigns" of the new coinage were directed to pass for 2*½* l. July, and half-sovereigns for 1*½* l. Oct. 1617; see Coin and Gold. By the Coinage act, 1870, the weight of the sovereign is fixed at 123.27447 grains troy; specific gravity, 17.57 (916.67, gold being 1000); half-sovereigns, 61.63723 grains. The dragon sovereigns were retained in 1871.

Spa-fields (N. London). Here about 20,000 persons assembled to vote an address from the distressed manufacturers to the prince regent, 18 Nov. 1816. A second meeting, 7 Dec. following, terminated in an alarming riot; the shops of several gunsmiths were attacked for arms by the rioters; and in the shop of Mr. Beckwith, on Snow hill, Mr. Platt was wounded, and much injury was done before the tumult was suppressed. For this riot, Cashman, a seaman, was hanged, 12 March, 1817. Watson, the ringleader, escaped to America.

Spahis, Turkish cavalry. African horsemen, under this name, were incorporated by the French in Algiers in 1834; three regiments of them came to France in 1863.

Spain (the ancient Iberia and Hispania). The first settlers are supposed to have been the progeny of Tubal, 6th son of Japhet. The Phœnicians and Carthaginians (300 B.C.) successively planted colonies on the coasts; and the Romans conquered the whole country, 206 B.C. Population of Spain in 1657, 16,464,678; of the colonies, 6,333,497. In 1667, 16,090,546; colonies, 6,364,131; Balearic Isles and Canaries, 561,484. In 1670, Spain, 16,362,422; Isles, 578,064. Madrid, 1670, 682,026. Revenue 1672, about 6,000,000*l.*; 1860, 12,722,200*l.*; 1866, 18,921,000*l.*; 1871, about 26,000,000*l.*

 1350. Peter the Cruel; deposed; reinstated by Edward the Black Prince of England; slain by his natural brother and successor.
 1369. Henry II., the Gracious; poisoned by a monk.
 1379. John I.; he united Biscay to Castile.
 1390. Henry III., the Sickly.
 1406. John II., son of Henry.
 1454. Henry IV., the Impotent.
 1474. Isabella, sister (had married Ferdinand of Aragon, 18 Oct. 1469).
 1504. Joanna (daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella), and Philip I. of Austria. On her mother's death Joanna succeeded, jointly with her husband Philip; but Philip dying in 1506, and Joanna becoming imbecile, her father Ferdinand continued the reign, and thus perpetuated the union of Castile with Aragon.

KINGS OF ARAGON.

1035. Ramiro I.
 1065. Sancho Ramirez (IV. of Navarre).
 1094. Peter of Navarre.
 1104. Alfonso I., the Warrior, king of Navarre.
 1134. Ramiro II., the Monk.
 1137. Petronilla, and Raymond, count of Barcelona.
 1163. Alfonso II.
 1196. Peter II.
 1213. James I.; succeeded by his son.
 1276. Peter III.; conquered Sicily (which see) in 1282.
 1285. Alfonso III., the Beneficent.
 1291. James II., surnamed the Just.
 1327. Alfonso IV.
 1336. Peter IV., the Ceremonious.
 1387. John I.
 1395. Martin.
 1410. [Interregnum.]
 1412. Ferdinand the Just, king of Sicily.
 1416. Alfonso V., the Wise.
 1458. John II., king of Navarre, brother of Alfonso; d'ed 1479.

1479. Ferdinand II., the Catholic, the next heir; by marriage with Isabella of Castile (styled the Catholic kings), the kingdoms were united.

SPAIN.

1512. Ferdinand V. (of Castile), the Catholic, having conquered Granada and Navarre, became king of all Spain.
 1516. Charles I., grandson, son of Joanna of Castile and Philip of Austria (emperor of Germany, as Charles V., in 1519); resigned both crowns and retired to a monastery.
 1556. Philip II., son, king of Naples and Sicily; a merciless bigot; married Mary, queen-regnant of England; died covered with ulcers.
 1593. Philip III., son, drove the Moors from Granada and the adjacent provinces.
 1621. Philip IV., son; wars with the Dutch and French; lost Portugal in 1640.
 1665. Charles II., son; last of the Austrian line; nominated by will as his successor.
 1709. Philip V., duke of Anjou, grandson of Louis XIV. of France; hence arose the "war of the succession," terminated by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713; resigned.
 1724. Louis I., son; reigned only a few months.
 " Philip V., again.
 1746. Ferdinand VI., the Wise, son; liberal and beneficent.
 1759. Charles III., brother, king of the Two Sicilies, which he gave to his third son, Ferdinand.
 1788. Charles IV., son; the influence of Godoy, Prince of Peace, reached to almost royal authority in this reign; Charles abdicated in favor of his son in 1808, and died in 1819.
 1803. Ferdinand VII., whom Napoleon of France also forced to resign.
 " Joseph Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon; forced to abdicate.
 1813. Ferdinand VII. restored; married Maria Christina of Naples, 11 Dec. 1829; died 29 Dec. 1833; succeeded by 1833. Isabella II., daughter (born 10 Oct. 1830); declared of age, 8 Nov. 1843; married her cousin, don Francis d'Assisi, 10 Oct. 1846; deposed 30 Sept. 1868; separated from her husband, March, 1870; and abdicated, 25 June, 1870, in favor of her son, Alfonso, prince of Asturias (born 28 Nov. 1857).
 1870. Amadeo I. (duke of Aosta, son of Victor Emmanuel II., king of Italy); born 30 May, 1845; married Maria Victoria of Saxe-Coburg, 30 May, 1867; accepted the crown offered him by the cortes, 4 Dec. 1870; abdicated 11 Feb. 1873.
 REPUBLIC founded, 11 Feb. 1873. Very unsettled, 1873-4.

KING.

1874. Alfonso XII., son of Isabella II. (born 28 Nov. 1867); proclaimed 30 Dec. 1874; married, 1st, his cousin Mercedes, daughter of the duc de Montpensier (born 24 June, 1860), 23 Jan. 1878; she died 26 June, 1878; 2d, archduchess Maria Christina of Austria (born 21 July, 1858), 29 Nov. 1879.

Heiress: Maria Mercedes Isabella, born 11 Sept. 1880.

- Carlos V., brother of Ferdinand VII.; born 29 March, 1788; died 10 March, 1855.
 Carlos VI., his son (conde de Montemolin); died 14 Jan. 1861.
 Carlos VII. (son of don Juan, brother of Carlos VI., who renounced his right, 8 Jan. 1863); born 30 March, 1848; see above 1873-4.

Spalatro, or SPALATO (Dalmatia), the ancient Spalatum, and Salona. At his palace here, Diocletian spent his last nine years, and died July, 318. R. Adam published the "Antiquities of Diocletian's Palace," 1764.

Spanish America, Armada, etc., see America, Armada, and Eras.

Spanish Grandees, the higher nobility, at one time almost equal to the kings of Castile and Aragon, and often setting their authority at defiance, were restrained on the union of the crowns by the marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella in 1474, who compelled several to relinquish the royal fortresses and domains which they held. Charles V. reduced the grandees to sixteen families (Medina-Sidonia, Albuquerque, etc.), dividing them into three classes.

Spanish Language (Lengua Castellana) is a dialect of Latin largely intermingled with Arabic, which was the legal language till the fourteenth century. Spanish did not become general till the sixteenth century.

Sparta, the capital of Laconia, or Lacedæmon, the most considerable republic of the Peloponnesus, and the rival of Athens. Though without walls, it resisted the attacks of its enemies by the valor of its citizens for eight centuries. Lelex is supposed to have been the first king. From Lacedæmon, the fourth king, and his wife Sparta, who are also spoken of as the founders of the city, it obtained names. The Lacedæmonians were a nation of soldiers, and cultivated neither the arts, sciences, commerce, nor agriculture. The early history is traditional.

Spartacus's Insurrection (or Servile war).

Spartacus was a noble Thracian, who served in an auxiliary corps of the Roman army. Having deserted and been apprehended, he was reduced to slavery and made a gladiator. With some companions he made his escape; collected a body of slaves and gladiators, 73 B.C.; ravaged southern Italy; and defeated the Roman forces under the consuls sent against him. Knowing the impossibility of successfully resisting the republic, he endeavored to conduct his forces into Sicily, but was defeated and slain by Crassus, 71 B.C.

"Spasmodic School" of poetry, a name sarcastically given to Alex. Smith, Sydney Dobell (died in Aug. 1874), Gerald Massey, and others (precursors of Morris, Algernon Swinburne, and Rossetti, sarcastically termed the "fleshy school"), ridiculed by prof. Aytoun in his "Firmilian," published 1854.

Speakers of the House of Commons. Peter de Montford, afterwards killed at the battle of Evesham, was the first speaker, 45 Hen. III. 1260; sir Thos. Hungerford is said to have been the first named "Speaker," 1372; but sir Peter de la Mare is supposed to have been the first regular speaker, 50 Edw. III. 1376. The king refused his assent to the choice of sir Edward Seymour as speaker, 6 March, 1678, and sergeant William Gregory was chosen in his room. Sir John Trevor was expelled the chair and the house for taking a gratuity after the act for the benefit of orphans had passed, 12 March, 1694-5; a deputy speaker was appointed Aug. 1853.

Speaker's Commentary, a name given to an edition of the Bible with a revised text and a commentary by several bishops and other theologians, edited by F. C. Cook. The undertaking originated, it is said, chiefly with Mr. John Evelyn Denison, speaker of the house of commons, with the view of opposing the interpretations of Dr. Colenso, and was announced in Nov. 1863. The publication began in 1871.

Speaking-trumpet, used by ships at sea. One is said to have been used by Alexander, 335 B.C. One was constructed from Kircher's description by Saland, 1652; philosophically explained and brought into notice by Morland, 1670.

Special Constables are sworn in for the preservation of the public peace when disturbances are feared. The laws relative to their appointment were amended in 1831 and 1835. Louis Napoleon, afterwards emperor, aided as a special constable in London, 10 April, 1848; see Chartists and London, Dec. 1867. Instructions for their organization were issued 13 Jan. 1868. On 28 Jan., 52,974 in the metropolis, and 113,674 in the United Kingdom, had been sworn in. Their services were not required, and they were honorably dismissed by an order issued 31 March, 1868.

Species. Much controversy among naturalists arose in consequence of the publication, in 1859, of Mr. Charles Darwin's "Origin of Species," in which he suggests that all the various species of animals were not created at one time, but have been gradually developed by what he terms "natural selection," and the struggle for life in which the strong overcome the weak; and which Herbert Spencer terms "the survival of the fittest."

The idea was put forth by Lamarck in his "Philosophie Zoologique," 1809. Similar views appear in the "Vestiges of Creation," 1844. Mr. Darwin says, that he infers "from analogy that probably all the organic beings which have ever lived on the earth have descended from some one primordial form, into which life was first breathed by the Creator;" see Development and Evolution.

Specific Gravities. See under Weights.

Spectacles, unknown to the ancients, are generally supposed to have been invented by Alexander de Spina, a monk of Florence, in Italy, about 1285. According to Dr. Plot, they were invented by Roger Bacon, about 1280. Manni attributes them to Salvino, who died 1817. On his tomb at Florence is the inscription, "Qui giace Salvino degli Armati, inventore degli occhiali: Dio gli perdoni le peccata" ("Here lies Salvino degli Armati, inventor of spectacles: may God pardon his sins").

Spectator. The first number of this periodical appeared on 1 March, 1711; the last was No. 635, 20 Dec. 1714. The papers by Addison have one of the letters C. L. I. O. at the end. The most of the other papers are by sir Richard Steele; a few by Hughes, Budgell, Eusden, Miss Shephard, and others.—The Spectator newspaper (philosophical, whig), begun 5 July, 1828.

Spectrum, the term given to the image of the sun or any other luminous body formed on a wall or screen, by a beam of light received through a small hole or slit, and refracted by a prism. The colors thus produced are red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The phenomena were first explained by Newton, whose "Optics" was published in 1704. Several of these colors are considered to be compounds of three primary ones: by Mayer (1775), red, yellow, and blue; by Dr. Thomas Young (1801), red, green, and violet; by prof. Clerk Maxwell (1860), red, green, and blue. As the color of a flame varies according to the substance producing it or introduced into it, so the spectrum varies. This led to the invention of a method of chemical analysis by profs. Bunsen and Kirchhoff (1860), by which they have discovered two new metals, and have drawn conclusions as to the nature of the atmosphere of the sun and stars, and of the light of the nebulae, by comparing the spectrum with that produced by flames into which iron, sodium, and other substances have been introduced. For the invisible rays of the spectrum, see Culorescence and Fluorescence.

Fraunhofer's Lines. In 1802 Dr. Wollaston observed several dark lines in the solar spectrum; in 1816 Joseph Fraunhofer not only observed them, but constructed a map of them, giving 580 lines or dark bands. By the researches of Brewster and others the number observed is now above 2000.

Mr. Fox Talbot observed the orange line of strontium in the spectrum in 1826; and sir David Brewster observed other lines, 1833–42–43. In 1862–3 Mr. William Huggins analysed the light of the fixed stars and of the nebulae; and in 1866 Dr. Bence Jones, by means of spectrum analyses, detected the presence of minute quantities of metals in the living body, introduced only a few minutes previously.

A spectroscopic society in Italy published a journal early in 1872.

"Spelling Bees," meetings to test the proficiency in correct spelling; introduced into London from the United States of America; the first at Holloway, London, N., in the autumn of 1875. Geographical, musical, and other bees followed, and all soon ceased.

Spelling Reform. A resolution in favor of it was adopted by the London School Board, in 1877; a conference and public meeting were held at the Society of Arts, 29 May, 1877.

A Spelling Reform Association formed; Dr. Temple, bishop of Exeter, Robert Lowe, E. B. Tylor, and Max Müller were among the members..... 1879
Mr. T. B. Sprague's article on a Marriage and Mortality Table, in the Journal of the Institute of Actuaries, is printed according to phonetic spelling..... July, "

Spheres. The celestial and terrestrial spheres and sundials are said to have been invented by Anaximander, 552 B.C.; and the armillary sphere by Eratosthenes, about 225 B.C. The planetarium was constructed by Archimedes before 212 B.C. Pythagoras maintained that the motions of the twelve spheres must produce delightful sounds, inaudible to mortals, which he called the music of the spheres.

Sphygmograph (from the Greek σφύγμωγ, a pulsation), an instrument for investigating disease, by showing the state of the pulse, invented by M. E. J. Marey, of Paris, and described by him in 1863.

Spices. Imported into Great Britain: cinnamon and other spices, exclusive of pepper, 1846, 1,910,584 lbs.; 1856, 4,154,167 lbs.; 1867, 12,831,953 lbs.; 1877, 17,186,572 lbs.; 1879, 19,340,817 lbs.

Spicheren, see Saurbrück.

Spinnet, a clavichord or keyed instrument, used, in the seventeenth century, a modification of the virginals, which see. Bull, Gibbons, Purcell, and especially Domenico Scarlatti composed for this instrument.

Spinning was ascribed by the ancients to Minerva, the goddess of wisdom. Arcas, king of Arcadia, taught his subjects the art about 1500 B.C. Tradition reports that Lucretia with her maids was found spinning when her husband Collatinus paid a visit to her from the camp; that the wife of Tarquin was an excellent spinner, and that a garment made by her, worn by Servius Tullius, was preserved in the temple of Fortune. Till 1767, the spinning of cotton was performed by the hand spinning-wheel, when Hargreaves, an ingenious mechanic, near Blackburn, made a spinning-jenny, with eight spindles, and also erected the first carding-machine, with cylinders. Arkwright's machine for spinning by water was an extension of the principle of Hargreaves; but he also applied a large and small roller to expand the thread, for which he took out a patent in 1769. At first he worked his machinery by horses; but in 1771 he built a mill on the stream of the Derwent, at Cromford. In 1774-9, Crompton invented the mule (which see).

Spire (in Bavaria). The emperors held many diets at Spire since 1309, and it was the seat of the imperial chamber till 1688, when the city was burned by the French, and not rebuilt till after the peace of Ryswick, in 1697. The diet to condemn the reformers was held at Spire, called there by the emperor Charles V., 1529; see Protestants.

Spirit Level. The invention is ascribed to J. Melchisedec Thevenot, who died 1692.

Spirits. see Distillation. In all nations spirituous liquors have been considered as a proper subject of heavy taxation for the support of the state; see Alcohol, Brandy, Methylated Spirits, etc.

In 1840 England made about ten millions of gallons of spirits. Scotland about seven millions of gallons, and Ireland about nine millions of gallons.

In 1851 the number of gallons on which duty was paid for home consumption was 23,976,596. The total amount paid was 6,017,218*l.*, of which 3,758,186*l.* were paid by England, 1,252,297*l.* by Scotland, and 1,006,735*l.* by Ireland. The total duty on home consumption paid in 1853 was 6,760,422*l.*

In 1858, 9,195,154*l.* were paid as duty on 27,370,934 gallons. In 1855, methylated spirits of wine, for use in the arts and sciences, were made duty-free.

In 1859, 27,657,721 gallons of spirits were distilled in the United Kingdom. The uniform duty of 8*s.* per gallon was paid on 24,254,403 gallons for home consumption, producing 9,701,764*l.* In the year 1865-6 the tax produced about 13,955,000*l.*, being the largest sum then ever raised by indirect taxation. In 1871-2, 15,798,344*l.* (customs and excise); in 1875-6, 21,295,663*l.*; in 1877-8, 20,675,928*l.*

In 1861 an act was passed repealing wholly or in part 26 previous acts, and embodying all regulations for the guidance of manufacturers and dealers in spirits.

In 1870, about 83,000,000*l.* spent in spirits; 58,000,000*l.* by working classes.

Proof spirits distilled in the United Kingdom in 1873, 36,479,648 gallons (England, 9,531,058; Scotland, 16,421,701; Ireland, 10,526,889); in 1874, 35,352,232 gallons; duty paid, 10*l.* a gallon.

Spirits Act (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24), passed 26 Aug.

1880, consolidated and amended the law relating to the manufacture and sale of spirits.

Spiritualism, or SPIRIT-RAPPING. Spiritual manifestations (so called) began, it is said, in America about 1848, and attracted attention in England about 1851, in the shape of rapping, table-turning, etc. Many inquisitive or credulous persons visited Mr. Daniel Douglas Hume, or Home, and Mr. Forster, noted "spiritual mediums." Mr. Home, secretary of the Spiritual Athenaeum, Sloane street, Chelsea, published in 1863, "Incidents of my Life," in which he states that the only benefit he derived from the "gift" was the convincing many unbelievers of the certainty of a life to come; see Trials, April, May, 1868. The Spiritual Magazine began Jan. 1860; the Spiritualist, 9 Nov. 1869. The London Dialectical Society published a report on spiritualism in Nov. 1871. Mr. W. Crookes in 1871 investigated the phenomena, and ascribed them to "psychic force" (Quarterly Journal of Science, July and Oct. 1871). Miss Kate Fox, said to be the earliest American medium (about 1852) was married to Mr. H. D. Jencken, in London, Dec. 1872.

In 1874 Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke, and Dr. Lynn, exhibited tricks by which they said they demonstrated the imposture of spiritualism.

Spiritualism discussed by a section of the British Association at Glasgow (supported by Messrs. William Crookes, A. Russell Wallace, and other eminent men), without result, 12 Sept. 1876.

Twenty spiritualist journals publishing, 1876.

Dr. Henry Slade, a medium, and Geoffrey Simmons, his assistant, charged at Bow-street by prof. E. Ray Lankester and others, 2, 10, 20 Oct., with "unlawfully using certain subtle and crafty means and devices to deceive;" dealt with under Vagrant act, 2, 10, 20 Oct.; Simmons discharged, Slade sentenced to 3 months' imprisonment with hard labor, 31 Oct. 1876; appeal to sessions; sentence quashed for a technical error, 29 Jan. 1877.

William Lawrence sentenced to 3 months' imprisonment for receiving money as a "medium," 16 Jan. 1877.

Spitalfields (East London), so named from the priory of St. Mary Spittle, dissolved 1534. Here the French Protestant refugees settled and established the silk manufacture in 1685. In consequence of commercial changes the weavers endured much distress about 1829.

Spithead, a roadstead near the spit, a sandbank between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight. See Naval Review, under Navy of England.

Spitzbergen, an archipelago in the Arctic ocean, discovered in 1553 by sir Hugh Willoughby, who called it Greenland, supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595 it was visited by Barentz and Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called it Spitzbergen, or sharp mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds; see Phipps.

Spitzcap, see Majuba.

Spontaneous Combustion of the human body, declared by most chemists to be impossible, although many cases have been recorded. The case of the countess of Görlitz, 1847, disproved by confession of her murderer, March, 1850.

Spontaneous Generation. The origin of the germs of infusorial animalcules developed during putrefaction, etc., has been and is still warmly debated by naturalists. Spallanzani (about 1760), and especially M. Pasteur and others at the present time (1881), assert that these germs are really endowed with organic life existing in the atmosphere. Needham (about 1747), and especially M. Pouchet and his friends in our day, assert that these germs are spontaneously formed out of organic molecules. Pouchet's "Hétérogénie" appeared in 1859; Bastian's "Beginnings of Life," 1872. The researches of prof. Tyndall, supporting Pasteur, and opposing Bastian, were published 1876-8. "Spontaneous generation" (also termed generatio equevoca and epigenesis) has been still further disproved by the laborious microscopic investigations of the Rev. W. H. Dallin-ger, 1875-8. He found germs to stand a much greater heat than perfect organisms.

Sporting Newspapers: Bell's Life in London, began 1820; Sporting Life, 18 March, 1850; Sporting Gazette, 1862; Sporting Times, 1865; Sportsman, Aug. 1865; The Field, 1858; Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, 1874.

Sports. The first "Book of Sports," under the title of "The King's Majesty's Declaration to his Subjects concerning Lawful Sports to be used" on Sundays after evening prayers, was published by king James I., 24 May, 1618. The second "Book of Sports," with a ratification by his majesty Charles I., is dated 18 Oct. 1633. On the publication of the first "Book of Sports," there arose a long and violent controversy among English divines on certain points; see Sabbatarians, Sunday, etc.—The book was ordered to be burned by the hangman, and the sports were suppressed by the parliament.

Stratysylvania (Virginia), see United States, May, 1864, and Grant's Campaign in Virginia.

Springfield (Missouri), near which was fought the desperate battle of Wilson's Creek, in which the federals had the advantage over the confederates, but lost their brave general, Nathaniel Lyon, 10 Aug. 1861.

Springfield (New Jersey), BATTLE OF, fought 23 June, 1780. A British column 5000 strong attacked the Americans after manœuvring to divide them. The British were repulsed, and fled in confusion.

Spurs. Anciently the difference between knight and esquire was, that the knight wore gilt spurs (cygnes antriaux), and the esquire silver ones. Two sorts of spur seem to have been in use at the time of the Conquest, one called a pryck, having only a single point, the other a number of points of considerable size. Spurs nearly of the present kind came into use about 1400; see Plating.

Spurs, BATTLE OF. Henry VIII. of England, the emperor Maximilian, and the Swiss, in 1513, entered into an offensive alliance against France. Henry VIII. landed at Calais in the month of July, and soon formed an army of 30,000 men. He was joined by the emperor with a good corps of horse and some foot, the emperor as a mercenary to the king of England, who allowed him a hundred ducats a day for his table! They invested Terouenne with an army of 50,000 men; and the duc de Longueville, marching to its relief, was signally defeated on 16 Aug., at Guinegate. This battle was called the battle of Spurs, because the French used their spurs more than they did their swords. The English king laid siege to Tournay, which submitted in a few days.—Hennault. See Courtrai, for another "battle of spurs."

Stabat Mater, a Latin hymn, by Jacopone, fourteenth century, sung during Passion week in Catholic churches. Rossini's music to this hymn (1842) is often performed.

Stade Dues. At a castle near the town of Stade, in Hanover, certain dues on goods were charged by the Hanoverian government. The British government settled these dues in 1844. They were resisted by the Americans in 1855, and were abolished in June, 1861. Great Britain paid 100,000*l.* as her share of the compensation (3,000,000*l.*).

Stadtholder, see Holland.

Staff College (Sandhurst), for providing an education to qualify military officers for the duties of the staff. The foundation stone was laid by the duke of Cambridge on 11 Dec. 1859.

Stage-coaches, so called from the stages or inns at which the coaches stopped to refresh and change horses.—Busby. The Stage-coach Duty act passed in 1785. These coaches were made subject to salutory provisions for the safety of passengers, in 1810; to mileage duties, 1815. The acts were consolidated in 1862, and amended in 1883 and 1882; see Mail-coaches, etc.

Stagyrite (properly Stagrite), see Aristotelium.

Stamp-duty. By 22 & 23 Charles II. (1670-1), duties were imposed on certain legal documents. In 1694 a duty was imposed upon paper, vellum, and parchment. The stamp-duty on newspapers was commenced in 1711, and every year added to the list of articles upon which stamp-duty was made payable.

Standard for gold and silver in England fixed by law, 1800. Standard gold is 22 parts out of 24 of pure gold, the other two parts or carats being silver or copper. The standard of silver is 11 oz. 2 dwts. of fine silver alloyed with 18 dwts. of copper, or 87 parts out of 100 pure silver, and three parts copper. In 1800 there 12 oz. of silver were coined into 20 shillings; in 1812 they were coined into 30 shillings; and in 1827 into 45 shillings. In 1846, Henry VIII. coined 6 oz. of silver and 6 oz. of alloy into 48 shillings; and the next year he coined 4 oz. of silver and 8 oz. of alloy into the same sum. Elizabeth, in 1560, restored the old standard in 60 shillings, and in 1601 in 62 shillings. It is now 66 shillings. The average proportions of silver to gold at the royal mint are 15*½* to 1. The standard of plate and silver manufactures was affirmed, 6 Geo. I. 1719 at anq.; see Gold, Goldsmiths, and Coinage.

Standard, BATTLE OF THE, see Northallerton.

"Standard," conservative newspaper; begun, morning, 1827; evening, 29 June, 1837.

Standard Measures. In the reign of Edgar, a law was made to prevent frauds arising from the diversity of measures, and for the establishment of a legal standard measure to be used in every part of his dominions. The standard vessels made by order of the king were deposited in the city of Winchester, and hence originated the well-known term of "Winchester measure" of the time of Henry VII. (1467). The bushel so made is still preserved in the museum of that city. Henry I. also, to prevent frauds in the measurement of cloth, ordered a standard yard of the length of his own arm to be made and deposited at Winchester, with the standard measures of king Edgar. The Guildhall contains the standard measures of succeeding sovereigns.—Camden. The standard weights and measures were settled by parliament in 1624. The pound troy was to be 5760 grains, and the pound avoirdupois 7000 grains. The "Standard yard of 1784," in the custody of the clerk of the house of commons, was declared to be the imperial standard yard and the unit of measures of extension. This standard having been destroyed by the fire in 1834, a new commission was appointed to reconstruct it; and researches for this purpose, in conformity with the act, which directed the comparison of the standard with a pendulum vibrating seconds of time in the latitude of London, were begun by Francis Baily (died in 1844), continued by the rev. R. Sheepshanks till his death in 1855, and completed by G. B. Airy, astronomer royal. In 1855 was passed "An Act for Legalizing and Preserving the Lost Standards of Weights and Measures." The parliamentary copies of the standard pound and yard are deposited at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. The Standard Weights and Measures act was passed Aug. 1866. The Standard Commission published reports, 1866 et seq.

Standards, see Banners, Flags, etc. The practice in the army of using a cross on standards and shields is due to the asserted miraculous appearance of a cross to Constantine, previous to his battle with Maxentius; Eusebius says that he received this statement from the emperor himself, 312. The standard was named LABARUM. For the celebrated French standard, see Auriflamme.—STANDARD OF MAHOMET; on this ensign no infidel dared look. Christians have been massacred by the Turkish populace for looking on it.—The British IMPERIAL STANDARD was first hoisted on the Tower of London, and on Bedford Tower, Dublin, and displayed by the Foot Guards, on the union of the kingdoms, 1 Jan. 1801.

Stanford Bridge (York). In 1066, Tostig, brother of Harold II., rebelled against his brother, and joined the invading army of Harold Hardrada, king of Norway. They defeated the northern earls and took York, but were defeated at Stanford Bridge by Harold, 25 Sept., and were both slain. The loss by this victory no doubt led to his defeat at Hastings, 14 Oct. following.

Stanhope Administration was formed by James (afterwards earl) Stanhope and the earl of Sunderland, 15 April. 1717. Stanhope was premier and chancellor of the exchequer; lord (afterwards earl) Cowper, lord chancellor; earl of Sunderland and Joseph Addison, secretaries of state, etc. In March, 1718, Addison resigned, and the earl of Sunderland became premier.

Stanhope Demonstrator, see Logic.

Stannary Courts of Devon and Cornwall for the administration of justice among the tin-miners, whose privileges were confirmed by 33 Edw. I. 1305. They were regulated by parliament in 1611, and at many times since. A "Stanneries act" was passed in 1869.

Staple (literally, that which is fixed). The chief English staple commodities which were traded in by privileged merchants, and on which customs were levied, were wool, skins, leather, tin, lead, and sometimes cloth, butter, and cheese: certain towns were appointed for the collection of the duties; statutes relating to the staple were passed by Edward III., Richard II., and Henry VI. Edward III.'s "ordinacio stapularum" (ordinance of the staple) was enacted in 1353.

Star of India, a new order of knighthood for India, instituted by letters-patent 23 Feb., gazetted 25 June, 1861, and enlarged in 1866. It comprised the sovereign, the grand-master, 25 knights (Europeans and natives), and extra or honorary knights, such as the prince-consort, the prince of Wales, etc. The queen invested several knights on 1 Nov. 1861. The prince of Wales held a grand chapter at Calcutta, 1 Jan. 1876.

Starch is a sediment produced at the bottom of vessels wherein wheat has been steeped in water; it is soft and friable, easily broken into powder, and is used to stiffen and clear linen, with blue: its powder is employed to powder the hair. The art of starching linen was brought into England by Mrs. Dingheim, a Flemish woman, 1 Mary, 1553. — Stone. Patents for obtaining starch from other substances have been taken out: from potatoes by Samuel Newton and others, in 1707; from the horse-chestnut by William Murray, in 1796; from rice by Thomas Wickham, in 1823, from various matters by Orlando Jones, in 1839-40.

Star-chamber, COURT OF. So called haphly from its roof being garnished with stars.—Coke. This court of justice was called Star-chamber, not from the stars on its roof (which were obliterated even before the reign of queen Elizabeth), but from the Starræ, or Jewish covenants, deposited there by order of Richard I. No star was allowed to be valid except found in those repositories, and here they remained till the banishment of the Jews by Edward I. The court was instituted or revived 3 Hen. VII. 1486, for trials by a committee of the privy council, which was in violation of Magna Charta, as it dealt with civil and criminal causes unfettered by the rules of law. In Charles I.'s reign it exercised its power upon several bold innovators, who gloried in their sufferings, and contributed to render government odious and contemptible. It was abolished in 1640. There were in this court from 26 to 42 judges, the lord chancellor having the casting vote.

Stars, THE FIXED. They were classed into constellations, it is supposed, about 1200 B.C. Hicetas, of Syracuse, taught that the sun and the stars were motionless, and that the earth moved round them, about 344 B.C. (this is mentioned by Cicero, and perhaps gave the first hint of this system to Copernicus). Job, Hesiod, and Homer mention several of the constellations. The Royal Library at Paris contains a Chinese chart of the heavens, made about 600 A.C., in which 1460 stars are correctly inserted. The aberration of the stars was discovered by Dr. Bradley, 1727; see Astronomy and Solar System. Maps of the stars were published by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge in 1839, and a set of celestial maps, issued under the superintendence of the Royal Prussian Academy, was completed in 1859.

Bessel discovered the annual parallax of star 61 Cygni (hence he calculated its distance from the earth to be about 60 billions of miles)..... 12 Feb. 1841
Struve made it 40 billions (supported by Brünnow and R. S. Ball)..... 1853

Starvation. Deaths attributed to it in the metropolitan districts, 1873, 107; 1875, 46; 1879, 80; see Abstinence.

State-paper Office was founded in 1578; now merged into the Public Record Office. In 1856 the British government began the publication of Calendars of State-papers, invaluable to future historians.

States of the Church, see Pope and Rome.

States-general of France. An ancient assembly of France, first met, it is said, in 1302 to consider the exactions of the pope. Previous to the Revolution, it had not met since 1614. The states consisted of three orders—the clergy, nobility, and commons. They were convened by Louis XVI., and assembled at Versailles, 5 May, 1789 (308 ecclesiastics, 285 nobles, and 621 deputies, or tiers état, third estate). A contest arose whether the three orders should make three distinct houses, or but one assembly. The commons insisted upon the latter, and, assuming the title of the National Assembly, declared that they were competent to proceed to business without the concurrence of the two other orders, if they refused to join them. The nobility and clergy found it expedient to concede the point, and they all met in one hall; see National Assembly.

Stationers. Books and papers were formerly sold only at stalls, hence the dealers were called stationers. The company of stationers of London is of great antiquity, and existed long before printing was invented, yet it was not incorporated until 3 Philip & Mary, 1557. Their old dwelling was in Paternoster row.

Statistics, the science of the state, political knowledge, is said to have been founded by sir William Petty, who died in 1687. The term is said to have been invented by prof. Achenwall of Göttingen in 1749. The first statistical society in England was formed at Manchester in 1833; the Statistical Society of London, which publishes a quarterly journal, was established 15 March, 1834, for the purpose of procuring, arranging, and publishing "facts calculated to illustrate the condition and prospects of society;" similar societies have been established on the continent. International statistical congresses are now held occasionally. The 1st at Brussels, chiefly through the agency of M. Quetelet, in 1853; 2d at Paris, 1855; 3d at Vienna, 1857; 4th at London, under the presidency of the prince-consort, 16-21 July, 1860; 5th at Berlin; 6th at Florence; 7th at the Hague; 8th at St. Petersburg, was opened 22 Aug. 1872; 9th at Pesth, 31 Aug. 1876.

Statues, see Sculpture, etc. Phidias, whose statue of Jupiter passed for one of the wonders of the world, was the greatest statuary among the ancients, 440 B.C. He had previously made a statue of Minerva at the request of Pericles, which was placed in the Parthenon. It was made of ivory and gold, and measured 39 feet in height. Acilius raised a golden statue to his father, the first that appeared in Italy. Lysippus invented the art of taking likenesses in plaster moulds, from which he afterwards cast models in wax, 326 B.C. Michael Angelo was the greatest artist among the moderns. The first equestrian statue erected in Great Britain was that of Charles I. in 1678.* By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 10 (10 July, 1854), public statues are placed under the control and protection of the Board of Works. The following are the chief public statues in London:

Statutes, see Acts of Parliament, Clarendon, Merton, etc. Statute Law Revision acts were passed in

* This statue is of brass, cast by Le Sueur, in 1633, at the expense of the Howard-Arundel family. During the civil war, the parliament sold it to John River, a brazer, in Holland, with strict orders to break it to pieces; but he concealed it under ground till the Restoration, when it was erected. In 1678, on a pedestal executed by Grinling Gibbons. The first equestrian statue of bronze, founded at one cast, was that of Louis XIV. of France, 1699; it was elevated about 1724.

Statutory Declarations. By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62 (1835), persons objecting to oaths are permitted to make declarations before magistrates, judges, etc.; commencing, "I, —, do solemnly and sincerely declare that"—an indulgence sometimes abused.

Mr. Alexander Chaffers having made a declaration against the character of lady Twiss, wife of sir Travers Twiss, was prosecuted for libel. She withdrew during the examination, and the prosecution ceased; but Chaffers was severely censured by the magistrate, and by the attorney-general in parliament..... March, 1872

Steam-carriage (for ordinary roads), invented by the earl of Caithness, was said to be successful in 1860. It travels over rough roads at the rate of 8 miles an hour, at a cost of less than 1d. per mile. His lordship made a journey of 140 miles in two days; see Road Steamers.

Steam-engine† and Navigation. Hero of Alexandria, in his "Pneumatics," describes various methods of employing steam as a power; and to him is ascribed the Æolopile, which, although a toy, possesses the properties of the steam-engine: he flourished about 284-241 A.C. Roger Bacon appears to have foreseen the application of steam-power; see Railways, Locomotives, Road Steamers, etc.

GREAT EASTERN, for a short time (1857-8) called Leviathan..... 692 " 83 "
Horse power:—Paddles, 1000; screw, 1600; Weight of ship
12,000 tons; ordinary light draught, 12,000 tons.

She was designed by Mr. E. K. Brunel (who died 15 Sept. 1859), and built by Messrs. Scott Russell & Co., at Millwall; launching lasted from 3 Nov. 1857, to 31 Jan. 1858.

The capital subscribed having been all expended, a new company was formed to fit her for sea.

On 7 Sept. 1859, she left her moorings at Deptford for Portland roads. On the voyage an explosion took place (off Hastings), through some neglect in regard to the cas. ing of one of the funnels, when ten firemen were killed and many persons seriously injured. After repairs she sailed to Holyhead, arriving there 10 Oct.; she endured the storm of 25, 26 Oct. well, and proceeded to Southampton for the winter, 4 Nov.

She was fitted up to convey 5000 persons from London to Australia, a distance of 22,500 miles, with accommodation for 800 first class passengers, 2000 second class, and 1500 third class. Her able captain (Harrison) was drowned in the Solent 22 Jan. 1860, deeply regretted. She sailed for New York 17 June, under command of capt. Vine Hall, and arrived there 28 June. After being exhibited she left New York, 16 Aug., and returned to England 26 Aug.

Owing to a lawsuit in April, the ship came into the hands of sheriff's officers; but was released and sailed for New York on 1 May, 1861. On 12 Sept. she suffered much loss through a violent gale.

In 1862 she performed several voyages to and from New York; but in Aug. ran on a rock near Long Island and injured her bottom.

She was repaired and arrived at Liverpool 17 Jan. 1863, and sailed to New York (16-27 May).

She was bought by Glass, Elliot, and Co. in March or Apr., 1864, and was chartered to convey the Atlantic telegraph cable; sailed from Sheerness 15 July; and returned 19 Aug.
1865; see Electric Telegraph, p. 238.

She sailed for New York, prepared for 2000 passengers, 26
March, and returned with 191. She was seized by the seamen, claiming their wages, May, 1867; and the case was carried into chancery in July.

At the meeting of the shareholders 10 Feb. 1868, no dividend was declared.

She conveyed the French Atlantic telegraph cable, successfully laid..... Oct. 1869

Arrived at Bombay with Bombay and Suez cable, 27 Feb.;

Steam-gun: suggested by William Murdoch, 1803. One patented by Messrs. Perkins, in 1824, was ineffectual. In Oct. 1859, Mr. H. Bessemer proposed the application of steam power to artillery.

Steam-hammer, invented by Mr. James Nasmyth in 1838, and patented by him 18 June, 1842. Its main feature is the absolutely direct manner by which the elastic power of steam is employed to lift up and let fall the mass of iron constituting the hammer, which is attached direct to the end of a piston-rod passing through the bottom of an inverted steam cylinder placed immediately over the anvil.

In 1842, Mr. Nasmyth applied his steam-hammer to driving piles, which has importantly assisted in the execution of great public works. Owing to its vast range of power, forged iron-work can now, by its means, be executed on a scale, and for a variety of purposes, with an ease and perfection not previously possible. Parts of gigantic marine steam-engines, anchors, and Armstrong guns, as well as the most minute details of machinery, as in Enfield rifles, are executed by the steam-hammer.

A steam-hammer, said to be the then largest in the world, completed at Woolwich; the falling portion weighs 40 tons, and when used with hot steam (51 tons) has the force of 91 tons. April, 1874. One at Schneider's works, Crouzet, France; weight between 75 and 80 tons, Dec. 1877.

Steam-man. A figure constructed to drag a phaeton received this name in New York in March, 1868.

Steam-navigation, see under Steam.

Steam-ploughs were patented by G. Callaway and R. A. Purkes, 1819; H. Cowing, 1850, and others. John Fowler's of 1854 is much approved.

Steam-ram (to be used in naval warfare), was invented by Mr. James Nasmyth in 1836, and communicated to the admiralty in 1845. Steam-rams, built by Mr. James Laird of Birkenhead for the confederates in North America, were stopped and eventually bought by the British government, 1864.

Steam-whistles and Steam-trumpets, used in factories to summon or dismiss workmen, prohibited by an act passed Aug. 1872.

Stearine (from Greek, στέαρ, suet), that part of oils and fats which is solid at common temperature. The nature of these substances was first made known by Chevreul, in 1823, who showed that they were compounds of peculiar acids, with a base termed glycerine; of these compounds the chief are stearine, margarine, and elaine; see Candles.

Steel, metal, a compound of iron and carbon, exists in nature, and has been fabricated from the earliest times. It was certainly used by the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Greeks. It now largely replaces cast-iron in shipbuilding, etc.

Réaumur discovered the direct process of making steel by immersing malleable iron in a bath of cast-iron 1722
A manufactory for cast-steel is said to have been set up by Benjamin Huntsman at Handsworth near Sheffield, 1740
The manufacture of shear-steel began in Sheffield, about 1800
German steel was made at Newcastle previously by Mr. Crawley.

The inventions of Mushat (1800), Lucas (1804), and Keath (1839) were important steps in this manufacture; see Engraving.

Reipe patented his "puddled steel" 1850

Mr. H. Bessemer made steel by passing cold air through liquid iron, 1856. By this method 20 tons of crude iron have been converted into cast-steel in 25 minutes.*

Tungsten steel was made in Germany, 1859; and M. Frémy made steel by bringing red-hot iron in contact with carbonate of ammonia. 1861

Mr. Krupp exhibited an ingot of steel weighing 4500 lbs. in 1851, and one weighing 20 tons in 1862

The subject much investigated by M. Caron, 1861-5; much attention was excited by cutlery made from a metallic sand, brought from Taranaiki or New Plymouth, in New Zealand. 1860

A steel bridge, in connection with the exhibition, constructed at Paris by M. Joret 1866

Mr. John Heaton published his process 1867-8

Dr. Siemens, by means of his "regenerative gas furnaces," produced excellent steel, cheaply, in large masses. 1876 et seq.

Cutlery Company, London, opened; exhibition . . . 1 May, 1879

Messrs. Bolchow, Vaughan, & Co., of Middlesborough, by Thomas and Gilchrist's process, convert Cleveland iron ore into Bessemer steel, by lining the furnace with radial bricks of magnesian limestone, and adding cold basic material, phosphorus being thereby removed. "

The process reported successful. Oct. 1880

Mr. J. S. Jeans published his important work, "Steel: its History, Manufacture, Properties, and Uses" . Feb. "

Steel Pens. "Iron pens" are mentioned by Chamberlayne in 1685. Steel pens, made long before, began to come into use about 1820, when the first gross of three-slit pens were sold, wholesale, for 7*l.* 4*s.* In 1830 the price was 8*s.*, and in 1832, 6*s.* A better pen is now sold for 6*d.* a gross. Birmingham, in 1858, produced about 1000 million pens per annum. Women and children are principally employed in the manufacture. Perry, Mitchell, and Gillott are eminent makers. Joseph Gillott, originally a mechanic, made a large fortune by steel-pen making. He died 5 Jan. 1872, aged 72.

Steelyard. An ancient instrument, the same that is translated balance in the Pentateuch. The Statera Romana, or Roman steelyard, is mentioned in 815 a.c.—The STEELYARD or STILLYARD COMPANY, London merchants, who had the steelyard in Thames street assigned to them by Henry III., about 1232, were Flemings and Germans, and the only exporters, for many years after, of the staple commodities of England.—Anderson. The company lost its privileges, finally, in 1578; and the merchants were expelled from England in 1597.

Steenkirk, see Enghien.

Stefano, San, a small village on the sea of Mar-mora, S.W. of Constantinople; here the grand-duke Nicholas established his headquarters, 24 Feb.; and here was signed a treaty of peace with Turkey, 3 March, 1878, much modified by the treaty of Berlin, signed 18 July following. The Russians quitted San Stefano, 22 Sept. 1878.

It established independence of Montenegro, Servia, and Roumania; constituted Bulgaria a tributary principality; required a heavy indemnity from Turkey for Russia, who was to gain a port on the Black Sea and Kara; to exchange the Dobruzscha for Bessarabia; to obtain rights for Christians; to open the Bosphorus and Dardanelles in peace and war; etc.

Stenochromy, see Printing in Colors.

Stenography (from Greek, στεινός, narrow), the art of short-hand, said to have been practised by the ancients. Its improvement is attributed to the poet Ennius, to Tyro, Cicero's freedman, and still more to Seneca. The Ars Scribendi Characteris, written about 1412, is the oldest system extant. Dr. Timothy Bright's "Characterie, or the Art of Short, Swift, and Secret Writing," published in 1588, is the first English work on short-hand. Peter Bales, the famous penman, published on stenography in 1590; and John Willis published his "Stenographie" in 1602. There are now numerous systems: John Byrom's (1767), T. Gurney's (1710), "Brachygraphy," based on Mason's (1750), "a Short-hand Dictionary" (1777), Taylor's (1786), Mavor's (1789), Pitman's (phonographic), 1837.

Stephen's Chapel, St. (Westminster), built by king Stephen, about 1135. It was rebuilt by Edward III. in 1347, and by him made a collegiate church, to which a dean and twelve secular priests were appointed. Soon after its surrender to Edward VI., about 1548, it was applied to the use of parliament; see Parliament. It was destroyed by fire, 16 Oct. 1834. The Society of Antiquaries published memorials of it about 1810; and Mr. Mackenzie's work appeared in 1844. The restoration of the beautiful crypt was complete in Jan. 1870.

Stephenson, Fort, LOWER SANDUSKY, was attacked by British and Indians (about 1200) 2 Aug. 1813, and was defended by 150 Americans. The British were repulsed with a loss of 150 men, the Americans losing 1 killed and 7 wounded.

Stepney, a parish, E. London, the Stebenhede of Domesday book. Edward I. summoned a parliament here, 1299. Stepney suffered severely by the plague, 1625 and 1665. Stepney green was restored and opened as a park by the Metropolitan Board of Works, Aug. 1872.

Stereochromy, a mode of painting in which water-glass (an alkaline solution of flint, silice) serves as the connecting medium between the color and the substratum. Its invention is ascribed to Von Fuchs, who died at Munich on 5 March, 1856. Fine specimens of this art by Kaulbach and Echter exist in the Museum at Berlin, and also at Munich.

Stereometer, by which is compassed the art of taking the contents of vessels of liquids by gauging, invented about 1850.—Anderson. M. Say's stereometer, for determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, and powders as well as solids, was described in 1797.

* For this invention he had received by royalties 1,067,748*l.* up to 1879; also many foreign honors; knighted, June, 1879.

Stereoscope (from Greek, στερεός, solid, and σκοπεῖν, to see), an optical instrument for representing in apparent relief natural objects, etc., by uniting into one image two plane representations of these objects as seen by each eye separately. The first stereoscope by reflection was constructed and exhibited by prof. Charles Wheatstone in 1838, who had announced its principle in 1833. Since 1854 stereoscopes have been greatly improved.

Stereotype, a cast from a page of movable printing-types, so named by the Parisian printer, Didot, 1798. It is said that stereotyping was known in 1711. It was practised by William Ged of Edinburgh, about 1730. Some of God's plates are at the Royal Institution, London. A Mr. James attempted to introduce Ged's process in London, but failed, about 1735.*—Nichols. Stereotype printing was in use in Holland, in the last century; and a quarto Bible and a Dutch folio Bible were printed there.—Phillips. It was revived in London by Wilson in 1804. Since 1850 the durability of stereotypes has been greatly increased by electrotyping them with copper or silver. Stereotyping used for printing the Times, 1856 et seq.

In the library of the Royal Institution is an edition of Salbust, with this imprint: "Edinburgi, Gulielmus Ged, auri faber Edinensis, non typis mobilibus, at vulgo fieri solet, sed tabellæ seu laminis fusi, excudebat. 1744." (Printed at Edinburgh by William Ged of Edinburgh, goldsmith, not with movable types, as is commonly done, but with cast tablets or plates.)

Sterling (money). Ducange says (1733), "Esterlingus, sterlingus, are English words relating to money, and hence familiar to other nations, and applied to the weight, quality, and kind of money." "Denarius Angliæ, quo vocatur sterlingus," stat. Edw. I. (The penny of England, which is called sterling.) Camden derives the word from esterling or esterling, observing that the money brought from Germany, in the reign of Richard I., was the most esteemed on account of its purity, being called in old deeds "nammi esterling." Others derive the word from the Easterlings, the first moneyers in England.

Stethoscope. In 1816 Laënnec, of Paris, by rolling a quire of paper into a kind of cylinder, and applying one end to the patient's chest and the other to his own ear, perceived the action of the heart in a much more distinct manner than by the immediate application of the ear. This led to his inventing the stethoscope, or "breast-explorer," the principle of which, now termed "auscultation," was known by Hippocrates (357 B.C.), and by Robert Hooke, 1661.

Stettin (Pomerania), an ancient city, formerly held by the Sidiini and Venedes, was taken by Boleslas of Poland in 1121. After being conquered by the Swedes, Russians, and French, it was awarded to Prussia in 1814.

Steward OF ENGLAND, LORD HIGH. The first grand officer of the crown. This office was established prior to the reign of Edward the Confessor, and was formerly annexed to the lordship of Hinckley, Leicestershire, belonging to the family of Montfort, earls of Leicester, who were, in right thereof, lord high stewards of England; but Simon de Montfort, the last earl of this family, having raised a rebellion against his sovereign, Henry III., was attainted, and his estate forfeited to the king, who abolished the office, 1265. It is now revived only pro hac vice, at a coronation, or the trial of a peer. The first afterwards appointed was Thomas, second son of Henry IV. The first for the trial of a peer was Edward, earl of Devon, on the arraignment of the earl of Huntingdon, in 1400. The last was lord Denman at the trial of the earl of Cardigan, 16 Feb. 1841. The duke of Hamilton was lord high steward at the coronations of William IV., 1831, and Victoria, 1838.

* It was hotly opposed by the journeyman printers.

Steward OF THE HOUSEHOLD, LORD (an ancient office), has the sole direction of the king's house below stairs; he has no formal grant of his office, but receives his charge from the sovereign in person, who, delivering to him a white wand, the symbol of his office, says, "Seneschal, tenez le bâton de notre maison." This officer has been called lord steward since 1540; previously to the 31st of Henry VIII., he was styled grand master of the household. His function as a judge was abolished in 1849.

Sticklestadt (Norway). Here Olaf II., aided by the Swedes, was defeated in his endeavors to recover his kingdom from Canute, king of Denmark, and slain 29 July, 1030. He was afterwards sainted, on account of his zeal for Christianity.

Stipendiary Magistrates, see Magistrates.

Stirling (S. Scotland). The strong castle was taken by Edward I. of England, 1304. Here James II. stabbed the earl of Douglas, 13 Feb. 1452, and here James VI. was crowned, 24 July, 1567. Stirling surrendered to Monk, 14 Aug. 1651. The statue of king Robert Bruce unveiled, 24 Nov. 1877.

Stirrups were unknown to the ancients. Gracchus fitted the highways with stones to enable the horsemen to mount. Warriors had projections on their spears for the same purpose. Stirrups were used in the fifth century, but were not common even in the twelfth.

Stock Exchange, THE NEW YORK, the richest institution of the kind in the world, was established in 1817. Its first building was opened 1827, and burned 16 Dec. 1835. The second building, costing $1,800,000, was erected soon afterwards. This is now the Custom-house. The third building, in Broad street, near Wall street, is still occupied. The sales of railroad stocks alone, on the New York Exchange, during 1880, exceeded 100,000,000 shares.

Stockach, a town in Baden, near which the Austrians, under the archduke Charles, defeated the French, 25 March, 1799; and Moreau defeated Kray, 3 May, 1800.

Stockholm, capital of Sweden (built on holmen, or islands), was fortified by Berger Jarl about 1254. Here the Swedish nobility were massacred by Christian II., in 1520; see Sveden.

Stockings of silk are said to have been first worn by Henry II. of France, 1547. In 1560, queen Elizabeth was presented with a pair of knit black silk stockings by her silk-woman, Mrs. Montague, and she never wore cloth ones any more.—Horell. He adds, "Henry VIII. wore ordinary cloth hose, except there came from Spain, by great chance, a pair of silk stockings; for Spain very early abounded with silk." Edward VI. was presented with a pair of Spanish silk stockings by his merchant, sir Thomas Gresham; and the present was then much taken notice of.—Ibidem. Others relate that William Rider, a London apprentice, seeing at the house of an Italian merchant a pair of knit worsted stockings from Mantua, made a pair like them, the first made in England, which he presented to the earl of Pembroke, 1564.—Storr. The art of weaving stockings in a frama was invented in England by the rev. Mr. Lee, of Cambridge, in 1589, twenty-five years after he had learned to knit them with wires or needles. Cotton stockings were first made in 1730; see Cotton.

Stockport (in Cheshire) has become eminent on account of the cotton trade. Heaton Norris, in Lancashire, is united to it by a bridge over the river. Here the Manchester blanketeers were dispersed, 11 March, 1817; and here was a serious religious riot, when two Roman Catholic chapels were destroyed, and the houses of many Roman Catholics gutted, and their furniture and other contents smashed or burned, 29 June, 1852.

Stocks, in which drunkards were placed. The last in London was removed from St. Clement Danes, Strand, 4 Aug. 1826.

Stocks. The public funding system originated in Venice, about 1173, and was introduced into Florence in 1340. The English funding system may be said to have had its rise in 1690.

"Bulls" are persons who buy stock and thus cause the market to rise; "Bears," those who sell and cause it to fall. Act to prevent stock-jobbing passed, March, 1734; repealed. 1860

The foundation of the Stock Exchange, in Capel court, the residence of the lord mayor, sir Wm. Capel, in 1504, was laid on 18 May, 1801. It was stated on the first stone that the public debt was then 552,730,924*l*. Members, 1864, about 1100; above 2000 in 1878

The memorable Stock Exchange hoax, for which admiral lord Cochrane (afterwards lord Dundonald), Johnstone, and others, were convicted, 22 Feb. 1814. Lord Cochrane was, in consequence, expelled the house of commons. His innocence was afterwards proved, and he was restored to his rank by king William IV., and to the honors belonging to it by queen Victoria.

Stoics, disciples of Zeno, the philosopher (about 290 B.C.); obtained the name because they listened to his instructions in a porch (Greek, stoa) at Athens. Zeno taught that man's supreme happiness consisted in living agreeably to nature and reason, and that God was the soul of the world.—Stanley.

Stoke, EAST (near Newark, Nottinghamshire). Near here, on 16 June, 1487, the adherents of Lambert

Simnel, who personated Edward, earl of Warwick, and claimed the crown, were defeated by Henry VII. John de la Pole, the earl of Lincoln, and most of the leaders, were slain. Simnel was afterwards employed in the king's household.

Stone. Stone buildings erected in England by Benedict Biscop, about 670. A stone bridge built at Bow, in the eleventh or twelfth century, is accounted the first; but a bridge exists at Crowland, which is said to have been built in 860, see Bridges. The first stone building in Ireland was probably a round tower; see Building. Stone china-ware was made by Wedgwood in 1762. Artificial stone for statues was manufactured by a Neapolitan, and introduced into England, 1776. Stone paper was made in 1776; see Ransome's Artificial Stone, and Lithotomy. For stone implements, see Flints, and Piano-forte. An orchestra composed of wind instruments made of terra-cotta appeared in London in 1874.

Stone River (Tenn., U.S.), BATTLE OF, fought 31 Dec. 1862, and 2 Jan. 1863. On 31 Dec. both Rosecrans and Bragg determined to attack, and each had his left massed against the antagonist's right. Bragg completed his preparations first, and disarranged Rosecrans's plan. The Union right was badly cut up; but a new line was formed, against which Bragg hurled his troops in vain. On 2 Jan. Rosecrans attacked Bragg with such marked success that, on the 3d, the latter retreated to Duck River, and the national army occupied Murfreesborough. Each commander claimed that he was largely outnumbered. The confederate loss was 10,000, the national, 12,000.

Stonehenge (on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire) is said to have been erected on the counsel of Merlin, by Aurelius Ambrosius, in memory of 460 Britons who were murdered by Hengist the Saxon about 450.—Geoffrey of Monmouth. Erected as a sepulchral monument of Ambrosius, 500.—Polydore Vergil. An ancient temple of the Britons, in which the Druids officiated.—Dr. Stukeley. The Britons are said to have held annual meetings at Abury and Stonehenge, when laws were made and justice administered. The curus near Stonehenge was discovered by Dr. Stukeley, 6 Aug. 1723. The origin and object of these remains are still very obscure. See W. M. Flinders Petrie's "Stonehenge: Plans, Description, and Theories," 1890.

Stonewall Brigade, see United States, 1862, note.

Stonington, DEFENCE OF. This borough, on Long Island Sound, in the eastern part of Connecticut, was assailed by the British, under commodore Hardy, on 9 Aug. 1813. A cannonade and bombardment ensued for two or three days. Less than 20 men, with 8 cannon, successfully defended the place and prevented the British landing from their boats. The Americans had 6 men wounded; the British lost 21 men killed and 69 wounded.

Stono Ferry, BATTLE OF. The British army menacing Charleston, South Carolina, were attacked by gen. Lincoln at Stono Ferry, ten miles below the city, on Stono River, or inlet, 20 June, 1779. The Americans were repulsed.

Stony Creek, or BURLINGTON HEIGHTS, at the west end of Lake Ontario, in Upper Canada, was the scene of a night assault upon 1800 American troops, under gen. Chandler, on 6 June, 1813, by a British force of about 800 men, under gen. Vincent. The Americans lost 17 men killed, 38 wounded, and 5 officers and 93 men made prisoners. Among the latter were gens. Chandler and Winder.

Stony Point, CAPTURE OF. Stony Point is a rough promontory on the west shore of the Hudson, a few miles below the lower entrance to the Highlands. The British were in possession of works there in the summer of 1779. Gen. Wayne led a force of light infantry to storm it on the night of 15 July, 1779, and at two o'clock the next morning he wrote to Washington, "The fort and garrison, with col. Johnson, are ours." The British lost, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, about 600 men; the Americans lost 15 killed and 83 wounded. The spoils were a large amount of military stores. Thanks and a gold medal were given to Wayne by Congress.

Storms, see Meteorology and Cyclones. The following are recorded:

In London a storm raged which destroyed 1500 houses, 944.

In several parts of England, the sky being very dark, the wind coming from the S.W.; many churches were destroyed; and, in London, 500 houses fell, 5 Oct. 1601.

On the coast of Calais, when Hugh de Beauvais and several thousand foreigners, on their voyage to assist king John against the barons, perished, 1215. — Holinshed.

It thundered fifteen days successively, with tempests of rain and wind, 1233.

Storm with violent lightnings; one flash passed through a chamber where Edward I. and his queen were conversing, did them no damage, but killed two of their attendants, 1285. — Hoveden.

Violent storm of hail near Chartres, in France, which fell on the army of Edward III., then on its march. The hail was so large that the army and horses suffered very much, and Edward was obliged to conclude a peace, 1339. — Matt. Paris. When Richard II.'s queen came from Bohemia, on her setting foot on shore an awful storm arose, and her ship and a number of others were dashed to pieces in the harbor, Jan. 1382. — Holinshed.

Richard's second queen also brought a storm with her to the English coasts, in which the king's baggage was lost, and many ships cast away, 1396. — Holinshed.

Hurricane throughout Europe, which did very considerable damage, on 3 Sept. 1658, the day that Cromwell died. — Mortimer.

Storm on east coast of England; 200 colliers and coasters lost, with most of their crews, 1696.

The "Great Storm," one of the most terrible that ever raged in England. The devastation on land was immense; and in the harbors and on the coasts the loss in shipping and in lives was still greater, 26, 27 Nov. 1703. The loss sustained in London alone was calculated at 2,000,000 sterling. The number of persons drowned in the floods of the Severn and Thames, and lost on the coast of Holland, and in ships blown from their anchors and never heard of afterwards, is thought to have been 8000. Twelve men-of-war, with more than 1800 men on board, were lost within sight of their own shore. Trees were torn up by the roots, 17,000 of them in Kent alone. The Eddystone light-house was destroyed, and in it the ingenious contriver of it, Winstanley, and the persons who were with him. The bishop of Bath and Wells and his lady were killed in bed in their palace in Somersetshire. Multitudes of cattle were also lost: in one level 15,000 sheep were drowned.

Snow-storm in Sweden, when 7000 Swedes, it is said, perished upon the mountains, in their march to attack Drontheim, 1719.

One in India, when many hundreds of vessels were cast away, a fleet of Indians greatly damaged, and some ships lost, and 30,000 persons perished, 11 Oct. 1737.

Dreadful hurricane at the Havannah; many public edifices and 4000 houses were destroyed, and 1000 inhabitants perished, 25 Oct. 1758.

Awful storm in the north of England, in which many vessels were destroyed, and four Dublin packets foundered, 29 Oct. 1775.

One at Surat, in the East Indies; destroyed 7000 of the inhabitants, 22 April, 1782.

One hundred and thirty one villages and farms laid waste in France, 1785.

One general throughout Great Britain; several hundred sail of shipping destroyed or damaged, 6 Oct. 1794.

One which did vast damage in London, and throughout almost the whole of England, 8 Nov. 1800.

A tremendous storm throughout Great Britain and Ireland, by which immense damage was done, and many ships wrecked, 16, 17 Dec. 1814.

An awful one, by which a great number of vessels were lost, and much damage was done to the shipping in general on the English coast, 31 Aug. 1816.

Dreadful hurricane ravaged the Leeward islands from the 20th to the 23d Sept. 1819. At the island of St. Thomas alone, 104 vessels were lost.

Great storm along the coast from Durham to Cornwall; many vessels lost, Nov. 1821.

In Ireland, particularly in the vicinity of Dublin, many houses were thrown down and vast numbers unroofed, 12 Dec. 1822.

Awful storm on the coast of England; many vessels lost, and thirteen driven ashore and wrecked in Plymouth alone, 12, 13 Jan. 1828.

At Gibraltar, where more than 100 vessels were destroyed, 18 Feb. 1828.

Dreadful storm at the Cape of Good Hope, where immense property was lost, 16 July, 1841.

A hurricane visited London and its neighborhood which did great damage to the buildings, but without the destruction of human life, though many serious accidents occurred, 28 Oct. 1838.

Awful hurricane on west coast of England and in Ireland. The storm raged through Cheshire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire; 20 persons were killed in Liverpool by the falling of buildings, and 100 were drowned in the neighborhood. The coasts and harbors were covered with wrecks, the value of two of the vessels lost being nearly half a million sterling. In Limerick, Galway, Athlone, and other places, more than 200 houses were blown down, and as many more were burned, the winds spreading the fires. Dublin suffered dreadfully; London and its neighborhood scarcely sustained any damage, 6, 7 Jan. 1839.

Fearful storm on the coast of the United States, destroying Minot's Ledge light house, Boston harbor, 19 April, 1851.

[The winter of 1852-3 (Dec. and Jan.) was one of storms, many of which were very destructive.]

Storthing, the Norwegian parliament, said to have been first held at Bergen by Haco V. in 1223.

Stoves. The ancients used stoves which concealed the fire, as the German stoves yet do. They lighted the fire also in a large tube in the middle of the room, the roof being open. Apartments were warmed by portable braziers. Stoves on this old principle, improved, continue in use in many houses and public establishments in England, and generally on the continent. Dr. Franklin and count Rumford pointed out the waste of fuel in our open fires; and Dr. Neil Arnott patented his "improvements in the production and agency of heat," 14 Nov. 1821; see Chimneys and Cottager's Stove. Dr. C. William Siemens described his smokeless stove in Nature for 11 Nov. 1880.

Strasbourg, the Roman Argentoratum, the capital of Alsace. Here Julian defended the Alemanni, 357, who captured it, 455. It was annexed to Germany, 870. Louis XIV. seized it 28 Sept. 1681, and retained it by the treaty of Ryswick, 1697. The citadel and fortifications which he constructed have been so much augmented that Strasbourg may be considered one of the strongest places in Europe. It was confirmed to France by the peace of Ryswick in 1697, but captured by the Germans, 28 Sept. 1870, and retained at the peace, May, 1871. The cathedral, an epitome of Gothic art, was founded by Clovis, and reconstructed by Pepin and Charlemagne. After destruction by lightning, 1007, it was principally rebuilt by Erwin de Steinbach and his son in the fourteenth century. The lofty tower was completed in 1489. The celebrated astronomical clock, after a long stoppage, was repaired by M. Schwilgué, and inaugurated 1 Jan. 1848.

An attempt at insurrection in the city was made by prince Louis Napoleon (afterwards president of the French republic, and emperor), aided by two officers and some privates. . . . 30 Oct. 1836
It was instantly suppressed by their arrest, and the prince was shipped off to America by the French government.

Strontium. The native carbonate of strontia was discovered at Strontian, in Argyllshire, in 1787. Sir Humphry Davy first obtained from it the metal strontium in 1808.

Strychnia, a poisonous vegetable alkaloid, discovered in 1818 by Pelletier and Caventou in the seeds of the strychnos ignatia and nux romica, and also in the upas poison. Half a grain blown into the throat of a rabbit occasions death in four minutes; its operation is accompanied by lockjaw. Much attention was given to strychnia in 1856, during the trial of William Palmer, who was executed for the murder of Cook, 14 June, 1856.

Stuart, House of, see under Scotland, England, and Pretenders.

Stucco Work was known to the ancients, and was much prized by them, particularly by the Romans, who excelled in it.—Lenglet. It was revived by D'Udine, about 1550; and in Italy, France, and England in the eighteenth century.

Stuttgart (Wurtemberg), first mentioned in 1229, was made his residence by count Eberhard, 1320; enlarged by Ulric, 1436; and made capital of the state, 1482. It has been greatly adorned during the last and present centuries. International rifle meeting here, 1 Aug. 1875.

Style. The style was altered by Augustus Cæsar's ordering leap-year to be once in four years, and the month Sextilis to be called Augustus, 8 B.C.; see New Style.

Style Royal, see Majesty and Titles. The styles of the English sovereigns are given in the later editions of Nicolas's "Chronology of History." The Royal Style and Titles Act, giving power to add to the queen's titles "empress of India," after much opposition in the commons, received royal assent 27 April; proclamation issued 28 April; announced in India, by the viceroy, 19 Aug. 1876.

Stylites, see Monachism.

Styria (Austria), part of the ancient Noricum and Pannonia, was held successively by the Romans, Ostrogoths, and Avars. It was conquered by Charlemagne, and divided among his followers, styled counts, among whom the count of Styria, about 876, was the most powerful. The count became margrave about 1030; and Ottocar VI., in 1180, was made duke. At his death, 1192, Styria was annexed to the duchy of Austria. In 1246 it was acquired by Bela IV. of Hungary; in 1253 by Ottocar II. of Bohemia, after whose defeat and death at Marchfeld, in 1278, it reverted to Rudolph of Austria, and was annexed to his possessions.

Subsidies to the kings of England were formerly granted in kind, particularly in wool; 80,000 sacks were voted to Edward III. on account of the war with France, 1340.—Andrews. Subsidies were raised upon the people of England by James I., 1634; but they were included in a bill for the redress of grievances, 1688. Four subsidies (the last) were granted to Charles II. in 1688.*

Succession Acts, see Settlement.

Succession Duty Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), after much discussion, was passed 4 Aug. 1852. By this act the legacy duty was extended to real estate, and was made payable on succession to both landed and personal property.

Succession, War of (1702-1713), distinguished by the achievements of the duke of Marlborough and the earl of Peterborough, and their unprofitable results, arose on the question whether an Austrian prince or a French prince should succeed to the throne of Spain. The British court upheld Louis, and Marlborough was victorious; but the allies withdrew one after another, and the French prince succeeded, see Spain and Utrecht.

Sudbury, in Suffolk, was disfranchised for bribery in 1843.

Suevi, a warlike Gothic tribe, which, with the Alani and the Visigoths, entered Spain about 406, were overcome by the latter, and absorbed into their kingdom about 564.

Suez Canal. The caliph Omar about 640 opposed cutting the isthmus. A plan for a canal between the head of the Red Sea and the bay of Palusium was brought forward by M. Ferdinand de Lesseps in 1852. He undertook to cut a canal through 90 miles of sand; to run out moles into the Mediterranean; to deepen the shallow waters; to create ports to receive the ships from India and Australia, and to adapt the canal to irrigation. The consent of the Egyptian, Turkish, Russian, French, and Austrian governments was gradually obtained, but not that of the British. A company was formed for the purpose, and the work commenced in 1856 by Mr. Daniel Lang (knighted 1870). The cost was estimated at 8,000,000*l.* Engineer, M. L. Montell.

Sugar * (Saccharum officinarum) is supposed to have been known to the ancient Jews. Found in the East Indies by Nearchus, admiral of Alexander, 325 a.c.—Strobo. An Oriental nation in alliance with Pompey used the juice of the cane as a common beverage—Lucan. It was prescribed as a medicine by Galen, second century. Brought into Europe from Asia, A.D. 635; in large quantities, 1150. Attempted to be cultivated in Italy; not succeeding, the Portuguese and Spaniards carried it to America about 1510.

Sugar refining was made known to Europeans by a Venetian, 1400; and was first practiced in England in 1600, though some say we had the art a few years earlier. The invaluable vacuum pan was invented by Howard, 1812. Dr. Brodley's processes were patented in 1820-30, but not adopted in Britain.

Raw Sugar's importation into Great Britain.—1865, 7,304,386 cwt.; 1866, 8,817,377 cwt.; 1867, 10,380,534 cwt.; 1871, 12,126,808 cwt.; 1873, 16,264,711 cwt.; 1877, 16,020,944 cwt.; in 1879, 17,734,220 cwt.

The annual cane-sugar product of the United States is now about 14,000 tons. The duties collected from imports of sugar, for the fiscal year 1881, amounted to 347,977,127.

This ecclesiastical law continued till the Reformation, when it was admitted into the statute law of England by the authority of parliament, with the confiscation of land and goods. Till 1823 the body of the suicide was directed to be buried in a cross-road, and a stake to be driven through it. It is now usually buried in consecrated ground without a religious ceremony.

Suitors' Fund (in the court of chancery) in 1862 amounted to 1,220,000*l.* As this money has no specific owner, a proposal was made by government to apply it to the building of new law-courts, payment of all legal claims being guaranteed, which was directed by the "Courts of Laws Fees" act, passed 20 Aug. 1867.

Sullivan, Fort, DEFENCE OF. Fort Sullivan was upon Sullivan's Island, in Charleston harbor, South Carolina. It was built of palmetto-logs and earth, and garrisoned by 500 men, under col. William Moultrie, in the spring of 1776. It was attacked by a fleet, under sir Peter Parker, on 28 June, 1776. A conflict raged for almost ten hours. The fleet was dreadfully shattered, and finally repulsed. The British lost, in killed and wounded, 225; the garrison lost only 2 killed and 22 wounded. Moultrie was promoted for his gallantry, and the name of the fort was called Moultrie in his honor.

Sulphur has been known from the earliest times. Basil Valentine mentions its production from green vitriol. Sulphuric acid (vitriol), produced by him from burning sulphur, was introduced into England about 1720. Sulphur has been the object of research of many eminent chemists during the present century, and many discoveries have been made—such as its allotropic condition, &c. It is the inflammable constituent in gunpowder, and a deleterious ingredient in coal-gas. The sulphur mines of Sicily have been wrought since the sixteenth century, but the exportation was inconsiderable till about 1820; in 1838 the trade increased so much that Great Britain alone imported 38,654 tons. In that year the Neapolitan government was induced to grant a monopoly of the trade to a French company; but a firm remonstrance from the British government led to a discontinuance of this impolitic restriction in 1841, which, however, gave a great and lasting impetus to the British sulphur manufacture. In 1871, only 937,049 tons were imported into the United Kingdom.

Sultan, or ruler, a Turkish title, from the Arabic, given to the grand-signior or emperor of Turkey. It was first given to the Turkish princes, Angrolipez and Musgad, about 1055.—Vallier. It was first given, according to others, to the emperor Mahmoud, in the fourth century of the Hegira.

Sumatra, an island in the Indian ocean, called Java Minor by Marco Polo, and visited by Nicolo di Conti prior to 1449. Mainly on account of the pepper trade, the Dutch formed a settlement at Padang about 1649, and the British at Bencoolen about 1685. The Dutch possessions with Java were acquired by the British in 1811, but were restored in 1816. In 1824 the Dutch acquired all the British settlements in Sumatra, in exchange for Malacca and some possessions in India. Restrictions on their progress in Sumatra were removed by treaty Feb. 1872. Severe fighting between the Dutch and the Achinese natives with varying results, mostly in favor of the Dutch, April, 1873 to 1879. Dutch successful in war; peace announced, Aug. 1879.

Summary Jurisdiction Act, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, 11 Aug. 1879. It amends the law respecting the jurisdiction of magistrates in regard to fines, imprisonments, etc. It came into operation 1 Jan. 1880.

Sumptuary Laws restrain excess in dress, furniture, eating, etc. The laws of Lycurgus were severe against luxury, probably about 881 B.C. Those of Zaleucus ordained that no sober woman should go attended by more than one maid in the street, or wear gold or embroidered apparel, 450 B.C.—Diog. Laert. The Lex Orchia among the Romans (181 B.C.) limited the guests at feasts, and the number and quality of the dishes at an entertainment; and it also enforced that during supper, which was the chief meal among the Romans, the doors of every house should be left open. The English sumptuary laws, chiefly of the reigns of Edward III. and Henry VIII., were repealed in 1856; see Dress.

Sun.* Pythagoras taught that the sun was one of the twelve spheres, about 529 B.C. The relative distances of the sun and moon were first calculated geometrically by Aristarchus, who also maintained the stability of the sun, about 280 B.C. Numerous theories were ventured during fifteen centuries, and astronomy lay neglected till about A.D. 1200, when it was brought into Europe by the Moors of Barbary and Spain. The Copernican system was made known in 1530; see Copernican System and Solar System. Galileo and Newton maintained that the sun was an igneous globe. The transit of Mercury was observed by Cassendi. For recent discoveries, see Eclipses, Spectrum, and Venus.

By the observations of Dr. Halley on the spot which darkened the sun's disc in July and August, 1676, he established the certainty of its motion round its own axis.

* The estimated diameter is 840,000 miles, and the distance from the earth, till lately given as 95,000,000 miles, has been recently corrected to 94,000,000, by the result of the experiments and calculations of MM. Fizeau and Foucault (1864). "The error corrected corresponds to the apparent breadth of a human hair at 125 feet, or of a sovereign 8 miles off."—Herschel. Distance computed by sir G. B. Airy from results of the observation of transit of Venus (9 Dec. 1874), 93,321,000 miles. Oct. 1877; 92,600,000, June, 1878. The sun is now described as consisting of a solid or liquid nucleus, surrounded by a luminous envelope (photosphere), over which is a dense atmosphere, containing the vapors of various metals and other elements; see Spectrum.

Sunday was the day on which, anciently, divine adoration was paid to the sun. Among Christians, it is commonly called Dies Dominica , or Lord's day, on account of our Saviour's appearance on that day, after his resurrection. The first civil law that was issued for the observance of this day combined it with that of the seventh-day Sabbath and other festivals (Eusebius, "Life of Constantine"); and it was followed by several imperial edicts in favor of this day, which are extant in the body of Roman law, the earliest being that of Constantine the Great, dated 7 March, 321; see Sabbath , Sabbatarians ; Sports , Book of , etc. For SUNDAY LETTER, see Dominical Letter .

Sunday-schools. Cardinal Borromeo introduced Sunday instruction of children at Milan, about 1580; in the next century his example was followed in England by the rev. Joseph Alleine; by rev. David Blair, at Brechin, about 1760; by the rev. Theophilus Lindsey, at Catterick, Yorkshire, about 1763; and more especially organized by Robert Raikes, an eminent printer of Gloucester, conjointly with rev. Thomas Stock, 1780.

Superannuation Acts for the Civil Service were passed in April, 1859, and Aug. 1866.

Supper, see Lord's Supper.

Supremacy over the church was claimed by pope Gelasius I. as bishop of Rome, 494. On 15 Jan. 1535, Henry VIII., by virtue of the act 26 Hen. VIII. c. 1, formally assumed the style of "on earth supreme head of the church of England," which has been retained by all succeeding sovereigns. The bishop of Rochester (Fisher) and the ex-lord chancellor (sir Thomas More) and many others were beheaded for denying the king's supremacy in 1535; and in 1578, John Nelson, a priest, and Thomas Slerwood, a young layman, were executed at Tyburn for the same offence. The "act of Supremacy," repealed by 1 & 2 Phil. and Mary, c. 8 (1554), was re-enacted 1 Eliz. c. 1 (1559).

Supreme Court of Judicature was constituted by the Judicature act, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, passed 5 Aug. 1873, to come into operation 1 Nov. 1874. In 1874 this was deferred to 1 Nov. 1875.

The existing courts were to be united into one Supreme Court, divided into the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal. The High Court to consist of the lord chancellor, the two lord chief-justices, the vice-chancellors, and the other judges (hereafter the court to consist of 21 judges).

Five divisions: 1. Chancery; 2. Queen's Bench; 3. Common Pleas; 4. Exchequer; and 5. Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty; subject to alteration.

The Court of Appeal to consist of five ex-officio judges (viz., lord-chancellor, two lord chief-justices, lord chief baron, master of the rolls), and such others as may be appointed (§§ 20, 21, 22).

Appeals to the house of lords or the judicial committee of the privy council to be discontinued.

Law and equity to be concurrently administered; law terms abolished; and sittings in vacation provided for. (See under Terms.)

The act passed 11 Aug. 1875, suspended §§ 20, 21, and 55, converted the proposed Court of Appeal into an intermediate court till 1 Nov. 1876. (See below.)

The Supreme Court of Judicature (comprising the High Court of Justice, Chancery division, Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer subdivisions, Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty division) (all which see), began 2 Nov. 1873

After one term, it was said in the Times, "Its operation has tended to economize judicial power and to prevent delay of justice".....20 Nov. "

By the Appellate Jurisdiction act (1876), the house of lords retains its powers as a court of ultimate appeal; the court to consist of the lord-chancellor, two lords of appeal (to be created peers for life, with 6000*l.* salary), and any peers who are or have been lawyers. Act to come into operation.....1 Nov. 1876

The court may sit during prorogation of parliament. The statute relating to the judicial committee of the privy council and to the intermediate court of appeal is amended....."

By this act also the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer divisions of the Supreme Court are converted into fifteen courts of first instance, or primary courts.

Additional judge for Chancery division appointed.

Style of ordinary judges: of the Court of Appeal to be "lord justices of the Appeal;" other judges, "Justices of the High Court;" by act passed.....24 April, 1877

An Amendment act (42 & 43 Vict. c. 78), relating to offices, fees, etc., passed.....15 Aug. 1879

At a meeting of the judges, it was resolved to recommend the abolition of the Exchequer and Common Pleas, and their consolidation into one, termed the "Queen's Bench division," under the lord chief-justice of England, 30 Nov.; order in council.....16 Dec. 1880

Carried into effect; old divisions at an end; Judicature act carried out for the first time.....7 Mar'ch. 1881

Further changes made by a bill passing through the house of lords.....July. "

Supreme Court of Judicature for Ireland, constituted by act passed 14 Aug. 1877.

COURT OF APPEAL: ex-officio members, lord-chancellor, lord chief justice of Ireland, master of the rolls, lord chief justice of common pleas, and lord chief-baron of exchequer. Ordinary members, two lords-justices of appeal.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE: Chancery division, lord-chancellor, master of the rolls, vice-chancellor, and two land judges.

Queen's Bench division: lord chief justice and three judges.

Common Pleas division: lord chief justice and two judges.

Exchequer division: lord chief baron and two judges.

Probate and Matrimonial division: one judge.

(See under Chancery and the other divisions.)

Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States was organized in 1789. It now consists of the chief-justice and eight associate justices. The chief-justices since the establishment of the court have been seven in number, namely:

John Jay, of New York, appointed.....	1789
John Rutledge, of South Carolina.....	1795
Oliver Ellsworth, Connecticut.....	1796
John Marshall, Virginia.....	1801
Roger B. Taney, Maryland.....	1836
Salmon P. Chase, Ohio.....	1864
Morrison R. Waite, Ohio.....	1874

Of these chief-justices, two (Jay and Ellsworth) resigned without serving, and one (Rutledge) served one term, but was not confirmed by the senate. In effect, therefore, there have been but four chief-justices.

Surat (East Indies). Before the English East India Company obtained possession of Bombay, the presidency of their affairs on the coast of Malabar was at Surat; and they had a factory here established under captain Best in 1611. The Great Mogul had here an officer who was styled his admiral. An attack of the Mahratta chief Sivajee on the British factory was defeated by sir George Oxenden, 1664. The English were again attacked in 1670 and 1702, and often subsequently. The East India Company, in 1759, fitted out an armament, which dispossessed the admiral of the castle; and, soon after, the possession of this castle was confirmed to them by the court of Delhi. Surat was vested in the British in 1800 and 1803.

Surgeons. Barbers and surgeons were united in one company in 1540; but it was enacted that no "person using any shaving or barbery in London shall occupy any surgery, letting of blood, or other matter excepting only the drawing of teeth." In 1745 the surgeons and barbers of London were made distinct corporations. The college of surgeons obtained charters in 1745, 1800, and 1848 (when it was styled the "Royal College of Surgeons of England"), 1852, and 1859. Since that period, various legislative and other important regulations have been adopted to promote their utility and respectability; and no person is legally entitled to practise as a surgeon in the cities of London and Westminster, or within seven miles of the former, who has not been examined at this college. The college in Lincoln's-inn fields was remodelled in 1836, and the interior completed in 1837. The premises were enlarged in 1852-3. The museum began with the Hunterian collection, 1800, and the library was founded in 1801; see Medical Council.

Surgery. It was not until the age of Hippocrates that diseases were made a separate study from philosophy, etc., about 410 B.C. Hippocrates mentions the ambe, the ancient instrument with which they reduced dislocated bones. Celsus flourished about A.D. 17; Galen, 170; Aëtius, 500; Paulus Aegineta, in 640. The Arabians revived surgery about 900, and in the sixteenth century a new era in the science began; between these periods surgery was confined to ignorant priests and barbers. Anatomy was cultivated under Vesalius, the father of modern surgery, in 1538. Surgeons and doctors were exempted from bearing arms or serving on juries, 1513, at which period there were only thirteen in London; see Physic.

Surgical Aid Society, founded 1862; supplies the poor with instruments, water-beds, etc.

Surinam (Dutch Guinea), discovered by Columbus, 1498. The factories established by the English in 1640 were occupied by the Portuguese, 1643; by the Dutch, 1654; taken by the British, 1799, 1804; and restored to the Dutch, 1802, 1814.

Surnames were introduced into England by the Normans, and were adopted by the nobility about 1100. The old Normans used Fitz, which signifies son, as Fitzherbert. The Irish used O, for grandson, O'Neal, O'Donnell. The Scottish Highlanders used Mac, as Macdonald, son of Donald. The northern nations added the word son to the father's name, as Williamson. Many of the most common surnames, such as Johnson, Wilson, Dyson, Nicholson, etc., were taken by Brabanters and other Flemings, who were naturalized in the reign of Henry VI., 1435. M. A. Lower's "Dictionary of English Surnames" was published in 1860.

Surplices were first worn by the Jewish priests, and are said to have been first used in churches in the fourth century, and encouraged by pope Adrian, 786. "Every minister saying public prayers shall wear a comely surplice with sleeves," Canon 58. The garb prescribed by stat. 2 Edw. VI. 1547; again 1 Eliz. 1558; and 13 & 14 Chas. II. 1662; see Ritualism.

Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars road, was built for Calvinistic dissenters in 1783; the rev. Rowland Hill, their minister, who died in 1833, was buried in a vault here. The congregation, under the rev. Newman Hall, removed to Christ Church, in Westminster road, July, 1876; see Lincoln Tower.

Surrey Zoological Gardens (near London) were established in 1831 by Mr. Edward Cross, who brought hither the menagerie formerly at Exeter change.

Various picture models have been exhibited here since 1837—viz., Vesuvius, Iceland, etc., accompanied by fireworks. In 1866, a company which had taken the gardens erected a large yet elegant building for concerts; the architect being Mr. Horace Jones. On 19 Oct. 1866, when the hall contained about 9000 persons, attending to hear the rev. C. H. Spurgeon, seven were killed and thirty seriously injured by a false alarm of fire. It was burned 11 June, 1861; see Fires. In 1862 the hall was temporarily taken for the reception of the patients of St. Thomas's hospital.

Surtees Society for publishing MSS. relating to the northern counties, established 1864; 71 volumes have been published, 1881.

Survey Act, passed 12 May, 1870; see Ordnance Survey.

Surveyors, Institution of (London), founded in 1868, to promote the "knowledge which constitutes the profession of a surveyor." About 350 members in 1878.

Susa, or SHUSHAN, capital of Susiana, a province of Persia, was taken by Alexander the Great, 331 B.C.

Suspending Power, see Dispensing Power.

Suspension Bridges are ancient in China. The Hungerford (or Charing Cross) suspension bridge, opened 1 May, 1845, was removed to Clifton and opened there, 8 Dec. 1864. Parliament empowered the commissioners of woods to erect (among other improvements there) a suspension bridge at Battersea, Sept. 1846; and many bridges of similar construction have been erected in various parts of the kingdom. Lambeth and Westminster suspension bridge was opened 10 Nov. 1862; see Menai Strait, Hungerford, Clifton, etc. The first suspension bridge at Niagara Falls was built in 1848, and removed in 1854. A second, then the finest in the world, was opened 1855. The new suspension bridge at Niagara Falls, then the longest in the world, was opened in 1869. The suspension bridge from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Covington, Ky., was built in 1856. The longest and most remarkable work of this nature in the world is the bridge across the East river, connecting New York and Brooklyn. This work was begun about 1869, and is now, 1882, approaching completion. Its total length between anchorages, but not including approaches, is 8475 feet; it has a clear span over the river of 1695 feet.

Suspensory Bill, the name given to "a bill to prevent, for a limited time (to 1 Aug. 1869), new appointments in the church of Ireland; and to restrain, for the same period, in certain respects, the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland." This bill was introduced into the commons by Mr. Gladstone, 14 May, and passed through committee, 5 June; rejected by the lords (192 to 97), 30 June, 8 A.M., 1868.

Sutlej, a river in N.W. India, the ancient Hyphasis or Hypana, on the banks of which were fought the desperate battles of Aliwal, 28 Jan., and Sobraon, 10 Feb. 1846 (which see).

Suttee, the burning of widows. This custom began in India from one of the wives of "Brahma, the Son of God," sacrificing herself at his death, that she might attend him in heaven. Seventeen widows have burned themselves on the funeral pile of a rajah; and in Bengal alone, 700 have thus perished in a year. The English government, after long discouraging suttees, formally abolished them, Dec. 1829; but they have since occasionally taken place. The wife of the son of the rajah of Beygoon thus perished, June, 1864, and several wives of sir Jung Bahadur, minister of Nepal, 1 March, 1877.

Swabia, a province in S. Germany; was conquered by Clovis, and incorporated into the kingdom of the Franks, 496. After various changes of rulers, it was made a duchy by the emperor Conrad I., in 912, for Ezechanger; according to some, in 916, for Burckhardt. The duchy became hereditary in the house of Hohenstaufen in 1080. Duke Frederick III. became emperor of Germany as Frederick I. (usually styled Barbarossa, red beard), in 1152. Conradin, his descendant, was defeated at the battle of Tagliacozzo (which see), in 1268, and beheaded shortly after. The breaking-up of the duchy gave rise to many of the small German states; part of Swabia is included in Württemberg and Switzerland. Swabia was made a circle of the empire in 1387 and 1500. A league, composed of Swabian cities and states, about 1254, was the germ of the great Swabian league, formed for the preservation of the peace of Germany, under the auspices of the emperor Frederick, in 1488.

Swan River Settlement, see Western Australia.

Swat, or SVAR, a river in N.W. India. The Ahkond, Abdul Ghafur, originally an austere Mahometan fanatic, about 1822, gradually obtained temporal power over the tribes in the hills near Afghanistan, dying in high reputation about 1878.

Sweaborg, a strong fortress in Finland, the Gibraltar of the north, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Helsingfors; it is situated on seven rocky islands; the fortifications were commenced by the Swedes in 1748, and completed after Finland was united to Russia in 1809. On 6 Aug. 1855, the English and French fleet anchored off Sweaborg, and bombarded it by mortar and gun-boats from the 9th to the 11th, causing the destruction of nearly all the principal buildings, including the dockyard and arsenal. Few casualties and no loss of life ensued in the allied squadron, but this success was not followed up.

Swearing ON THE GOSPELS, first used about 528, and introduced in judicial proceedings about 600.—Rapin. PROFANE SWEARING made punishable by fine: a laborer or servant forfeiting 1s., others 2s., for the first offence; for the second offence, 4s.; the third offence, 6s.; 6 Will. III. 1695, see Oaths.

Sweating Sickness, see Plague.

Sweden (N. Europe). The ancient inhabitants were the Fins, now the modern inhabitants of Finland, who retired to their present territory on the appearance of the Scandinavians or Goths, who have ever since been masters of Sweden; see Scandinavia. The internal state of this kingdom is little known previous to the eleventh century. By the union of Calmar in 1397, Sweden became a province of Denmark, and was not wholly rescued from this subjection till 1521, when Gustavus Vasa recovered the kingdom from the Danish yoke. He became king in 1523, and his descendants ruled till 1809. The government of Sweden is a limited monarchy. The diet consists of four orders, the nobles, the clergy, the peasants, and the burghers, and meets every three years. The king is, as in Britain, the head of the executive. There are two universities, Upsal and Lund; and Sweden can boast among its great men Linnaeus, Celsius, Scheele, Bergman, Berzelius, Thorwaldsen, and Andersen. Population (31 Dec. 1880) of Sweden, 4,518,901; of Norway (1875), 1,806,900.

Swedenborgians, or New Jerusalem Church, are those who adopt the theological teachings of Emanuel Swedenborg (born at Stockholm, 29 Jan. 1688; died in London, 29 March, 1772).

He claimed to have had his spiritual sight opened, and to have been introduced into heaven and hell by the Lord that he might disclose their true nature and the science of correspondences by which the internal sense of Scripture, which is the Word as it exists in the heavens, may be known to men; thus he did in the Arcana Cœlestia and other works. His disciples first meet as an organized body in London in 1788.

There were 70 churches in Great Britain in 1879.

Their belief is that the sole deity is centred in Jesus Christ, in whom is a trinity of essentials; that salvation is effected by faith and works combined; that, as man's soul is a spiritual body, he will never resume the material body; that the Last Judgment was effected in the spiritual world during Swedenborg's lifetime; and that the Lord's Second Coming has taken place through the revelation of a new system of truth from the inner sense of Scripture.

The Swedenborg Society instituted, 1810.

The Missionary and Tract Society of the New Church, 1821.

Sweetbay, Lauris nobilis, was brought to these realms from Italy before 1548. Laurus indica, or Royal Bay, was brought from Madeira in 1665. The Sweetfern bush, Comptonia asplenifolia, came from America, 1714. Laurus aggregata, or the Glaucous Laurel, came from China in 1806.

Swimming. Leander is said to have swum across the Hellespont, between Sestos and Abydos, about one mile; and Lord Byron and lieutenant Ekenhead did the same, 3 May, 1810. On 24 Aug., 1872, Mr. Johnson, styled the "hero of London bridge," and swimming champion of the world, attempted to swim from Dover to Calais, but was prevented by cold. He was said to have swum seven miles in about sixty-five minutes.

Swing. Between 1830 and 1833 many haystacks and barns were fired in the rural districts of England, and attributed to an imaginary person named "Swing." Many persons were caught and punished. The probable cause was disputes between the farmers and their deluded laborers.

Swiss Guards, Royal, in France, formed in 1616; massacred while defending the Tuileries, 10 Oct. 1792; reorganized Sept. 1815; defeated during the insurrection, 28 July, 1830; dismissed by Charles X., Aug. 1830.

Swithin's Day, St., 15 July. St. Swithin lived in the ninth century; and, having been the preceptor to king Ethelwulf, was made bishop of Winchester in 852, and died 2 July, 862. The tradition states that it rained forty days in consequence of the proposed removal of his remains from the churchyard to the cathedral.

Switzerland, the ancient Helvetia, was conquered by the Romans, 15 B.C.; and was successively subject to the Burgundians, Germans, and Franks. The canton of Schweiz was peopled by the Cimbrians, who, leaving their original habitation in Scandinavia, invaded Italy, and were defeated by the Roman general Marius; and fled into Helvetia, about 100 B.C. This canton has given name to the whole confederacy.—The present national council is elected every third year, at the rate of one member for 2000 persons. The revised federal constitution was voted 19 April, 1874.—Population, Dec. 1860, 2,507,170; 1870, 2,669,147; 1879 (July), 2,808,493.

Syllabus of Errors in modern times. 80 paragraphs divided into 10 chapters, issued by pope Pius IX., with an encyclical letter, 8 Dec. 1864. It condemned heresy, modern philosophy, and liberalism in politics; was forbidden to be read in French churches, and was generally opposed, but was adopted by the council at Rome, 1870.

Sympiesometer, a species of barometer invented by Adie of Edinburgh in 1819.

Synagogue (literally an assembly), a congregation of the Jews, and the place where such assembly is held for religious purposes. When these meetings were first held is uncertain; some refer them to the times after the Babylonish captivity. In Jerusalem were 480 synagogues. In 1851 there were in London 10 synagogues; in England and Wales, 53. A magnificent synagogue was consecrated at Berlin, 5 Sept. 1866; see Jews.

Synod. The first general synods were called by emperors, and afterwards by Christian princes; but the pope ultimately usurped this power, one of his legates usually presiding; see Councils. The first national synod held in England was at Hertford, 673; the last was held by cardinal Pole in 1555. Made unlawful to hold synods but by royal authority, 25 Henry VIII 1533; see Dort and Thurles.

Synonym, a word having the same or nearly the same meaning as another; as valor, courage. Books of Greek and Latin synonyms were early compiled. G. Crabbe's dictionary appeared, 1816; Dr. P. M. Roget's excellent "Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases," 1852.

Tabernacle, the Holy Place of the Israelites, till the erection of Solomon's temple, was constructed by Divine direction, 1491 B.C. The tabernacle set up at Shiloh by Joshua 1414 B.C. was replaced by the temple erected by Solomon, 1004 B.C. The chapel erected for George Whitefield in Moorfields in 1741, being of a temporary nature, received the name of Tabernacle, which was afterwards given to their chapels by the Calvinistic Methodists. Whitefield's Tabernacle in Tottenham-court road was erected in 1756, and enlarged in 1760. His lease expired in 1828; and the chapel was opened by the Independents in 1830. A large metropolitan tabernacle, erected for the ministrations of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, a Baptist, near the "Elephant and Castle," Kennington road, Surrey, was opened on 31 March, 1861.

Taffety, an early species of silken manufacture, more prized formerly than now, woven very smooth and glossy. It was worn by our elder queens, and was first made in England by John Tyce, of Shoreditch, London, 41 Eliz. 1598. Stow's Chron.

Tagliacozzo, in the Abruzzi mountains, S. Italy, where, on 23 Aug. 1268, Charles of Anjou, the usurping king of Naples, defeated and made prisoner the rightful monarch, young Conradin (the last of the Hohenstaufens, and grandson of the emperor Frederick II.), who had been invited into Italy by the Ghibelline or imperial party; their opponents, the Guelfs, or papal party, supporting Charles. Conradin was beheaded, 29 Oct. following.

Tagliamento, a river in Lombardy, N. Italy, near which the Austrians, under the archduke Charles, were defeated by Bonaparte, 16 March, 1797.

Taherites, a dynasty of Persia, 813-872.

Tahiti. The French abbreviated name for Otaheite; see Otaheite.

Taillebourg (W. France). Near here Henry III. of England was defeated and nearly captured by Louis IX. of France, 20 July, 1242.

Taku Forts, China, taken by the allies, 21 Aug. 1860.

Talavera de la Reyna (central Spain), was taken from the Mahometans by Ordofio, king of Leon, 913. Here a battle was fought, 27, 28 July, 1809, between the united British and Spanish armies under sir Arthur Wellesley, and the French army commanded by marshals Victor and Sebastiani. After a conflict on the 27th, both armies remained on the field during the night, and the French at break of day renewed the attack, and were again repulsed by the British with great slaughter. At noon Victor charged the whole British line, was repulsed at all points, and retreated with a heavy loss. As Soult, Ney, and Mortier were in the rear, the British retired after the victory.

Talladega, BATTLE AT, near the Coosa river, in Alabama, between more than 2000 Americans, under gen. Jackson, and 1000 Creek Indians, on 9 Nov. 1813. The Indians left 290 dead on the field, and it was supposed they had as many more wounded. The Americans lost 15 killed and 86 wounded.

Tallusahatchee, BATTLE AT, near the Coosa river, between the Creek Indians and 900 mounted men, under gen. Coffee, on 3 Nov. 1813. The Indians lost 200 killed and 84 prisoners. The Americans lost 5 killed and 41 wounded.

Tally Office in the Exchequer took its name from the French word tallier, to cut. A tally is a piece of wood written upon both sides, containing an acquittance for money received; which, being cloven asunder by an officer of the exchequer, one part, called the stock, was delivered to the person who paid, or lent, money to the government; and the other part, called the counter-stock, or counter-foil, remained in the office, to be kept till called for, and joined with the stock. This manner of striking tallies is very ancient.—Beaumont. The practice was ordered to be discontinued in 1782; see Exchequer. On 16 Oct. 1831, the houses of parliament were burned down by too many of these tallies being used in heating the stoves in the house of lords.

Talmud (from lamad, to teach), the compendium of ancient Jewish oral or unwritten law, as distinguished from the Pentateuch, or written law; its origin is coeval with the return from the Babylonian captivity, 586 B.C. Its compilation in Hebrew was begun by the Scribes, and by their successors the work was carried on till 220 B.C. It is composed in prose and poetry, and contains two elements, legal and legendary. The morality resembles that of the New Testament, and the philosophy is rather Platonic than Aristotelian.

The Mishna, comprising the work of the rabbis, termed Tannaim, was compiled by Jehuda Hanassi, in the middle of the second century A.D., and forms the Jerusalem Talmud, written at Tiberias, in Palestine, about 230. The Babylonian Talmud contains also the Gemara or Ghemara, the work of the rabbis termed Amoraim, criticisms and comments on the Mishna. The part named Halacha is dogmatic, legal, and doctrinal; the Agaba is illustrative, narrative, and legendary.

After being almost universally condemned, and the MSS. often burned, the defence of the Talmud was undertaken by the German reformer Reuchlin, in the sixteenth century, and between 1820 and 1823 the "Talmud Babylonicum," in 12 vols. fol., and the "Talmud Hierosolitanum," in one vol. fol., were printed at Venice. A discourse on the Talmud was given at the Royal Institution, 15 May, 1868, by Mr. Emanuel Deutsch, whose article in the Quarterly Review, Oct. 1867, had attracted much attention.

Tammany Frauds, see New York, 1871.

Tammany Society. There was a great chief of the Delaware Indians in Pennsylvania named Tammany, who was buried not far from Doylestown in that state. He is represented as the possessor of many virtues, and politicians, at about the close of the Revolution, called him St. Tammany, and chose him as the patron saint of the new republic. Tammany societies were formed and Tammany halls were erected by Republicans, and on 1 May, the instituted festival of the saint, meetings of the societies were held. "On that day," says Heckerwelder, the Indian missionary, "numerous societies of his votaries walked together in procession through the streets of Philadelphia, their hats decorated with bucks' tails, and proceeded to a handsome rural place out of town, which they called the wigwam, where, after a long talk or Indian speech had been delivered, and the calumet of peace and friendship had been duly smoked, they spent the day in festivity and mirth." The Tammany Society of New York is yet in existence, but has become a purely partisan organization for political purposes. It was through this organization that the Tweed "ring" secured control of the municipal government of New York.

Tanagra (Boeotia). Here the Spartans defeated the Athenians 457 B.C., but were defeated by them in 456 and 426, when Agis II. headed the Spartans and Nicias the Athenians.

Tancred's Charities. Valuable exhibitions for students at Cambridge are maintained by Christopher Tancred's endowment, 1721; established by chancery, 1757.

Tandy Arrest. James Napper Tandy proposed a plan of reform in 1791. In the French expedition against Ireland he acted as a general, Aug. 1798. After its failure he fled to Hamburg and was there delivered up to the English, 24 Nov.; for which Bonaparte declared war upon Hamburg, 15 Oct. 1799. Tandy was liberated after the peace of Amiens in 1802.

Tangier (Morocco, N. W. Africa), besieged by prince Ferdinand of Portugal, who was beaten and taken prisoner, 1437. It was conquered by Alfonso V. of Portugal in 1471, and given as a dowry to princess Catherine, on her marriage with Charles II. of England, 1662; who in 1683 caused the works to be blown up, and the place abandoned. Tangiers afterwards became a piratical station.

Tanistry (in Ireland), the equal division of lands, after the decease of the owner, among his sons, legiti-mate or illegitimate. If one of the sons died, his son did not inherit, but a new division was made by the tanist or chief. Abolished 1604.—Davies.

Tanjore (W. India). About 1678, Vencajee, a Mah-ratta chief, brother of the great Sevajee, made himself rajah. In 1749 a British expedition endeavored to restore a deposed rajah without success; the reigning prince bought them off by the cession of territories. Much intervention ensued. In 1799 the company obtained possession of the country, engaging to support the rajah with nominal authority. The last is said to have died in 1855.

Tannenberg (E. Prussia). Here Ladislaus V. Jagellon of Poland defeated the Teutonic knights with great slaughter, the grand-master being among the slain, 15 July, 1410. The order never recovered from this calamity.

Tanning leather with the bark of trees was early practised. Tan was introduced into Great Britain from Holland by William III. for raising orange-trees about 1689. It was discontinued until about 1719, when bananas were first brought into England. Great improvements have been recently made in tanning by means of chemical knowledge.

Tantalum, a rare metal, discovered in an American mineral by Hatchett, in 1801, and named by him columbium; and in a Swedish mineral by Ekeberg, who gave it its present name. Wollaston pointed out the identity of the two metals in 1809; and Berzelius prepared pure metallic tantalum in 1824. In 1846 Rose discovered that tantalum was really a mixture of three metals, which he named tantalum, niobium, and pelopium.—Gmelin.

Tapestry. An art of weaving borrowed from the Saracens, and hence its original workers in France were called Sarazinois. The invention of tapestry hangings belongs [the date is not mentioned] to the Netherlands.—Guicciardini. Manufactured in France under Henry IV. by artists invited from Flanders, 1606. The art was brought into England by William Sheldon; and the first manufactory of it was established at Mortlake by sir Francis Crane, 17 James I. 1619.—Salmon. Under Louis XIV. the art of tapestry was much improved in France; see Gobelin Tapestry. Very early instances of making tapestry are mentioned by the ancient poets, and also in Scripture; so that the Saracens' manufacture is a revival of the art. For the tapestry said to have been wrought by Matilda, queen of England, see Bayeux Tapestry.

Tapestry manufactory established at Windsor by Mr. Henry, supported by the royal family, and others; exhibition opened in the town-hall, 6 Dec. 1878.

Tar. The chemist Becher first proposed to make tar from pit-coal—the earl of Dundonald's patent, 1781. The mineral tar was discovered at Colebrookdale, Shropshire, 1779; and in Scotland, Oct. 1792. Tar-water was first recommended for its medicinal virtues by the good Dr. Berkeley, bishop of Cloyne, about 1744. From benzole, discovered in coal-tar, many brilliant dyes are now produced: see Aniline.

Tara, a hill in Meath, Ireland, where the early kings of Ireland were inaugurated. Near here, on 26 May, 1798, the royalist troops, 400 strong, defeated the insurgent Irish (4000 men), 500 killed. On 15 Aug. 1843, Daniel O'Connell held a monster meeting here (250,000 persons said to have been assembled).

Tarantism, see Dancing.

Tarbes (S. France, near the Pyrenees), capital of Bigorre, the property of the English kings in the middle ages. The French, under Soult, were forced from their position at Tarbes, with considerable loss, by the British army commanded by Wellington, 20 March, 1814; see Toulouse.

Tarentum (now Taranto, S. Italy), was founded by the Greek Phalantus, B.C. 708. The people of Tarentum, assisted by Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, supported a war which had been undertaken B.C. 281 by the Romans to avenge the insults the Tarentines had offered to their ships when near their harbors; it was terminated after ten years: 300,000 prisoners were taken, and Tarentum became subject to Rome. Except the citadel, Tarentum was captured by the Carthaginians, 212, but recovered by Fabius, 209 B.C. Tarentum has shared in the revolutions of southern Italy, and only ruins remain.

Targums, or EXPLANATIONS, names given to certain ancient Chaldee paraphrases of the Old Testament. The most remarkable are those of Onkelos, Jonathan-ben-Uzzel, and Joseph the Blind. The Targum of Onkelos is referred by some writers to the first century A.D.

Tarifa (S. Spain), the ancient Joza and Julia Traducta, where Muza landed when invading Spain, 712. It was taken from the Moors by Sancho IV. of Castile, 1291 or 1292; and was relieved, when besieged by them, after a great victory over the kings of Morocco and Granada, by Alfonso XI. of Castile and Alfonso IV. of Portugal, 28 or 30 Oct. 1340. The conflict is called the battle of Salado, having been fought on the banks of that river. Tarifa was taken by the French in 1823.

Tariff (said to have been derived from Tarifa, where duties were formerly collected), a book of duties charged on goods exported or imported. Our tariff in 1840 comprised 1042 articles; the number was reduced (by Sir Robert Peel) in 1845 and 1847. It comprised 439 articles in 1857; this number was greatly reduced in 1860.—National taxation in the United States has always been levied chiefly in the form of tariff duties on imports. In 1821 the average rate of duty charged on dutiable goods was 35.6 per cent. In 1840 it was 48.8 per cent. on the value of dutiable goods, and 40 per cent. of the value of all goods imported. The laws were frequently changed in succeeding years, the changes generally tending towards lower duties, until in 1861 the average rate on dutiable goods was 18.14 per cent., being 11.79 per cent. of the value of all imports. The Morrill tariff, passed 2 March, 1861, founded on the principle of protection to domestic manufactures, raised the average rate on dutiable goods to 35.90 per cent., being 23.84 per cent. on all imports. The percentages at various times since then have been as follows: 1868, 48.05 and 44.25; 1870, 46.37 and 41.71; 1875, 41.38 and 28.73; 1879, 45.28 and 29.44.

Tarpeian Rock (Rome) owed its name to the tradition that Tarpeia, daughter of the keeper of the Roman citadel, was here crushed to death by the shields cast on her by the Sabines, whom she treacherously admitted, having bargained for the gift of what they wore on their left arms, meaning their bracelets, about 750 B.C.

Tarragona (N.E. Spain), occupied as a naval station by the British before their capture of Gibraltar in 1704. It was stormed and sacked by the French under Suchet, 29 Jan. 1811, and the inhabitants put to the sword.

Tartan, or HIGHLAND PLAID, the dress of the Scottish Highlanders, said to have been derived from the ancient Gauls, or Celts, the Galli non Braccati.

Tartaric Acid is said to have been the first discovery of the eminent chemist Scheele, who procured it in a separate state by boiling tar with lime, and in decomposing the tartrate of lime thus formed by means of sulphuric acid, about 1770. In 1859, baron Liebig formed tartaric acid from other sources.

Tartary (Asia). The Tatars, or Tartars, or Mongols, or Moguls, were known in antiquity as Scythians. During the decline of the Roman empire, these tribes began to seek more fertile regions; and the first who reached the frontier of Italy were the Huns, the ancestors of the modern Mongols. The first acknowledged sovereign of this vast country was the famous Genghis Khan. His empire, by the conquest of China, Persia, and all Central Asia (206-27), became one of the most formidable ever established; but it was split into parts in a few reigns. Timur, or Tamerlane, again conquered Persia, broke the power of the Turks in Asia Minor (1370-1400), and founded the Mogul dynasty in India, which began with Baber in 1525, and formed the most splendid court in Asia till the close of the eighteenth century; see Golden Horde. The Calmucks, a branch of the Tartars, expelled from China, settled on the banks of the Volga in 1672, but returned in 1771, and thousands perished on the journey.

Tasimeter, see Micro-tasimeter.

Tasmania, the name now given to the British settlement in Van Diemen's Land (which see).

Tattersall's, see Races.

Taunton (Somerset), was taken by Perkin Warbeck, Sept. 1497; and here he was surrendered to Henry VII. 5 Oct. following. The duke of Monmouth was proclaimed king at Taunton, 20 June, 1685; and it was the scene of the "bloody assize" held by Jeffreys upon the rebels in August.

Taverns may be traced to the thirteenth century. "In the reign of king Edward the Third, only three taverns were allowed in London: one in Chepe, one in Walbrook, and the other in Lombard street."—Spelman. The Bour's Head, in Eastcheap, existed in the reign of Henry IV., and was the rendezvous of prince Henry and his dissolute companions. Shakespeare mentions it as the residence of Mrs. Quickly, and the scene of Falstaff's merriment.—Shakespeare, "Henry IV." The White Hart, Bishopsgate, established in 1180, was rebuilt in 1829. Taverns were licensed in 1752.

Taverns were restricted by 7 Edward VI., 1552-3, to 40 in London, 8 in York, 4 in Norwich, 3 in Westminster, 6 in Bristol, 3 in Lincoln, 4 in Hull, 3 in Shrewsbury, 4 in Exeter, 3 in Salisbury, 4 in Gloucester, 4 in Chester, 3 in Hereford, 3 in Worcester, 3 in Southampton, 4 in Canterbury, 3 in Ipswich, 3 in Winchester, 3 in Oxford, 4 in Cambridge, 3 in Colchester, 4 in Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Taxes were levied by Solon, the first Athenian legislator, 540 B.C. The first class of citizens paid an Attic talent of silver, about 55*l*. of English money. Darius, the son of Hystaspes, levied a land-tax by assessment, which was deemed so odious that his subjects styled him, by way of derision, Darius the Trader, 480 B.C.—D'Eon. Taxes in specie were first introduced into England by William I., 1067, and he raised them arbitrarily; yet subsidies in kind, as in wool, leather, and other products of the country, continued till the accession of Richard II., 1377.—Candler. See Revenue and Income-tax. "TAXES ON KNOWLEDGE" (see Advertisement Duty, Newspaper Stamp, and Paper Duty). For his exertions in repealing these, a testimonial was presented to Mr. T. Milner Gibson in 1861. The assessed taxes now include land tax, house duty, and property and income tax. The Taxes Management act, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 19, passed 6 Aug. 1880 (see below).

Tchernaya, a river in the Crimea. On 16 Aug. 1855, the lines of the allied army at this place were attacked by 50,000 Russians under prince Gortschakoff, who were repulsed with the loss of 3329 slain, 1658 wounded, and 600 prisoners. The brunt of the attack was borne by two French regiments under gen. D'Herbillion. The loss of the allies was about 1200; 200 of these were from the Sardinian contingent, which behaved with great gallantry, under the command of gen. La Marmora. The Russian general Read and the Sardinian general Montecaccio were killed. The object of the attack was the relief of Sebastopol, then closely besieged by the English and French.

Tea was brought to Europe by the Dutch, 1610. It is mentioned as having been used in England on very rare occasions prior to 1657, and sold for 6*l*., and even 10*l*., the pound. Price of inferior kinds, 1801, 4*s*. 2*d*. the pound; in 1871, 1*s*. 10*d*. For Théine, see Cufeine.

Teachers, NATIONAL UNION OF ELEMENTARY (about 20,000 certificated and 30,000 pupil teachers), held their fourth annual conference, April, 1874. The Teachers' Association held their third annual conference at University College, London, 9 Jan. 1878.

"Tearless Victory," was won by Archidamus III., king of Sparta, over the Arcadians and Argives, without losing a man, 367 B.C.

Tea-room Meeting of members of the house of commons, 8 April, 1867; see Reform, 1867.

Technical Education, see Education. The first real practical technical school was formed in the Chester Diocesan Training College, by the rev. Arthur Rigg, principal, 1839-69.

Central Institution of City and Guilds Institute, South Kensington; foundation laid by the prince of Wales, 18 July, 1861

Te Deum, a song of praise used by the Romish and English churches, beginning "Te Deum Laudamus"—"We praise thee, O God"—supposed to be the composition of Augustin and Ambrose, about 390.

Teetotaler, a term applied to an abstainer from all fermented liquors, originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting, about Sept. 1833, asserted "that nothing but te-te-total will do." The word was immediately adopted. He died 27 Oct. 1846. These facts are taken from the Stamuch Teetotaler, edited by Joseph Livesey, of Preston (an originator of the movement in August, 1832), Jan. 1867; see Encratites, Good Templars, Temperance, and United Kingdom.

Tefia, see Tifia.

Tegyra (Bœotia). Here Pelopidas defeated the Spartans, 375 B.C.

Teheran became capital of Persia about 1795.

Telegraphs (from the Greek, τῆλη, afar, and γράφω, I write). Æschylus, in his Agamemnon (B.C. 500), describes the communication of intelligence by burning torches as signals. Polybius, the Greek historian (who died about 122 B.C.), calls the different instruments used by the ancients for communicating information, pyrrice, because the signals were always made by fire. In 1663, a plan was suggested by the marquess of Worcester, and a telegraph was suggested by Dr. Hooke, 1684. M. Amontons is also said to have been the inventor of telegraphs about this period. James II., while duke of York, originated a set of navy signals, which were systematized by Kempenfeldt in 1780; and a dictionary was compiled by sir Home Popham. M. Chappe then invented the telegraph first used by the French in 1792, and two were erected over the Admiralty Office, London, 1796. The semaphore was erected there, 1816. The naval signals by telegraph enabled 400 previously concerted sentences to be transmitted from ship to ship, by varying the combinations of two revolving crosses. Acts relating to telegraphs were passed in 1863 and 1866. The Telegraph act, passed 31 July, 1868, enabled the postmaster-general to purchase existing electric telegraphs. Mr. Scudamore was appointed director, Jan. 1872. The Society of Telegraph Engineers held first general meeting, 28 Feb. 1872; Chas. Wm. Siemens, president; see Electric Telegraph under Electricity, and Telegraphs under Post-office. The Telegraphic Journal began 15 Nov. 1878.

Telekounphonon, or speaking-telegraph, consisted of piping of gutta-percha, caoutchouc, glass, or earthenware, with a terminal mouthpiece of ivory, bone, wood, or metal. It was used for dockyards and large establishments. It was described by Mr. Francis Whishaw at the meeting of the British Association at Swansea, August, 1848. Now extensively used and generally of tin, as speaking-tubes.

Telephone (from Greek τῆλη, afar, and φωνή, voice, sound), a name now given to apparatus for transmitting articulate and musical sounds by means of wire, vibrating rods, threads, or magneto-electricity; see Electrophone, in articles Electricity, Phonograph, Microphone.

Robert Hook conveyed sounds to a distance by distended wire 1067
Wheatstone conveyed the sounds of a musical box from a cellar to upper rooms by means of a deal rod (termed "Enchanted Lyre") 1821
Paga produced galvanic musical tones by magnetizing and demagnetizing an iron bar 1837
The principle advanced by De la Rive 1843
Prof. Pepper lectured on Wheatstone's telephone before the queen at the Polytechnic 10 May, 1855
Phillip Reis exhibited a partially articulate electric telephone at Frankfurt 25 April, 1861
Elisha Gray improved Reis's telephone, and is said to have anticipated prof. Bell's discovery 1873
Cromwell Varley produced a musical one, 1870; played on at the Queen's theatre, Long Acre 12 Feb. 1877
Prof. A. Graham Bell's articulating telephone produced (he employs a thin disk of iron vibrating in front of a permanent magnet, surrounded by a coil of insulated copper wire; the sound or voice causes the vibration of the disk, thereby generating a current of electricity, which, sent round a similar coil on a distant magnet, sets vibrating another disk, and thus the sound is reproduced; sound is converted into electricity and electricity reconverted into sound); experiments at Boston and Salem, United States (18 miles apart); speech, music, singing, laughing, etc., distinctly heard 12 Feb. 1878
This telephone exhibited by Mr. W. H. Preece before the British Association, Plymouth, 23 Aug. 1877; before the queen at Osborne, Isle of Wight 14, 15 Jan. 1878
Debates in the house of commons reported by it for Daily News (unsuccessful) 22 Jan. 1878
Telephone company established summer
Edison's carbon "loud speaking" telephone; conversation heard between London and Norwich, 115 miles of wire 11 Nov. 1879
Mr. Frederick Allen Gower improves Bell's telephone; shown at Royal Institution, London 20, 21 March, 1879
Telephone Exchange (Edison's system), Lombard street; ten offices connected; private conversation between two persons in either a loud or low tone carried on; successfully tried 6 Sept. 1880
The Bell and Edison companies become the United Telephone Company; announced 26 July, 1880
The telephone tried by lord Elphinstone in his collieries near Carlberry, Scotland Sept. 1880
Telephone communication established between Liverpool and Manchester; exchange of messages between the mayors 9 Nov. 1880
20,000 Gower-Bell telephones said to have been ordered by the post office Dec. 1880
The attorney-general applies for injunction against the Telephone company and the Edison telephone company; case deferred; the companies directed to keep accounts, 20 Jan. 1880; decision that the Telephone company is an infraction of the electric telegraph monopoly bought by the act of 1868, 20 Dec. 1880; legal arrangements with the company 11 April, 1881
The postmaster-general now grants licenses "

Telephotography, a process for transmitting to a distance images of objects by the agency of electricity and selenium, was invented by Mr. Shelford Bidwell early in 1881.

Telescopes. Their principle was described by Roger Bacon about 1250, and Leonard Digges (who died about 1573) is said to have arranged glasses so that he could see very distant objects.

Telescopes constructed by John Lippershey and Zacharias Jansen, spectacle makers of Middleburg, and James Metius of Alkmaar 1608
Galileo (from a description of the above constructed telescopes (May, 1609) gradually increasing in power till he discovered Jupiter's satellites, etc. Jan. 1610
The telescope explained by Kepler 1611
Huyghens greatly improved the telescope; discovered the ring and satellites of Saturn, etc. 1655-6
Telescopes improved by Gregory about 1663
Reflecting telescope invented by Newton 1668
Achromatic telescopes made by Chester More Hall about 1721; re-invented by John Dollond 1758
Sir William Herschel originally an organist at Bath; greatly improves telescopes, and discovers the planet Trans joveh (see), 21 March, 1781, and a volcano mountain in the moon in 1783; he completes his forty-feet focal length telescope in 1789, and he discovers two other volcanic mountains; he lays before the Royal Society a catalogue of 5000 nebulae and clusters of stars 1802

A telescope made in London for the observatory of Madrid which cost 11,000*l.* in "
Telescopes improved by Guinand and Fraunhofer 1805-14
The great telescope taken down, and one of twenty-feet focal length erected by sir John Herschel (who afterwards took it to the Cape of Good Hope, and made with it his observations) 1822
The earl of Rosse erected at Parsonstown, in Ireland, a telescope (at a cost exceeding 20,000*l.*) 6 feet in diameter and 54 feet in length; it is moved with ease 1828-43
Mr. Lassell constructed a telescope by which he discovered the satellite of Neptune, 1846; and the eight satellites of Saturn 1848
One of gigantic size, 85 feet in length (very imperfect), completed at Wandsworth by the rev. John Craig 1852
Magnificent equatorial telescopes set up at the national observatories at Greenwich and Paris 1860
M. Foucault exhibits at Paris a reflecting telescope, the mirror 31½ inches in diameter; the focal length 17½ feet, 1862
Mr. Newall's telescope (with object-glass 25 inches diameter; tube nearly 30 feet) set up at Gateshead by Cookes of York 1870
One at United States Observatory, Washington; object-glass 26 inches diameter, 33 feet length "
Mr. A. Ainslie Common's reflecting telescope: speculum 37½ inches diameter; length, 20 feet; said to be the most powerful in existence; Ealing, Middlesex; completed Sept. 1879
The largest refracting telescope yet made, by Howard Grubb (at Dublin (for Vienna); approved by the commissioners 16 March, 1881

Tell, William. The popular stories respecting him were demonstrated to be mythical by prof. Kopp of Lucerne, 1872.

Tellers, see under Eschequer.

Tellurium, a rare metal, in its natural state containing small quantities of iron and gold, was discovered by Muller of Reichenstein in 1782, and named by Klaproth.

Telodynamic Transmitter, invented by M. Hirn, is an arrangement of water-wheels, endless wires, and pulleys for conveying and using the power of waterfalls at a distance, and has been much used since 1850. The apparatus was shown at Paris in 1862.

Temeswar (Hungary), capital of the Banat, often besieged by the Turks. On 10 Aug. 1849, Haynau totally defeated the Hungarians besieging this town, and virtually ended the war.

Temnograph, an instrument designed to plot to any accurate scale a section of the ground over which it travels. It works by frictional motion governed by two pendulous weights. Invented by A. M. Rymer-Jones in 1879.

Temperance Societies originated with Mr. Calhoun, who, while he was secretary of war in America, in order to counteract the habitual use of ardent spirits among the people, prohibited them altogether in the United States army, 1818; see Teetotaler and Permissive Bill.

The first public temperance society in America was projected in 1825, and formed 13 Feb. 1826
Many temperance societies immediately afterwards formed in America, England, and Scotland "
British and Foreign Temperance Society formed, 29 June, 1831
The "Rehabites" (see Jer. xxxv.) began about 1838
In Ireland the rev. Dr. Edgar of Belfast published upon temperance in 1829-31; and Father Mathew, a Roman Catholic clergyman, affirmed that he had made more than a million of converts to temperance 1841
In England the National Temperance Society formed 1843
London Temperance League 1861
The United Kingdom Alliance for the legislative suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors 1 June, 1863
Mr. J. B. Gough lectures in London, etc. 1863
Father Mathew arrived in America in July, 1840; was not so successful there; he died, aged 61, 6 Dec. 1866
The National Union for suppression of intemperance by means of "few houses, shorter hours, and better provisions" established end of 1871
Church of England Temperance Society inaugurated by the archbishop of Canterbury and others at Lambeth 18 Feb. 1873
A temperance hospital, where no alcoholic drinks are to be given for disease, was opened 6 Oct. "
British Women's Temperance Association inaugurated at Newcastle on Tyne April, 1876
Mr. J. B. Gough lectures in London Sept. 1878; Oct. 1879

London Temperance Hospital, Hampstead road, London, building (21,000 out of 30,000 subscribed)..... Sept. 1879

Templars. The military order of "Soldiers of the Temple," to protect pilgrims, was founded about 1118 by Baldwin II., king of Jerusalem; confirmed by pope Honorius II., 1128. The Templars were numerous in several countries, and came to England before 1185. Their wealth having excited the cupidity of the French kings, the order was suppressed by the council of Vienne, and part of its revenues was bestowed upon other orders about 1312. Numbers of the order were tried, condemned, and burned alive, or hanged, in 1308-10, and it suffered much persecution throughout Europe: 68 knights were burned at Paris, 1310. Pope Clement V. abolished the order, April, 1312. The grand-master Molay was burned alive at Paris, 18 March, 1314. Their property in England was given to the Hospitallers, and the head of the order in England died in the Tower; see Good Templars.

Temple (London), the dwelling of the Knights Templars, 1185, at the suppression of the order was purchased by the professors of the common law and converted into inns, 1311, afterwards called the Inner and Middle Temple. Essex house, also a part of the house of the Templars, was called the Outer Temple, because it was situated without Temple bar.

The Temple hall was built in 1873
St. Mary's, or the Temple church situated in the Inner Temple is a Gothic stone building, erected by the Templars in 1240, and is remarkable for its circular vestibule, and for the tombs of the crusaders who were buried there. The church was refaced with stone by Mr. Smirke in 1878

The new Middle Temple library was opened by the prince of Wales 31 Oct. 1861
New Inner Temple hall opened by princess Louise, 14 May, 1870

Temple bar, erected outside the gates; ordered to be rebuilt 27 June, 1669; erected by Sir C. Wren, completed March 1672-3, cost 13977 10s., room above contained books of Ch. I. & C. for 200 years, reported dangerous, Man h., began to sink 30 July, shored up 1868
Its removal voted by the common council, 27 Sept. 1878; the removal began 2 Jan. 1878, last stones removed, 14 June 1879 (set up in Epping Forest).

The memorial to mark the site (including statues of the queen and prince of Wales), cost about 11,500l., inaugurated by prince Leopold 8 Nov. 1880

Temples originated in the sepulchres built for the dead.—Eusebius. The Egyptians were the first who erected temples to the gods.—Herodotus. The first erected in Greece is ascribed to Deucalion.—Apollonius.

The temple of Jerusalem built by Solomon, 1012 a.c., consecrated 1004, pillaged by Shishak 971, repaired by Joash, 850, profaned by Ahaz, 740 restored by Hezekiah, 726 pillaged and fired by Nebuchadnezzar, 588, 587, rebuilt, 536 pillaged by Antiochus, 170, rebuilt by Herod, 18; destroyed by Titus, a.d. 70.

The temple of Apollo, at Delphi, first a cottage with boughs, built of stone by Trophonius about 1200 a.c., burned by the Persians 494, a new temple raised by the family of the Alcmaeonides about 514.

Temple of Diana at Ephesus, built seven times, planned by Cleophon 544 a.c., fired by Erastostatus or Herostatus to perpetuate his name 356 a.c.; to rebuild it employed 220 years, destroyed by the Goths, a.d. 269.

The temple of Procy was built by Archelaus on the spot where once a woman had fed with her milk her aged father, whom the senate had imprisoned and excluded from all ailments.—Lat. Max.

Temple of Thebes, built 480 a.c. is at this day the most perfect ancient edifice in the world.

Most of the heathen temples were destroyed throughout the Roman empire by Constantine the Great, 331.

Temple at Paris, formerly an asylum for debtors, and a prison during the republic was made the site of a market in 1809 and rebuilt in 1864.

The City Temple a dissenters chapel (minister Dr Parker), near Holborn Viaduct, was opened 19 May, 1874.

into parliament by Mr. Sharman Crawford, 1835; Sir Joseph Napier, 1852; Mr. Cardwell, 1860; Mr. Chichester Fortescue, 1866; Lord Nass, 1867. The Irish Land bill settling the question passed 8 July, 1870; see Ulster.

Tenasserim (N.E. India), ceded by Burmah to the British, 24 Feb. 1826.

Teneriffe (Canaria, N.W. coast of Africa). The peak of Teneriffe, 15,396 feet above the level of the sea, was ascended in 1856 by Prof. C. Piazzi Smyth for astronomical observations. An earthquake in this island destroyed several towns and many thousands of people in 1704; see Santa Cruz.

Tennessee, a southern state of North America, was settled about 1700, and admitted into the Union 1 June, 1796. An ordinance of secession from the Union was passed on 6 May, 1861. On 28 Feb. 1862, the federal general Nelson entered Nashville, and in March Andrew Johnson (afterwards the president of the United States) was made military governor over a large part of Tennessee. In Sept. 1863, Rosecrans expelled the Confederate government. The representatives of Tennessee were readmitted to congress, July, 1866.

Tennis. This game, brought from France, became fashionable in England in the reign of Charles II. 1660-85; see Jeu de Paume. "Lawn Tennis" became fashionable in 1877, replacing croquet. Julian Marshall's "Annals of Tennis" published June, 1878.

Test Act, directing all officers, civil and military, under government, to receive the sacrament according to the forms of the Church of England, and to take the oaths against transubstantiation, etc.; enacted 29 March, 1673. The Test and Corporation acts were repealed, 9 May, 1828; see University Tests.

Testament, see Bibles and Wills.

Tester, testone, a silver coin struck in France by Louis XII., 1513; and also in Scotland in the time of Francis II. and of Mary, queen of Scots, 1550. It was so called from the head of the king stamped upon it. In England the tester was of 12*l.* value in the reign of Henry VIII., afterwards of 6*l.* (still called a tester).

Testri (N. France). Pepin D'Heristal, invited by malcontents, here defeated and captured Thierry III., king of Austrasia, and established himself as duke, 687.

Tettenhall (Staffordshire). It was probably at this place, then named Teotenheal, that the Danes were defeated by the Saxon king, Edward the Elder, 6 Aug. 910.

Tetuan (Morocco) was entered by the Spaniards 6 Feb. 1860, after gaining a decisive victory on 4 Feb. The general, O'Donnell, was made a grandee of the first class.

Teutoberg Forest (the Teutobergiensis saltus, Tuticus), probably situate between Detmold and Paderborn, where Hermann, or Arminius, and the Germans defeated the Romans under Varus, with very great slaughter, A.D. 9. Varus and many of his officers preferred suicide to captivity. This defeat was regarded at Rome as a national calamity, and Augustus, in agony, cried, "Varus, give me my legions!"

Teutones, a people of Germany, who with the Cimbri made incursions upon Gaul, and cut to pieces two Roman armies, 113 and 105 B.C. They were at last defeated by the consul Marius at Aix, and a great number made prisoners, 102 B.C. (see Cimbri), with whom authors commonly join the Teutones. The appellation came to be applied to the German nation in general (hence Deutsche).

Teutonic Order, military knights established in the Holy Land about 1191, through the humanity of the Germans (Teutones) to the sick and wounded of the Christian army in the Holy Land, under Guy of Lusignan, before Acre. The order was confirmed by a bull of pope Calixtus III. On their return to Germany, the knights were invited to subdue and Christianize the country now called Prussia and its neighborhood, which they gradually accomplished. Their territories were invaded, and their army was defeated, with great slaughter, near Tannenberg, in East Prussia, by Jagellon, duke of Lithuania, 15 July, 1410, when the grand-master and many of the knights were slain. A large part of their possessions was incorporated into Poland in 1466, and into Brandenburg about 1521. In 1525 the grand-master was made a prince of the empire, and the order much weakened. Its remaining possessions were seized by Napoleon I. in 1809; see Prussia, etc.

Tewkesbury (Gloucestershire), where Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians, 4 May, 1471. Queen Margaret, the consort of Henry VI., was taken prisoner and her son killed. The queen was conveyed to the Tower of London, where king Henry expired soon after this fatal engagement; being, as is generally supposed, murdered by the duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. The queen was ransomed in 1475 by the French king, Louis XI., for 50,000 crowns; see Rosa.

The abbey, founded by Robert Fitz-Hamon, cousin of William I., completed and consecrated 1123; grandly altered, fourteenth century; a monastery destroyed by Henry VIII.; the abbey spared; restored by G. G. Scott, 1877-9.

Texas (North America) was settled by the French, 1687, who were expelled soon after. It revolted from Mexico in 1835; was helped by the Americans in 1836. Its independence was acknowledged in 1840. Its annexation led to war between Mexico and the United States. It was admitted into the Union by the latter in 1846; seceded from it in 1861; submitted in 1865; readmitted to representation, March, 1870. The coast was desolated by a great storm, 15-18 Sept. 1875; see Storms.

Texel (at the mouth of the Zuyder Zee, Holland). Its vicinity has been the scene of memorable naval engagements. An engagement between the English under Blake, Dean, and Monk, and the Dutch under Van Tromp and De Ruyter, in which the latter were worsted and admiral Van Tromp was killed, 31 July, 1653. Again, in the mouth of the Texel a sharp indecisive action took place between the allied English and French fleets under prince Rupert and comte D'Estrees, and the Dutch fleet under De Ruyter, 11 Aug. 1673. The Dutch fleet was vanquished by admiral Duncan on 11 Oct. 1797; see Camperdown. The Dutch fleet of twelve ships of war and thirteen Indiamen surrendered to admiral Mitchell, who, entering the Texel, possessed himself of them without firing a shot, 30 Aug. 1799.

Thallium, a metal, occurring in the sulphuric acid manufacture, discovered by Mr. William Crookes by means of the spectrum analysis, March, 1861.

Thames (London), the Roman Tamesis or Tamesa, Saxon Temese, Temesa, rises in four springs, at Ullen farm, near Coates, Gloucestershire. The head of the river in Wiltshire is about 170 miles from London bridge, and its whole course from source to mouth about 220 miles; see London and London Bridge.

The river rose so high at Westminster that the lawyers were brought out of the hall in boats. 1235
The conservation of the Thames was given to the mayors of London. 1489
The Thames was made navigable to Oxford. 1624
It ebbed and flowed twice in three hours, 1638; again, three times in four hours, 22 March, 1692; again, twice in three hours. 24 Nov. 1777
It rose to a great height. 1736, 1747, 1762, 1791
An act of parliament gave the conservation of the Thames to the corporation of London; twelve conservators were to be appointed—three by the government. 1857
In consequence of the great contamination of the Thames by the influx of the sewage of London, and the bad odors emanating from it in the summer of 1858, an act was passed empowering the Metropolitan Board of Works (which see) to undertake its purification by constructing new drainage. 1858
The Thames Angling Preservation Society (established about 1838) is revived in. 1863
Mr. Leach, engineer of the conservators, reported that "the river is dreadfully mismanaged from its source to its mouth." 23 July, "
The Thames navigation acts, appointing five more conservators, etc., and prohibiting pollution by sewage, etc., passed. Aug. 1866
The powers of the act extended up to Staines. 1867
New by-laws to protect the fish in the Upper Thames passed by the conservators. 14 June, 1869
Highest tide known for many years; river overflowed from Gravesend to its tidal limit; great damage and distress in Blackfriars and Lambeth; Woolwich arsenal flooded and suffered; river said to have risen above 29 feet. 15 Nov. 1875

THAMES TUNNEL. One proposed, 1799; shaft sunk, 1804. The present one proposed by I. K. Brunel, to form a communication between Rotherhithe and Wapping, 1823. The bill received the royal assent. 24 June, 1824
The shaft was begun, and the first brick laid by Mr. Smith, 2 March; the excavation commenced, 1 April; the first horizontal excavation in. Dec. 1825
At a distance of 544 feet from the shaft, the first irruption took place. 18 May, 1827
The second irruption, by which six workmen perished, 12 Jan. 1828
The tunnel was opened throughout for foot-passengers, 25 March, 1843. [The length of the tunnel is 1300 feet; its width is 35 feet; height, 20 feet; clear width of each archway, including foot-path, about 14 feet; thickness of earth between the crown of the tunnel and the bed of the river, about 15 feet.]
The Thames Tunnel Company was dissolved in. 1866
The tunnel, transferred to the East London railway company, was closed. 21 July, "
The Tower subway, an iron tube tunnel beneath the Thames, constructed by Messrs. Barlow, was begun 16 Feb. 1869, and privately opened, April, 1870. It was said to have cost only 16,000*l.*
A tubular Thames tunnel, chiefly for workmen, between North and South Woolwich, begun. 23 Aug. 1876 THAMES EMBANKMENT. Recommended by sir Christopher Wren, 1668, and by William Paterson, founder of the bank of England, about 1694. The corporation embarked a mile in 1767. It was further recommended by Gwynne, 1767; by sir Frederick Eden, 1798; by sir Frederick Trench, 1824; by James Walker; by the duke of Newcastle, 1844; and by John Martin the painter, 1856. In 1860, the Metropolitan Board of Works recommended that the north bank of the Thames should be embanked, whereby the bed of the river would be improved; a low-level sewer could be easily constructed beneath a broad roadway; docks to be constructed within the embankment wall; the expense to be defrayed by the city duties on coal, and by means provided by government. The principle of this recommendation was approved by parliament, and a committee was appointed, which sat for the first time

Thames, BATTLE OF, in Upper Canada. This was between 2500 Americans, under gen. Harrison, and 800 British regulars and 1200 Indians, under gen. Proctor. It occurred on 5 Oct. 1813. The Indians were led by the celebrated Tecumseh or Tecumthá. The Americans were victorious. The Americans lost in killed and wounded only 29; the British lost in killed and wounded, including Indians (Tecumseh was slain), 67; and 560 men made prisoners, with 5000 small-arms and 6 pieces of cannon.

Thane, a Saxon title of nobility, abolished in England at the Conquest, upon the introduction of the feudal system; and in Scotland by king Malcolm III., when the title of earl was adopted, 1057.

Thanet (Kent) was the first permanent settlement of the Saxons, about 449. The Danes held a part of it, 853-65, and ravaged it 980, 988 et seq.

Thanksgiving Day, in the UNITED STATES, originated in 1622. At first the practice of observing a day of thanksgiving in the autumn of every year was confined to New England; but it has now become general throughout the United States, and the custom is to select the last Thursday in November for this purpose.

Thanksgivings, special national, were offered up at St. Paul's cathedral for the defeat of Spanish Armada, queen Elizabeth present, 8 Sept. and 24 Nov. 1588; for Marlborough's victories, 12 Nov. 1702, and 7 Sept. 1704; for George III.'s recovery from illness, 23 April, 1789; for Duncan's and other naval victories, 19 Dec. 1797; and for the recovery of the prince of Wales, 27 Feb. 1872.

Thapsus (N. Africa). Near here Julius Caesar totally defeated the army of the party which supported the policy of Pompey, Feb. 46 a.c. The suicide of Cato followed soon after.

Theatines, a religious order, the first who assumed the title of regular clerks, founded by Caraffa, bishop of Theate, or Chieti, in Naples (afterwards pope Paul IV.), 1524, to repress heresy. They first established themselves in France, according to Hénault, in Paris, 1644. The Theatines vainly endeavored to revive among the clergy the poverty of the apostles.

Theatres. That of Bacchus, at Athens, built by Philos, 420 B.C., is said to have been the first erected. Marcellus's theatre at Rome was begun by Cæsar, and dedicated by Augustus, 12 a.c. Theatres were erected in most cities of Italy. Most of the inhabitants of Pompeii were assembled at a theatre on the night of 24 Aug. 79, when an eruption of Vesuvius covered the city. Scenes were introduced into theatres, painted by Balthazar Sienna, A.D. 1583; see Drama, Plays, etc.

Theatres in ENGLAND. The first royal license for a theatre in England was in 1574 to master Burbage and four others, servants of the earl of Leicester, to act plays at the Globe, Bankside; see Globe. The prices of admission in the reign of queen Elizabeth were—gallery, 2d.; lords' rooms, 1s.; see Drama, Drury Lane, and other theatres. The theatres were closed by parliament, 1642-60.

The first play-bill was dated 8 April, 1663, and issued from Drury lane; it runs thus: "By his majesty his company of comedians at the new theatre in Drury lane will be acted a comedy called 'The Humorous Lieutenant.'" After detailing the characters, it concludes thus: "The play will begin at three o'clock exactly".....8 April, 1663

Theatres in the United States. The first regular theatrical company seen in America came from England in 1752, landed at York, Va., and, by permission of gov. Dinwiddie, opened a playhouse at Williamsburg, the capital of the province. The first play performed in America by a regular company was at that rude theatre, on 5 Sept. 1752. The company next opened a theatre at Annapolis, Md., the same year, and there the first regular theatre in America was erected. On 17 Sept. 1753, the same company opened a theatre in New York, where sir Richard Steele's play of "The Conscious Lovers" was performed. Hallam, who was the manager, was solicited to open a theatre in Philadelphia. Thither he went in April, 1754, and began in a storehouse with "The Fair Penitent." Such was the beginning of theatricals in the United States, a kind of amusement which has a strong hold upon the popular feeling, and is presented in nearly all of the large towns in the Union.

Theatrical Funds. The theatrical fund of Covent Garden was established 1760, incorporated 1774; that of Drury Lane by Garrick 1766; incorporated 1775. They grant pensions to members and their families. The General Theatrical Fund was established 1839, incorporated 1853.

Theban Legion, according to tradition, was composed of Christians, and submitted to martyrdom rather than attack their brethren during the persecution of the emperor Maximin, or sacrifice to the gods, about A.D. 286. Their leader, Maurice, was canonized.

Thebes, or Luxor, in Egypt, called also Hecatompylos on account of its hundred gates, and Diospolis, as being sacred to Jupiter. In the time of its splendor (1600 B.C.) it is said to have extended about thirty-three miles. Thebes was ruined by Cambyes, king of Persia, 525 B.C., and by the foundation of Alexandria, 332 B.C.; it rebelled and was taken by Ptolemy Lathyrus, 86 B.C., and few traces of it were seen in the age of Juvenal; see Memnonium. After centuries of neglect it has been greatly visited since the explorations of Belzoni, 1817. THEBES, N. Greece (the capital of the country successively called Aonia, Messapia, Ogygia, Hyantia, and Beotia) was called Cadmeis, from Cadmus, its founder, 1493 B.C. It became a republic about 1120 B.C., and flourished under Epaminondas 378-362 B.C. The "sacred band" formed by him, 377 B.C., was revived in 1877. Thebes's seven gates are mentioned by Homer; see Beotia and Greece.

Theft was punished by heavy fines among the Jews; by death at Athens, by the laws of Draco; see Draco. The Anglo-Saxons nominally punished theft with death, if above 12*l*. value; but the criminal could redeem his life by a ransom. In 9 Henry I., this power of redemption was taken away, 1108. The punishment of theft was very severe in England till mitigated by Peel's acts, 9 & 10 Geo. IV. 1829. The laws respecting theft were consolidated in 1862.

Theists (Greek Θεός, God), a name given to deists about 1660.—Dean Martin. See Deism, Unitarians, and Poyry.

Thellusson's Will, a most singular document. Mr. Peter Isaac Thellusson, a Genevese, and an affluent merchant of London, left 100,000*l*. to his widow and children; and the remainder of his property, more than 600,000*l*., he left to trustees, to accumulate during the lives of his three sons, and the lives of their sons; then the estates, directed to be purchased with the produce of the accumulated fund, were to be conveyed to the eldest lineal male descendant of his three sons, with the benefit of survivorship. Should no heir then exist, the whole was to be applied, by the agency of the sinking fund, to the discharge of the national debt. It is said that Mr. Thellusson held much property in trust, and that he desired a sufficient interval of time to elapse for the appearance of just claimants. He died 21 July, 1797. His will incurred much public censure, and was contested by the heirs-at-law, but finally established by a decision of the house of lords, 25 June, 1805. The last surviving grandson died in Feb. 1856. A dispute then arose whether the eldest male descendant or the male descendant of the eldest son should inherit the property. The question was decided, on appeal, by the house of lords (9 June, 1859), in favor of the latter, lord Rendlesham and Charles S. Thellusson confirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls in 1858. In consequence of the legal expenses, the property is said not to exceed greatly its value in the testator's lifetime. On 28 July, 1800, the Thellusson act was passed, restraining testators from devising their property for purposes of accumulation for longer than twenty-one years after death; any other direction to be void.

Theocracy, government by God, existed among the Israelites till Saul was made king, about 1095 B.C. (Sam. viii. 7).

Theodolite, an instrument for measuring horizontal angles, used in surveying, consists of a telescope and a divided circle. It was probably first constructed in the seventeenth century. Jesse Ramsden, in 1787, completed the great theodolite employed in the trigonometrical survey of England and Wales by gen. Roy.

"Theologia Germanica," or "Teutsche Theologie" (printed 1528; Latin and French editions, 1558), a German mystical work, written about the fourteenth century. In it, the "good man," disgusted with the corruptions in church and state, is led to seek for God in the temple of the heart. Luther is said to have placed the work next to the Bible and St. Augustin.

Theology (from the Greek θεός, God), the science which treats of the nature and attributes of God, of his relations to man, and of the manner in which they may be discovered. It is generally divided into two heads. 1. Inspired, including the Holy Scriptures, their interpretation, etc. 2. Natural, which lord Bacon calls the first part of philosophy.—Butler's "Analogy of Religion" (1736), and Paley's "Natural Theology" (1802), are eminent books on the latter subject.—Abelard (died 1142) wrote "Theologia Christiana." The "Summa Totius Theologiæ," by Thomas Aquinas (born about 1224), a standard Roman Catholic work, was printed with commentaries, etc., in 1596.

Theophilanthropists (lovers of God and man), a sect formed in France in 1796, and headed by one of the five directors, Lepaux, in 1797, was dissolved in 1802.

Theosophists, followers of Paracelsus, in the sixteenth century.

Thermidor Revolution. On the 9th Thermidor of the 2d year (27 July, 1794), the Convention deposed Robespierre, and on the next day he and twenty-two of his partisans were executed.

Thermometer. Freezing-point: Fah. 32°; R. 0°; C. 0°. Boiling-point: Fah. 212°; R. 80°; C. 100°.

Invented by Galileo before 1597.—Libri.
Invented by Drebbel of Alcmær, 1609.—Boerhaave.
Invented by Paulo Sarpi, 1609.—Fulgentio.
Invented by Sanctorio in 1610.—Borelli.
Fahrenheit's thermometer invented about 1726; Réaumur's and Celsius's (the latter now termed centigrade) soon after. [Fahrenheit's scale is usually employed in England, and Réaumur's and the centigrade on the Continent.]
The mode of construction by substituting quicksilver for spirits was invented some years subsequently. Halley proposed it in 1697.

Mr. L. M. Castella issued a minimum thermometer in Sept. 1861. It registers degrees of cold by means of mercury. Negretti and Zambra's registering minimum thermometers, adapted for deep-sea purposes, made known early in 1874.

Thermophone, in which sonorous vibrations are produced by the expansion of heated bodies, connected with an electro-magnet. The apparatus was constructed by Theodor Wiesendanger, and described by him in Oct. 1878.

Thermopylæ (Doria, N. Greece). Leonidas, at the head of 300 Spartans and 700 Thebians, at the defile of Thermopylæ, withstood the whole force of the Persians during three days, 7, 8, 9 Aug. 480 B.C., when Ephialtes, a Trachinian, perfidiously leading the enemy by a secret path up the mountains, brought them to the rear of the Greeks, who, thus placed between two assailants, perished gloriously on heaps of their slaughtered foes. One Greek only returned home, and he was received with reproaches for having fled.* Here Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, was defeated by the Romans, 191 B.C.

Thermum, THERMUS, or THERMA (Greece), a strong city, the Acropolis of Ætolia, N. Greece, was captured and ravaged by Philip V. of Macedon, 218 and 208 B.C., on account of its favoring the Romans.

Thesaurus (treasury), a title given in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries to large collections of small works on history and archaeology. The most celebrated are:

"Thesaurus Antiquitatum Græcorum," by J. Gronovius. 13 vols. fol. 1697-1702
"Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanorum," by J. G. Grævius. 12 vols. fol. 1694
"Thesaurus Antiquitatum et Historicum Italici, Siciliæ," etc., by G. Grævius and P. Burmannus. 45 vols. fol. . . . 1726
"Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacrarum," by B. Ugolinius. 34 vols. fol. 1744-69

Thespisæ, a city of Boeotia, N. Greece. 700 of its citizens perished with Leonidas at Thermopylæ, Aug. 480 B.C. It suffered through the jealousy of the Thebans, who destroyed its walls in 372 B.C.

Thessalonica (now Salonica), a city in Macedonia, N. Greece, originally Therme, but rebuilt by Cassander, and said to have been named after his wife, Thessalonica, daughter of Philip, after 315 B.C. Here Paul preached, 53; and to the church here he addressed two epistles in 54. In consequence of seditions, a frightful massacre of the inhabitants took place in 390, by order of the emperor Theodosius. Thessalonica partook of the changes of the Eastern empire. Thessalonica was taken by the Saracens, with great slaughter, 80 July, 904; by the Normans of Sicily, 15 Aug. 1185; and after various changes was taken from the Venetians by the Turks under Amurath, 1430.

A young Bulgarian Christian girl, said to be an unwilling convert to Mahometanism, was rescued from the Turks and taken to the American consul's, 5 May; riots ensued on 6 May; the German and French consuls, Abbott and Moulin, were murdered; the Western powers intervened; reparation was ordered by the sultan; several murderers were executed, 16 May; other persons were imprisoned; and 40,000 l. said to be paid to the families of the victims, Aug. 1876.

Thessaly (N. Greece), the seat of many of the adventures described by the poets. The first king of whom we have any certain knowledge was Hellen, son of Deucalion, from whom his subjects were called Hellenists, a name afterwards extended to all Greeks. From Thessaly came the Achæans, the Ætolians, the Dorians, the Hellenes, etc. The two most remarkable events in the early history of this country are the deluge of Deucalion, 1548 B.C., and the expedition of the Argonauts, 1263 B.C.; see them severally. Thessaly long aimed at neutrality in Grecian affairs, but became involved through its rulers, the tyrants of Phæris: Lycophron, about 404 B.C.; his son Jason, 374; assassinated, 370; Alexander, the most eminent, defied Athens and Thebes; assassinated, 359. Philip of Macedon, after a defeat (358 B.C.), gained a victory over the tyrants, 352; and

* The distich in the Greek Anthology, by Simonides, their contemporary, is thus translated by Bowles:

"Go tell the Spartans, thou that passest by,
That here, obedient to their laws, we lie."

subjugated the country wholly, 343. The Romans gave a nominal freedom to Thessaly after their victory at Cynoscephalæ, 197. It is now included in the kingdom of Greece by the treaty of 24 May, signed 2 July, 1881.

Thetford (Norfolk), said to have been the Roman Sitomagus, and an important Saxon town, was a bishopric from 1075 to 1091, when the see was removed to Norwich. It was made a suffragan bishopric by Henry VIII.; the power given him, 1534.

Thibet, or TIBET (Central Asia), is said to have been a kingdom 313 B.C.; conquered by Genghis Khan, 1206, and gradually subdued by and annexed to China, 1255-1720. Buddhism became the dominant religion about 905; and the lamas have absolute power in religious affairs. Thibet was visited by Marco Polo, 1278; by Jesuits, about 1661-2; Bogle and Hamilton, 1774; and Thomas Manning, 1810. An astronomical survey was carried on surreptitiously by two pundits of semi-Thibet origin, under the superintendence of capt. Montgomerie, 1865-7.

Thieves' Island, see Ladrones.

Thieves' Synod, at Ephesus, 349 or 449, where the doctrines of Eutyches respecting Christ's incarnation were approved, received the name because his opponents were silenced or excluded.

Thimbles are said to have been found at Herculaneum. The art of making them was brought to England by John Lofting, a mechanic, from Holland, who set up a workshop at Islington, near London, and practised the manufacture in various metals with profit and success, about 1695.

Thionville, the ancient Theodonis villa, a fortified city on the Moselle, N.E. France. It was the occasional residence of Charlemagne and his successors, and on the extinction of his race it was successively held by private lords, the counts of Luxemburg, the dukes of Burgundy, the house of Austria, and the kings of Spain. It was taken by the duke of Guise, 23 June, 1558, after an obstinate defence, and returned to Philip II. by the peace of Châteauf Cambresia. It successfully resisted the marquis de Feuquières in 1637, but was taken after four months' siege by the duc d'Enghien, 10 Aug. 1643, and remained with France. It successfully resisted the Austrians in 1792, and the Prussians in 1814. It was invested by the Germans in Aug. 1870, and after bombardment, being in flames, surrendered 24 Nov. following.

Thirty Tyrants, a term applied to the governors of Athens, in 104 B.C., who were expelled by Thrasybulus, 403; and also to the numerous aspirants to the imperial throne of Rome during the reigns of Gallienus and Aurelian, A.D. 259-274.

Thirty Years' War, in Germany, between the Catholics and Protestants. It began in Bohemia in 1618, and ended with the peace of Westphalia in 1648. It is renowned for the victories of Wallenstein and Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, and for its history by Schiller, published 1790-3; see Battle, 1618-48.

Thirty-nine Articles, see Articles.

Thistle.* ORDER OF THE SCOTLAND, founded by James V., 1540. It consisted originally of himself, as sovereign, and twelve knights, in imitation of Christ and his twelve apostles. In 1542 James died, and the order was discontinued, about the time of the Reformation. The order was renewed by James VII. of Scotland and II. of England, by making eight knights, 29 May, 1687;

* Some Scottish historians make the origin of this order very ancient. The abbot Justinian says it was instituted by Achaius I. of Scotland, 802, when that monarch made an alliance with Charlemagne, and then took for his device the thistle. It is stated that the king Hungar, the Diet, had a dream, in which St. Andrew made a midnight visit, and promised him a sure victory over his foes, the Northumbrians; and that the next day St. Andrew's Cross (X) appeared in the air, and the Northumbrians were defeated. On this story, it is said, Achaius framed the order more than 700 years before James V.

increased to twelve by queen Anne in 1703; to sixteen by George IV. in 1827. The original knights of 1687 were George, duke of Gordon.

John, marquess of Athol.
James, earl of Arran, afterwards duke of Hamilton; killed in a duel, 1712.
Alexander, earl of Moray.
James, earl of Perth; attainted.
Kenneth, earl of Seaforth; attainted.
George, earl of Dumbarton.
John, earl of Melfort; attainted.

Thomas, St., see Virgin Isles.

Thomas's Hospital, St. (Southwark), was founded as an almshouse by Richard, prior of Bermondsey, in 1213, and surrendered to Henry VIII. in 1538. In 1551 the mayor and citizens of London, having purchased of Edward VI. the manor of Southwark, including this hospital, repaired and enlarged it, and admitted into it 260 poor, sick, and helpless objects; upon which the king, in 1553, incorporated it, together with Bethlehem, St. Bartholomew's, etc. It was rebuilt in 1693. In 1862 the site was sold to the Southeastern Railway Company, and the patients were removed to the Surrey music-hall. The foundation-stone of the new hospital, erected at Stan-gate, near the Surrey side of Westminster bridge, was laid by the queen, 13 May, 1868; and the new hospital was opened by her majesty, 21 June, 1871.

The appointment of a paid resident treasurer, instead of an honorary one, and other changes recommended by committees, were negatived by the general committee. Nov. 1877
Establishment of wards for paying patients, settled 20 Nov. 1878

Thomists, see Scotists.

Thomites, or TOMITES, a body of enthusiasts who assembled at Boughton, near Canterbury. An insane Cornish publican named John Nicholls, called Thom, or Tom, assumed the name of sir W. Courtenay, knight of Malta and king of Jerusalem, came into Kent, was an unsuccessful candidate for parliament, and incited the rabble against the Poor Law act. On 31 May, 1838, a farmer of the neighborhood, whose servant had joined the crowd which attended Thom, sent a constable to fetch him back; but on his arrival on the ground he was shot dead by Thom. The military were then called out, and lieut. Bennett proceeded to take the murderer into custody; but Thom advanced, and, firing a pistol, killed the lieutenant on the spot. One of the soldiers fired at Thom, and laid him dead by the side of lieut. Bennett. The people then attacked the military, who were compelled to fire, and eight more persons were killed before the mob dispersed.

Thoracic Duct, discovered first in a horse by Eustachius about 1563; in the human body by Ol. Rudbec, a Swedish anatomist. Thomas Bartholine of Copenhagen and Dr. Jolliffe of England also discovered it about 1654; see Lacteals.

Thorinum, a very rare metal (a heavy gray powder), discovered by Berzelius in 1828.

Thorn (on the Vistula, Poland) was founded by the Teutonic Knights in 1231. Here they acknowledged themselves to be vassals of Poland in 1466. Thorn was taken by Charles XII. of Sweden in 1703. Many Protestants were slain here (after a religious riot) at the instigation of the Jesuits, 7 Dec. 1724. Thorn was acquired by the Prussians in 1793; taken by the French in 1806; restored to Prussia at the peace in 1815.

Thought Reading. In 1881 Mr. W. I. Bishop professed to be able to read a person's thoughts by touching some part of the skin, on June 11, in the presence of Mr. G. J. Romanes, prof. E. Ray Lankester, Mr. F. Galton, and others; he was successful with some persons, and failed with others (Nature, No. 606).

Thrace (now Roumelia, in Turkey) derived its name from Thrax, the son of Mara.—Aspin. The Thracians were a warlike people, and therefore Mars was said to have been born and to have had his residence among them.—Euripides. See Odryse.

Thrashing-machines. The flail was the only instrument formerly in use for thrashing corn. The Romans used a machine called the tribulum, a sledge loaded with stones or iron, drawn over the corn-sheaves by horses. The first machine attempted in modern times was invented by Michael Menzies at Edinburgh about 1732; Andrew Meikle invented a machine in 1776. Many improvements have been since made, and steam is employed. An act for the prevention of accidents by these machines was passed in 1879.

Thrasymene, or TRASIMENE (N. Italy). A most bloody engagement took place near the Thrasymene lake between the Carthaginians under Hannibal and the Romans under Flaminius, 217 B.C. No less than 15,000 Romans were left dead on the field of battle, and 10,000 taken prisoners; or, according to Livy, 6000; or Polybius, 15,000. The loss of Hannibal was about 1500 men. About 10,000 Romans made their escape, all covered with wounds.—Livy, Polybius. On the same day an earthquake occurred, which desolated several cities in Italy.

Threatening Letters. Sending letters, whether anonymously written or with a fictitious name, demanding money, or threatening to kill a person or fire his house, was made punishable as a felony, without benefit of clergy, by the Black act in 1722. Persons extorting money by threatening to accuse others of such offences as are subjected to death or other infamous punishments, were to be adjudged imprisonment, whipping, or transportation, by 30 Geo. II. 1756 and other acts; the latest 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 96, 97 (1861).

Three Denominations, see Denominations.

Three F's, see F.

Throat and Ear Diseases, a hospital for them opened near Gray's Inn road, March, 1874; foundation of a new building laid by madame Adelina Patti, marchesa de Caux, 16 Sept. 1875.

Thugs, organized secret fanatical murderers in India, who considered their victims to be sacrifices to their gods. The English commenced suppressing them about 1810, but did not succeed till about 1830, when a plan for the purpose was adopted by lord William Bentinck.

Thumb-screw, an instrument used in the first stages of torture by the Spanish Inquisition. In Great Britain, rev. William Carstares, a Presbyterian minister, was the last who suffered by it, before the Scotch privy council, to make him divulge secrets intrusted to him, which he firmly resisted. After the revolution in 1688, the thumb-screw was presented to him by the council. King William expressed a desire to see it, and tried it on, bidding the doctor to turn the screw; but at the third turn he cried out, "Hold—hold! doctor; another turn would make me confess anything."

Thunderer, see Nary of England, 1872, 1876, 1879.

Thundering Legion. During a contest with the invading Marcomanni the prayers of some Christians in a Roman legion are said to have been followed by a storm of thunder, lightning, and rain, which tended greatly to discomfit the enemy, and hence the legion received the name, 174.

Thuri, or THURIUM, a Greek city, S. Italy, founded after the fall of Sybaris, about 452 B.C. It suffered from the incursions of the Lucanians, by whom the Thuriens were severely defeated, 390 B.C. It became eventually a dependent ally of Rome; was ravaged by the troops of Hannibal, 204; was established as a colony by the Romans, 194; and was captured by Spartacus in the Servile war, who levied upon it heavy contributions, 72.

Thuringia, an early Gothic kingdom in central Germany, was overrun by Attila and the Huns, 451; the last king, Hermanfried, was defeated and slain by Thierry, king of the Franks, who annexed it to his dominions, 580. It formed two duchies, 680-717, and 849-919; a margraviate, 960-1090; landgraviate and county, 1180-1247; and was, after various changes and many conflicts, absorbed into Saxony in the fifteenth century. In 1815 it was surrendered to Prussia.

Thurles (S. Ireland). Here was held a synod of the Roman Catholic archbishops, bishops, inferior clergy, and religious orders, under the direction of archbishop Cullen, the Roman Catholic primate, 22 Aug. 1850. It condemned the queen's colleges, and recommended the foundation of a Roman Catholic university, 10 Sept. following. The acts were forwarded to Rome for approval of the pope, Pius IX., and published 1 Jan. 1852.

Thurot's Invasion. Thurot, an Irish commodore in the French service, became a terror to all the merchant-ships of this kingdom. He had the command of a small armament, and landed 1000 men at Carrickfergus, in Ireland, and plundered the town. He reached the Isle of Man, and was overtaken by capt. Elliot, with three frigates, who engaged his little squadron, which was taken, and the commodore killed, 28 Feb. 1760. Thurot's true name was O'Farrell. His grandfather had followed the fortunes of James II.; but his mother being of a family of some dignity in France, he assumed her name.—Burns.

Thursday, the fifth day of the week, named from Thor, the most valiant son of Odin, a deified hero worshipped by the northern nations, particularly by the Scandinavians and Celts. His authority was said to extend over the winds, seasons, thunder and lightning, etc. Thursday is in Latin dies Jovis, or Jupiter's day.

Thyatira (Asia Minor), the place assigned for the battle at which the rebel Procopius was defeated by the army of the emperor Valens, 366; see Seven Churches.

Thymbra (Asia Minor). Here Cyrus the Great defeated the confederate army aiding Croesus, and obtained supremacy in Asia, 548 B.C.

Tiara, head-ornament of the ancient Persians. The name is given to the triple crown of the pope (anciently called regnum), indicative of his civil rank, as the keys are of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The right to wear a crown is said to have been granted to the bishops of Rome by Constantine the Great, and by Clovis, founder of the French monarchy. Their ancient tiara was a high round cap. Pope Damasus II. first caused himself to be crowned with a tiara, 1048. "Boniface VIII. encompassed the tiara with a crown; Benedict XII. added a second, and John XXIII. a third."—Rees.

Tiber (central Italy), the river on whose banks Rome was built. In the flourishing times of the city the navigation of the river was enormous. Livy states that the Tiber was frozen over 398 B.C. A commission was appointed to dredge the bed of the river near Rome, Dec. 1871. Garibaldi's scheme for improving the river, making a new port, etc., laid before the Italian parliament, 25 May, 1875; works begun, March, 1877.

Tiberias, a city in Palestine, built by Herod Antipas, and named after the emperor Tiberius, 39. Near it Guy de Lusignan, king of Jerusalem, and the crusaders were defeated by Saladin, 3, 4 July, 1187; and Jerusalem fell into his hands.

Tibet, see Thibet.

Tibur (now Tivoli), a Latin town more ancient than Rome, and frequently at war with it. The Tiburtines were defeated 335 B.C., and the subjection of all Latium followed; for which Furus Camillus obtained a triumph and an equestrian statue in the forum.

Tichborne Case, see Trials, 1871-4. See Englishman. Dr. Kenaly, the claimant's counsel, elected M.P. for Stoke, moves for a royal commission to inquire into the trial; rejected, 433 to 3 (Dr. Kenaly, Mr. Whalley, and the O'Gorman), 26 April, 1875.

Ticino, or Tessin, a Swiss canton south of the Alps, conquered by the Swiss early in the sixteenth century; made a separate canton in 1815. It suffered by internal disputes 1839 and 1841.

Ticinua, a river, N. Italy. Here Hannibal defeated the Romans 218 B.C.

Tickets of Leave, see Transportation and Crime.

Ticonderoga (N. America). The French fortress here was unsuccessfully besieged by Abercrombie in July, 1758; taken 26 July, 1759. The Americans took it 10 May, 1775, but retired July, 1777. The British retired from it shortly after.

Tides. Homer is the earliest profane author who speaks of the tides. Posidonius of Apamea accounted for the tides from the motion of the moon, about 79 B.C.; and Cæsar speaks of them in his fourth book of the Gallic war. The theory of the tides was first satisfactorily explained by Kepler, 1598; but the honor of a complete explanation of them was reserved for sir Isaac Newton, about 1683; see Thames. Sir William Thomson, at the Royal Institution, 9 April, 1875, described a valuable tide-calculating machine.

Tien-Tsin, see China, June, 1858 Jan. 1861 and 1870.

Tiflis (Asiatic Russia), built about 469 by Vakhtang; became the capital of Georgia. It was taken by Genghis Khan in the twelfth century; by Mustapha Pacha, 1576; by the Persians, 1796; and by the Russians, 1801, who have made it the capital of their Trans-Caucasian possessions.

Tigrano-Certa, capital of Armenia, built by Tigranes the Great, and taken by Lucullus and the Romans after a great victory, 69 B.C.

Tigra, a river forming the eastern boundary of Mesopotamia, celebrated for the cities founded on its banks: Nineveh, Selencia, Ctesiphon, and Bagdad. It was explored by an English steamer in 1838. Col. Chesney, in 1850, published an account of his survey in 1836-7.

Tilbury (Essex). The camp formed here in 1588 to resist the Spanish invasion was visited by queen Elizabeth.

Tiles are said to have been first made in England about 1216. They were taxed in 1781. The number of tiles taxed in England in 1820 was 81,924,626; and in 1830, 97,318,264. The tax was repealed in 1833.

Tilait (on the Niemen), on which river, on a raft, the emperors of France and Russia met, 25 June, 1807.

By a treaty concluded between France and Russia, signed 7 July, Napoleon restored to the Prussian monarch one half of his territories, and Russia recognized the Confederation of the Rhine, and the elevation of Napoleon's three brothers, Joseph, Louis, and Jerome, to the thrones of Naples, Holland, and Westphalia.

Tilts, see Tournaments.

Timber. The annual demand of timber for the royal navy, in war, was 60,000 loads, or 40,000 full-grown trees, a ton each, of which 35 will stand on an acre; in peace, 32,000 tons, or 48,000 loads. A 74-gun ship consumed 3000 loads, or 2000 tons of trees, the produce of 57 acres in a century.—Albutt. Iron is now largely used in preference to timber. In 1843 we imported 1,317,645 loads of timber (cut and uncut); in 1857, 2,495,964 loads; in 1866, 3,038,341 loads; in 1871, 4,497,136 loads; in 1875, 5,092,394 loads; in 1877, 6,788,789 loads. In 1866, we imported 53,458 tons of mahogany; in 1871, 29,256 tons; in 1875, 80,705 tons; in 1877, 53,600 tons. The duties on timber were modified in 1851.

Timber Bending. Apparatus was invented for this purpose by Mr. T. Blanchard, of Boston, U. S., for which a medal was awarded at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. A company was formed for its application in this country in 1856.

Timbuctoo (N. Africa), a city built by Mansa Suleiman, a Mahometan, about 1214, and frequently subjugated by the sovereigns of Morocco. Since 1727 it has been partially independent.

Time. Our ideas in regard to time have been of late greatly extended. The distant planet Neptune, discovered by Adams and Le Verrier in 1846, requires about 900 of our years for a single revolution; and the coal measures in Wales, a thickness of strata of more than twelve miles, would require for its deposition hundreds of thousands of years; while other formations could only be estimated in millions; see Clocks, Sundials, Watches, etc.

"Times" newspaper. On 13 Jan. 1785, Mr. John Walter published the first number of the Daily Universal Register, price 2½d., printed on the logographic system (invented by Henry Johnson, a compositor), in which types containing syllables and words were employed instead of single letters.

On 1 Jan. 1788, the paper was named The Times. In 1803, when Mr. Walter gave up the paper to his son, the circulation was about 1000; that of the Morning Post being 4500.

Dr. Stoddart (suggested as Dr. Slop by Moore the poet) became editor in 1812, but five years after retired and set up in opposition the New Times, an unprofitable speculation. Thomas Barnes became next editor. He died 7 May, 1841, and was succeeded by his assistant John Thaddeus Delane (son of W. F. A. Delane, financial manager), who retired in 1877, and died 22 Nov. 1879.

On 28 Nov. 1814, the Times was first printed by steam power (the invention of F. König), 1200 per hour, afterwards increased to 2000 and 4000.

The powerful articles contributed by Edward Stirling gained the paper the name of the Thunderer.

On 19 Jan. 1823, the first double number appeared.

In July, 1834, an attack of Mr. O'Connell in the house of commons on the correctness of the reports of the debates in the Times was signally defeated.

Shortly after began the convenient summary of the debates, written in the first instance by Mr. Horace Twiss.

In 1841 the Times was instrumental in detecting and exposing a scheme, organized by a company, to defraud by forgery all the influential bankers of Europe. This brought on the proprietors an action for libel (in the case Bogle v. Lawson). The jury found the charge to be true, giving a verdict of one farthing damages, but the judges refused costs. Subscriptions were set on foot in all parts of Europe to reimburse the proprietors for the immense outlay in defending the action. This they firmly declined; and the money was expended in establishing Times scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge, and at Christ's Hospital, and other schools; marble tablets also, commemorating the event, were set up in the Royal Exchange and in other places. These were the greatest honors ever conceded to a newspaper.

In Oct. 1845, the Times express was for the first time conveyed to India overland, by the agency of Lieut. Waghorn. Of the number of the Times containing the life of the duke of Wellington for 19 Nov. 1852, 70,000 were sold—the ordinary number being then 35,000; the circulation is stated to vary from 50,000 to 60,000 (1869).

In 1854, the proprietors sent Mr. W. H. Russell as their special correspondent to the seat of war in the Crimea; in 1857 to India, and in 1861 to the southern states of North America. Times Fund.—On 12 Oct. 1854, Sir Robert Peel originated by a letter in the Times a subscription for the sick and wounded in the Crimean war, and in less than a fortnight 15,000*l.* were sent to the Times office to be thus appropriated. Mr. Macdonald (the present manager) was sent out by the proprietors as special commissioner to administer the fund, from which large quantities of food and clothing were supplied to the sufferers, with inestimable advantage; see Scutari and Nightingale.

In Dec. 1858, the Times drew attention to the state of the houseless poor of London; and in a few days 8000*l.* were subscribed for their relief.

In 1851, 13,000,000 copies were sold; in 1857, 16,100,000; in 1859, 16,900,000; in 1860, 16,670,000.

In 1860, 16,400 copies per hour were printed.

On 21 June, 1861, the Times consisted of 24 pages, containing 4076 advertisements (about 1810 it contained 150 advertisements).

Stereotypes from papier-mache moulds introduced, 1856; much improved, 1860.

The "Walter press," invented by Macdonald & Calverley, prints about 17,000 an hour, perfected, 1862-9.

A list of the contents, inserted over the first leader, appeared first 3 Feb. 1869.

3½ pages tables of metropolitan charities appeared 11 Feb. 1869.

Special train for conveying the Times. Northwestern Railway, began to run, 4.55 A.M. 16 Feb. 1875.

Annual summaries, 1851-75, reprinted, price 1*s.* (type set up by composing machines).

12,000 perfect sheets per hour printed by "Walter press," Jan. 1876.

Weekly issue, price 2*d.*, began 5 Jan. 1877.

The Rapiel electric lamp adopted in the machine-room, Nov. 1878.

Mr. Palmer's "Index to the Times" begun 1867; now printing for Times before 1865 and continuing 1881.

Tin. The Phœnicians traded with England for more than 1100 years before the Christian era. Under the Saxons, our tin mines appear to have been neglected; but under the Normans, they produced considerable revenues to the earls of Cornwall, particularly to Richard, brother of Henry III. A charter and various immunities were granted by Edmund, earl Richard's brother, who framed the Stannary Laws (which see), laying a duty on the tin. Edward III. confirmed the tinners in their privileges, and erected Cornwall into a dukedom, with which he invested his son, Edward the Black Prince, 1337. Since that time the heirs-apparent to the crown of England, if eldest sons, have enjoyed it successively. Tin mines were discovered in Germany, which lessened the value of those in England, till then the only tin mines in Europe, 1240.—Anderson. Discovered in Barbary, 1640; in India, 1740; in New Spain, 1782. In 1857, 9783 tons; in 1860, 10,462 tons; in 1864, 10,108 tons; in 1865, 10,039 tons; in 1870, 10,200 tons; in 1874, 9942 tons; in 1876, 8500 tons; in 1879, 9532 tons of metallic tin were produced from British mines. Of tin plates we exported in value, in 1847, 484,184*l.*; in 1854, 1,075,531*l.*; in 1860, 1,500,812*l.*; in 1864, 1,263,246*l.*; in 1866, 1,896,192*l.*; in 1871, 2,900,625*l.*; in 1873, 3,958,042*l.*; in 1877, 3,033,126*l.*; in 1879, 3,507,977*l.*

Tinchebray (N. W. France), where a battle was fought between Henry I. of England, and his brother Robert, duke of Normandy. England and Normandy were reunited under Henry, at the decease of William Rufus, who had already possessed himself of Normandy by a mortgage from his brother Robert, at his setting out for Palestine. Robert, on his return, recovered Normandy by an accommodation with Henry; but having afterwards quarrelled, Robert was defeated in the battle of Tinchebray, 28 Sept. 1106, and Normandy was annexed to the crown of England.—Hénault.

Tippecanoe, BATTLE OF. In the spring of 1811, Tecumseh, a Shawnee chief, attempted to confederate the Western and Southern Indians in a war against the United States. The movement became so alarming that gen. Harrison, then governor of the Indiana Territory, marched towards Tippecanoe, the headquarters of the chief, near the present village of Lafayette, Ind., with about 650 men. There, on 7 Nov., he fought over 600 Indians, under Tecumseh's brother, and defeated them.

Harrison lost 62 killed, and 126 wounded; the Indians lost 150 killed.

Tippermuir (near Perth). Here the marquis of Montrose defeated the Covenanters under lord Elcho, 1 Sept. 1644.

Tirnova, on the Jantra, a tributary of the Danube, capital of the ancient kingdom of Bulgaria. It was occupied without resistance by gen. Gourko, 6, 7 July, 1877, and made the Russian headquarters.

Titanium, a rare metal, discovered by Gregor in menakite, a Cornish mineral, in 1791, and in 1794 by Klaproth.

Tithes, or TENTHS, were commanded to be given to the tribe of Levi, 1490 B.C. (Lev. xxvii. 30). Abraham returning from his victory over the kings (Gen. xiv.), gave tithes of the spoil to Melchisedek, king of Salem, priest of the most high God (1913 B.C.). For the first 800 years of the Christian church they were given purely as alms, and were voluntary.—Wicliffe. "I will not put the title of the clergy to tithes upon any divine right, though such a right certainly commenced, and I believe as certainly ceased, with the Jewish theocracy."—Blackstone. They were established in France by Charlemagne about 800, and abolished 1789. Tenths were confirmed in the Lateran councils, 1215.—Raimbault. The payment of tithes appears to have been claimed by Angustin, the first archbishop of Canterbury, and to have been allowed by Ethelbert, king of Kent, under the term "God's fee," about 600.

The first mention of them in any English written law is a constitutional decree made in a synod strongly enjoining tithes, 786.

Offa, king of Mercia, gave unto the church the tithes of all his kingdom, to expiate the death of Ethelbert, king of the East Angles, whom he had caused to be basely murdered, 794.

Tithes were first granted to the English clergy in a general assembly held by Ethelwold, 844.—Henry.

In England, in 1645, tithes were fixed at the rate of 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound on rent; since then, many acts have been passed respecting them.

The Tithes Commutation act, passed 13 Aug. 1836. It was amended in 1837, 1840, 1846, 1860, and 1878.

A rector is entitled to all the tithes; a vicar to a small part only, frequently to none.

Several acts relating to tithes in Ireland have been passed in 1832-47, altering and improving the tithe system.

Tithe redemption trust appointed, 1846.

Tithing. The number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behavior of each of their society; of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman; but now he is nothing but a constable, formerly called the headborough.—Convel.

Titles Royal. Henry IV. had the title of "Grace" and "My liege," 1399. Henry VI., "Excellent Grace," 1422. Edward IV., "Most High and Mighty Prince," 1461. Henry VII., "Highness," 1485; Henry VIII. the same title, and sometimes "Grace," 1509 et seq. Francis I. of France addressed Henry as "Your Majesty" at their interview in 1520; see Field of the Cloth of Gold. Henry VIII. was the first and last king who was styled "Dread Sovereign." James I. coupled to "Majesty" the present "Sacred," or "Most Excellent." "Majesty" was the style of the emperors of Germany; the first king to whom it was given was Louis XI. of France, about 1463.

Titles to Land Consolidation Act (Scotland), passed 31 July, 1868, and amended in 1869.

Tivoli, see Tibur.

Tobacco* (Nicotiana tabacum) received its name from Tabacco, a province of Yucatan, New Spain; some say from the island of Tobago, one of the Caribbees; others from Tobasco, in the Gulf of Florida. It is said to have been first observed at St. Domingo, in Cuba,

* British Anti-Tobacco Crusade, originated by the late Thos. Reynolds in 1853. 60,000 of its publications had been circulated gratuitously in 1876.

1492; and to have been used freely by the Spaniards in Yucatan in 1520. Tobacco was either first brought to England in 1565 by sir John Hawkins, or by sir Walter Raleigh and sir Francis Drake in 1586. It was manufactured only for exportation for some years.—Stor's Chron. The Pied Bull inn, at Islington, is said to have been the first house in England where tobacco was smoked. In 1584 a proclamation was issued against it. James I. published "A Counterblaste against Tobacco," and the star-chamber ordered the duties to be 6s. 10d. per pound, 1614. Its cultivation was prohibited in England by Charles II., 1684. Act laying a duty on the importation was passed 1684. The cultivation was allowed in Ireland, 1779. The tax was increased and put under the excise, 1789.—Aulerson, Ashe. Various statutes have passed relative to tobacco. Act to revive the act prohibiting the culture of tobacco in Ireland passed 2 Will. IV., Aug. 1831. Act directing that tobacco grown in Ireland be purchased in order to its being destroyed, 24 March, 1832. The quantity consumed in England in 1791 was nine million and a half of pounds, and in 1829 about fifteen million pounds. We imported in 1850 35,166,358 lbs., and 1,557,558 lbs. manufactured (cigars and snuff); in 1855, 36,820,846 lbs., and 2,651,544 lbs. manufactured; in 1860, 48,936,471 lbs., and 2,110,430 lbs. manufactured; in 1864, 61,042,667 lbs., and 6,578,707 lbs. manufactured; in 1866, 54,374,800 lbs., and 3,171,906 lbs. manufactured; in 1871, 73,042,305 lbs., and 3,852,236 lbs. manufactured; in 1876, 76,814,974 lbs., and 3,818,682 lbs. manufactured; in 1879, 38,861,220 lbs., and 3,591,558 lbs. manufactured. The tobacco duties were modified in 1863; raised April, 1878. 2d. a lb. extra duty on cigars added, April, 1879. Net customs duties paid for tobacco and snuff in the year 1875-6, 7,744,977l.; 1877-8, 8,006,836l. The exports of tobacco from the United States in 1880 amounted to 121,766,772 lbs. The total tobacco crop of the United States for 1880 was 473,107,673 lbs.

Tobago (West Indies), discovered by Columbus in 1498; settled by the Dutch, 1642. Taken by the English, 1672; retaken, 1674. In 1748, it was declared a neutral island; but in 1763 it was ceded to the English. Tobago was taken by the French under De Grasse in 1781, and confirmed to them in 1783. Again taken by the English, 14 April, 1793, but restored at the peace of Amiens, 6 Oct. 1802. The island was once more taken by the British, under gen. Grinfield, 1 July 1803, and was confirmed to them by the peace of Paris in 1814. Population in 1871, 17,054. Tobago is one of the Windward Isles.

Tobitschau (Moravia). In a sharp action here, on 15 July, 1866, the Austrians were defeated by the army of the crown-prince of Prussia with the loss of 500 killed and wounded and 500 prisoners, and seventeen guns.

Toison d'Or, or GOLDEN FLEECE (which see).

Tokens. BANK, silver pieces issued by the Bank of England, of the value of 5s., 1 Jan. 1798. The Spanish dollar had a small profile of George III. stamped on the neck of the Spanish king. They were raised to the value of 5s. 6d. 14 Nov. 1811. Bank-tokens were also current in Ireland, where those issued by the bank passed for 6s. and lesser sums until 1817. They were called in on the revision of the coinage. Tradesmen were permitted to issue tokens as small coins from 1648 till 16 Aug. 1672, when their circulation was prohibited by royal proclamation. These tokens are figured and described in a work by William Boyne, 1858.

Tokio, the name given to Jeddo, the capital of Japan, about 1869; see Jeddo.

Tolbiac (now Zellerbach), near the Rhine, where Clovis totally defeated the Allemanni, 496.

Toledo, the ancient Toletum (Central Spain), made capital of the Visigothic kingdom by Athanagild, 551; taken by the Saracens, 712. Toledo was taken after the war begun, 1081, by Alfonso I. of Castile, 25 May, 1085. In 1088 the archbishop was made primate of Spain.

The university was founded in 1499. Toledo sword-blades have been famed since the fifteenth century.

Tolentino (Italy, formerly in the papal states), where a treaty was made between the pope and the French, 19 Feb. 1797. Here Joachim Murat, having resumed arms against the allies, was defeated by the Austrians, 3 May, 1815, taken prisoner, and shot.

Toleration Act, passed in 1689 to relieve Protestant dissenters from the church of England. Their liberties were, however, greatly endangered in the latter days of queen Anne, who died on the day that the Schism bill was to become a law, 1 Aug. 1714.

The toleration granted was somewhat limited. It exempted persons who took the new oath of allegiance and supremacy, and made also a declaration against popery, from the penalties incurred by absenting themselves from church and holding unlawful conventicles; and it allowed the Quakers to substitute an affirmation for an oath, but did not relax the provisions of the Test act (which see). The party spirit of the times checked the king in his liberal measures.

Tolls were first paid by vessels passing the Stade, on the Elbe, 1109. They were first demanded by the Danes of vessels passing the Sound, 1341; see Stade and Sound. Toll-bars in England originated in 1267, on the grant of a penny for every wagon that passed through a certain manor; and the first regular toll was collected a few years after for mending the road in London between St. Giles's and Temple Bar. Gathered for repairing the highways of Holburn-inn lane and Martin's lane (now Aldersgate street), 1346. Toll-gates or turnpikes were set up in 1663. In 1827, 27 turnpikes near London were removed by parliament; 81 turnpikes and toll-bars ceased on the north of London on 1 July, 1864; 61 on the south side ceased on 31 Oct. 1865; and many others on the Essex and Middlesex roads ceased on 31 Oct. 1866; the remainder on the north of London ceased 1 July, 1872. The tolls on the Commercial road, London, E., were abolished 5 Aug. 1871. The tolls on Waterloo and other metropolitan bridges abolished, 1878-9; see Wales, 1843.

Tolosa. On the plain named Las Navas de Tolosa, near the Sierra Morena, S. Spain, Alfonso, king of Castile, aided by the kings of Aragon and Navarre, gained a great victory over the Moors, 16 July, 1212. This conflict is sometimes termed the battle of Muradal.

Tonga Isles (Pacific ocean). The king, George I., concluded a treaty with Germany, 1 Nov. 1876; with Great Britain, 29 Nov. 1879.

Tonic Sol-fa System, see Music.

Tonk (Rajpootana, India). The nawab and his minister, for a massacre of Hindoo chiefs, 1 Aug. 1867, were deposed by the British. In 1872 he demanded investigation, and his case came before parliament without any issue.

Tonnage, see Tunnage.

Tonometer, a delicate apparatus (consisting of 52 forks) for tuning musical instruments by marking the number of vibrations, was invented by H. Scheibler of Crefeld, and described in his "Tonmesser," 1834. It received little notice till M. Krönig removed some of the difficulties opposed to its successful use, and exhibited it at the International Exhibition of 1862.

Tonquin (South Asia), part of the kingdom of Annam. Here a French missionary bishop, Melchior, was murdered with great barbarity, 27 July, 1858; the abbe Neron was also murdered, 3 Nov. 1860; see Annam.

Tonsure, the clerical crown, adopted, it is said, in imitation of St. Peter, or of Christ's crown of thorns, was disapproved of in the fourth century as pertaining only to penitents, and not made essential till the end of the fifth or beginning of the sixth century.

Tontines, loans given for life-annuities with benefit of survivorship, invented by Laurence Tonti, a Neapolitan. They were first set on foot at Paris to reconcile the people to cardinal Mazarin's government by amusing them with the hope of becoming suddenly rich, 1653.—Voltaire. Tonti died in the Bastille after seven years' imprisonment. A Mr. Jennings was an original subscriber for a 100*l.* share in a tontine company, and, being the last survivor of the shareholders, his share produced him 3000*l.* per annum. He died, aged 103 years, 19 June, 1798, worth 2,115,244*l.*; see Alexandra Park.

Töplitz (Bohemia). Here were signed, in 1813, two treaties—one between Austria, Russia, and Prussia, 9 Sept.; and one between Great Britain and Austria, 3 Oct.

Topographical Society of London was inaugurated at the Mansion House, 28 Oct. 1880.

Torbanehill Mineral. Mr. Gillespie, of Torbanehill, granted a lease of all the coal in the estate to Messrs. Russell. In the course of working, the lessees extracted a combustible mineral of considerable value as a source of coal-gas, and realized a large profit in the sale of it as gas-coal. The lessor then denied that the mineral was coal, and disputed the right of the lessees to work it. At the trial in 1853 there was a great array of scientific men and practical gas engineers, and the evidence was most conflicting. One side maintained the mineral to be coal, the other that it was a bituminous schist. The judge set aside the scientific evidence, and the jury pronounced it to be coal. The authorities in Prussia have since pronounced it not to be coal.—Percy.

Tordesillas (near Valladolid). Here was signed, 7 June, 1494, a treaty modifying the boundary line which pope Alexander VI. had assigned, in May, 1493, in his division of the new world between Spain and Portugal.

Torgau (Saxony, N. Germany), the site of a battle between Frederick II. of Prussia and the Austrians, in which the former obtained a signal victory; the Austrian general, count Daun, being wounded, 3 Nov. 1760. He had, in 1757, obtained a great victory over the Prussian king. Torgau was taken by the allies in 1814, and given to Prussia, 1815.

Tories, a term given to a political party about 1678; see Whig. Dr. Johnson defines a Tory as one who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England. The Tories long maintained the doctrines of "divine hereditary indefeasible right, lineal succession, passive obedience, prerogative," etc.—Holingbroke. See Conservatives. For the chief Tory administrations, see Pitt, Perceval, Liverpool, Wellington, Peel, Derby, and Disraeli. During the American revolution, Americans who adhered to the cause of the mother-country were called Tories.

Toronto, the capital of Canada West, founded in 1794 as York; it received its present name in 1834. It was made a bishopric in 1839.

Torpedo-shells, a name given to explosives placed under ships, an invention ascribed to David Bushnell, an American, in 1777. His attempt to destroy H.M.S. Cerberus failed. The action of Fulton's torpedoes was successful in Britain, 1805; but their use was declined by the government. Torpedo-shells ignited by electricity were successfully employed in the war in the United States, 1861-5. On 4 Oct. 1865, Messrs. McKay & Beardslee tried them at Chatham before the duke of Somerset and others. An old vessel, the Terpsichore, was speedily sunk. The preliminary arrangements are considered rather complicated. Magneto-electricity was employed. Torpedoes made by prof. F. Abel, of Woolwich, were tried in May, 1866. A torpedo invented by Mr. Wightman and an Austrian tried and reported successful at Sheerness; an old hulk was sunk, 8 Oct. 1870. Torpedoes to be ignited from a distance by an electric battery are now made at Woolwich. A Turkish monitor in the Danube was blown up by a torpedo (see Russo-Turkish War, II.), 26 May, 1877.

Torres Strait, dividing Australia from Papua or

New Guinea, was discovered by Torres, a Spaniard, in June, 1606.

Torres Vedras (a city of Portugal). Near here Wellington, retreating from the French, took up a strong position, called the Lines of Torres Vedras, 10 Oct. 1810.

Tortola, see Virgin Isles.

Torture was only permitted by the Romans in the examination of slaves. It was applied to heretics by the Roman Catholic clergy, and was used in England so late as 1640 (when Archer, who took part in an attack on Lau's palace, was racked), and in Scotland until 1690. The trial by torture was abolished in Portugal, 1776; in France, by Louis XVI., in 1789; and in Sweden by Gustavus III., 1786. Gen. Picton was convicted of allowing the torture to be applied to Louisa Calderon, in Trinidad, in accordance with the old law of the island, at his trials, 21 Feb. 1806, and 11 June, 1808.

Total Abstinence, see Teetotaler.

Totnes (Devon): thought to be the Roman Ad Durium Amnem. It was held by Judhael de Totneis, who built the castle about 1085. It was disfranchised for gross corruption and bribery, by the Reform act, 15 Aug. 1867.

Toughened Glass, see Glass.

Toul, the Roman Tulli Leucorum, a fortified town on the Moselle, N.E. France; one of the most ancient in the empire. The city and diocese acquired great privileges from Charles the Simple, 925, when it was united with the German empire. It was reunited with France, 1552. The fortifications, begun in 1238, were rebuilt and enlarged in 1700, according to the plans of Vauban. After a vigorous resistance to the Germans, commencing 14 Aug. 1870, Toul surrendered with its garrison of 8000 men, 23 Sept., when the town was burning in twenty-three places. The Germans thus acquired an uninterrupted railway communication to Paris.

Toulon, the ancient Telo Martius (S. France), an important military port. It was taken by the constable of Bourbon, 1524, and by the emperor Charles V. in 1536. In 1707 it was bombarded by the allies, both by land and sea, by which almost the whole town was reduced to a heap of ruins, and several ships burned; but the allies were at last obliged to raise the siege. It surrendered 27 Aug. 1793, to the British admiral, lord Hood, who took possession both of the town and shipping, in the name of Louis XVII., under a stipulation to assist in restoring the French constitution of 1789. A conflict took place between the English and French forces, when the latter were repulsed, 15 Nov. 1793. Toulon was retaken by Bonaparte, 19 Dec., when great cruelties were exercised towards such of the inhabitants as were supposed to be favorable to the British. A naval battle off this port was fought 11 Feb. 1744, between the English under Mathews and Lestock, against the fleets of France and Spain: in this engagement the brave capt. Cornwall fell. The victory was lost by a misunderstanding between the English admirals. Mathews was afterwards dismissed for misconduct.

Toulouse, the ancient Tolosa (S. France), founded about 615 B.C.; was the capital of the Visigothic kings in A.D. 419; and was taken by Clovis in 508. The dukes of Aquitaine reigned here, 631-761. A university was established here, 1229, and a parliament, 1302. The inquisition was established here to extirpate heretics, 1229. The troubadours, or rhetoricians of Toulouse, had their origin about 850, and consisted of a fraternity of poets, whose art was extended throughout Europe, and gave rise to the Italian and French poetry; see Troubadours. The allied British and Spanish army entered this city on 12 April, immediately after the BATTLE OF TOULOUSE, fought between the British Peninsular army under lord Wellington, and the French led by marshal Soult, 10 April, 1814. The French were forced to retreat, after twelve hours' fighting. Neither of the commanders knew that Napoleon had abdicated the throne of France.

Toulouse. The county was created out of the kingdom of Aquitaine by Charlemagne, in 778. It enjoyed great prosperity till the dreadful war of the Albigenses (schisch see), when the count Raymond VI. was expelled, and Simon de Montfort became count. At his death, in 1218, Raymond VII. obtained his inheritance. His daughter Jane and her husband, Alphonse (brother of Louis IX. of France), dying without issue, the county of Toulouse was united to the French monarchy in 1271. A large part of Toulouse destroyed by an inundation of the Garonne (St. Cyprian like a sepulchre), 23 June, 1875.

Touraine, the garden of France, was conquered by the Visigoths about 480. It was ceded to Geoffroy, count of Anjou, 1041, and thus became the property of the Plantagenet kings of England. It was seized by Philip Augustus in 1203, and was made a duchy by John, 1360. It was finally united to the crown on the death of the duke of Anjou, 1584.

Tournaments, or Jousts, were martial sports of the ancient cavaliers. Tournament is derived from the French word tourner, "to turn round." Tournaments were frequent about 890, and were regulated by the emperor Henry I., about 919. Tournaments were introduced into England early in the twelfth century; prohibited by Henry II., but revived by Richard I., his son. Solemn tournaments were held by Edward III., 25 Sept. 1329, in London; and 19 Jan. 1344, at Windsor; and by Richard II. near the end of the 14th century; and also by Henry VIII., in May, 1513. The Lateran council published an article against their continuance in 1136. Henry II. of France, in a tilt with the comte de Montgomerie, had his eye struck out; an accident which caused the king's death in a few days, 29 June, 1559. Tournaments were then abolished in France.—A magnificent feast and tournament, under the auspices of Archibald, earl of Eglintoun, took place at Eglintoun castle, 29 Aug. 1839 and the following week: many of the visitors (among whom was the late emperor of the French) assumed the characters of ancient knights, lady Seymour being the "Queen of Beauty." Among the festivities at the marriage of prince Humbert, at Turin, was a tournament, 24 April, 1868. Tournaments held at the Agricultural hall, London, N. (for benefit of soldiers' widows, etc.), 21 June et seq. 1880, and 25 June et seq. 1881.

Tournay (S. Belgium) was very flourishing till it was ravaged by the barbarians in the fifth century. It has sustained many sieges. Taken by the allies in 1709, and ceded to the house of Austria by the treaty of Utrecht; but the Dutch were allowed to place a garrison in it, as one of the barrier towns. It was taken by the French under gen. La Bourdonnaye, 8 Nov. 1792. Several battles were fought near Tournay in May, 1793, and May, 1794.

Tourniquet (from tourner, to turn), an instrument for stopping the flow of blood in a limb, by tightening the bandage employed in amputations, is said to have been invented by Morelli at the siege of Besançon, 1674. J. L. Petit, in France, invented the screw tourniquet in 1718.

Tours, an ancient city, central France, near which Charles Martel gained a great victory over the Saracens, and saved Europe, 10 Oct. 732, and from which he acquired the name of Martel, signifying hammer. This conflict is also called the battle of Poitiers. When Paris was invested by the Germans, M. Crémieux and several of the members of the French government of defence went to Tours, together with the representatives of foreign powers, 18 Sept. 1870. On 9 Oct. these were joined by Gambetta, minister of the interior, afterwards of war (who escaped from Paris by a balloon, 7 Oct.). In consequence of the defeat of the army of the Loire near Orleans, the government removed to Bordeaux, 11 Dec.

Tower of London. The tradition that Julius Caesar founded a citadel here (about 54 a.c.) is very doubtful. A royal palace, consisting of no more than what is now called the White Tower, which appears to have been first marked out by William the Conqueror, 1076, was commenced in 1078, and completed by his son, William Rufus, who, in 1098, surrounded it with walls and a broad deep ditch. Several succeeding princes made additions to it, and king Edward III. built the church. In 1638 the old White Tower was rebuilt; and under king Charles II. it was thoroughly repaired, 1680–5, and a great number of additional buildings made to it. Here are the Armory, Jewel-office, and various other divisions and buildings of peculiar interest. Here took place many executions of illustrious persons, and many murders (king Henry VI., 1471; king Edward V. and his brother, 1485; sir Thomas Overbury, 1613). The armory and 280,000 stand of arms, etc., were destroyed by fire, 30 Oct. 1841. The "New Buildings" in the Tower were completed in 1850; see Blood; for Tower-subways, see Thames. The more recent constables of the Tower have been the duke of Wellington, lord Combermere, and sir John Burgoyne. Sir George Pollock, constable Oct. 1871, died 6 Oct. 1872; sir William Gomm, 31 Oct. 1872; died 15 March, 1875; sir Charles Yorke, April, 1875; died 20 Nov. 1880; sir W. Fenwick Williams, April, 1881.

The menagerie, long here, was removed to the Zoological Gardens, 1831; the state papers were removed to the Record Office, 1857. Opened free to the public (Mondays and Saturdays) from 3 April, 1875.

Towers. That of Babel, the first of which we read, built in the plains of Shinar (Gen. xi.), 2257 a.c.; see Babel. The Tower of the Winds at Athens, built 550 a.c.; the Tower of Pharos (see Pharos), 280 a.c. The round towers in Ireland were the only structures of stone found at the arrival of the English, 1169, except some buildings in the maritime towns founded by the Danes. These towers are tall hollow pillars, nearly cylindrical, but narrowing towards the top; pierced with lateral holes to admit the light, and covered with conical roofs. Fifty-six of them still remain, from 50 to 130 feet high; see Pisa.

Townley Marbles, in the British Museum, were purchased in 1805 and 1814.

Towton (Yorkshire), where a sanguinary battle was fought, 29 March, 1461, between the houses of York (Edward IV.) and Lancaster (Henry VI.); to the latter of whom it was fatal, and on whose side more than 37,000 fell. Edward issued orders to give no quarter, and the most merciless slaughter ensued. Henry and his queen, Margaret, fled to Scotland; and Edward IV. was settled on the throne.

Toxophilites (from τόξον, a bow, and φίλος, a lover), a society established by sir Aston Lever in 1781. In 1834 they took grounds in the inner circle of Regent's park, and built the archery lodge. They possess a very curious piece of plate, given by Catherine, queen of Charles II., to be shot for by the Finsbury archers, of whom the Toxophilites are the representatives.

Tract Societies. The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge was founded in 1698; the Religious Tract Society, London, in 1799; and other similar societies since.

Tractarianism, a term applied to certain opinions on church matters propounded in the "Tracts for the Times," of which ninety numbers were published, 1833–41. The principal writers were the revs. Dr. E. Pusey, J. H. Newman, J. Keble, J. Froude, and I. Williams—all of the University of Oxford; see Puseyism. The tracts (especially No. 90) were condemned by the authorities at Oxford, 15 March, 1841.

Traction-engines were used on common roads in London in 1860, but afterwards restricted. In Aug. 1862 one of Bray's traction-engines conveyed through the city a mass of iron which would have required 29 horses; see Road-steamers and Railways.

Trade and Plantations, BOARD OF. Cromwell seems to have given the first notions of a board of trade: in 1655 he appointed his son Richard, with many lords of his council, judges, and gentlemen, and about twenty merchants of London, York, Newcastle, Yarmouth, Dover, etc., to meet and consider by what means the trade and navigation of the republic might be best promoted.—Thomas's Notes of the Rolls. Charles II., on his restoration, established a council of trade for keeping a control over the whole commerce of the nation, 1680; he afterwards instituted a board of trade and plantations, which was remodelled by William III. This board was abolished in 1782; and a new council for the affairs of trade on its present plan was appointed, 2 Sept. 1786.

The parliamentary recommendation in 1880 to appoint a "minister of trade and commerce" was dropped by Mr. Gladstone in March, 1881.

Trade Congresses, see Working-men.

Trade of Great Britain, see Exports and Imports. In 1861 the value of the two amounted to 377,017,522*l.*; in 1871 to 614,590,180*l.*; in 1875 to 655,551,900*l.*; in 1877 to 646,765,702*l.*; in 1879, 631,775,239*l.*; see Commerce.

Trade with the United States doubled in value in ten years. 1877, 77,805,000*l.*; 1878, 89,070,000*l.*

Trade-marks Registration Act passed 13 Aug. 1875. The registration office, Quality court, Chancery lane (Mr. H. Reader Lack, registrar), was opened 1 Jan. 1876; a similar act passed in the United States, 1881.

Trades' Museums. The formation of one was undertaken in 1853, jointly by the commissioners of the Great Exhibition of 1851, and the Society of Arts. The animal department was opened 17 May, 1855, when a paper on the mutual relations of trade and manufactures was read by prof. E. Solly. The contents of this museum were removed to the South Kensington Museum, which was opened 24 June, 1857. The French "Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers" was established 1795.

Trades' Unions. By 6 Geo. IV. c. 129 (1825), the combination laws were repealed, and other provisions made. As trades' unions formed for maintaining the rate of wages, etc., are not recognized by law, a commission (including lord Elcho, Thomas Hughes, and others, with sir Wm. Erie as chairman) was appointed to inquire into their constitution, 14 Feb. 1867, and an act to facilitate their proceedings was passed 5 April following. Their reports were issued during the year, disclosing the existence of numerous practices, with great intimidation; see Sheffield and Manchester. An act to protect union funds from embezzlement was passed in 1869. A trade-union act passed 29 June, 1871; amended by act passed 30 June, 1876. To counteract the influence of trades' unions, the National Federation of Employers was formed, Dec. 1873; see Employers and Working-men.

Trafalgar, CAPE (S. Spain), off which a great naval victory was gained by the British, under Nelson, over the combined fleets of France and Spain, commanded by admiral Villeneuve and two Spanish admirals, 21 Oct. 1805. The enemy's force was eighteen French and fifteen Spanish vessels, all of the line; that of the British, twenty-seven ships. After a protracted fight, Villeneuve and the other admirals were taken, and nineteen of their ships captured, sunk, or destroyed. Nelson was killed, and admiral Collingwood succeeded to the command. Nelson's ship was the Victory; and his last signal was, "England expects every man will do his duty;" see Nelson.—TRAFALGAR SQUARE, London, begun 1829; completed 1845. Grand Hotel opened by lord mayor, 29 May, 1880.

Traffic in the metropolis is now regulated by the Metropolitan Streets act, passed 20 Aug. 1867.

Tragedy, see Drama.

Training-schools, begun by the National Society, 1811. One was founded at Battersea in 1840, by sir

J. Kay Shuttleworth, and Mr. E. C. Tufnell; the latter, who was then in the Poor Law Commission, devoting a year's salary towards the expenses. Mr. Mann stated, in 1855, that there were about forty of these schools in different parts of the country.

Training-ships, see Marine Society and Chichester.

Trajan's Column (in Rome), erected 114, by the Roman senate and people, to commemorate his victories, and executed by Apollodorus. It was built in the square called the Forum Trajanum; it is of the Tuscan order, and from its base, exclusive of the statue and pedestal, is 127½ feet high.

Tram-roads. As Mr. Benjamin Outram, father of sir James, the Indian general, in 1800, made improvements in the system of railways for common vehicles in the north of England, the name is ascribed to him, but it is said to have existed in Derbyshire before. The iron tram-road from Croydon to Wandsworth was completed on 24 July, 1801. Street railways or tramways for omnibuses drawn by horses, previously established by Mr. Train in New York (see New York), were opened by him at Birkenhead, Cheshire, 30 Aug. 1860, and at Bayswater, London, 23 March, 1861. (See Ireland, 1868.) A street railway bill was rejected by the house of commons in April, 1861. Several of these railways existed for a time in various parts of the metropolis in 1861, but were all taken up in 1862. An act to facilitate the construction of tramways passed 9 Aug. 1870. Tramways from Brixton to Kennington, and from White-chapel to Bow, were opened 9 May, 1870; and others since. Their introduction into the city was much recommended, but opposed, March-May, 1873. Dividend of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company, 8 per cent., Aug. 1876. The use of steam locomotives proposed; approved in Paris, July, 1876.

Elevated street railways erected in New York, 1877-8. 233 miles of tramways constructed in England and Wales, 1870-80.

Tranquebar (East Indies), the Danish settlement here, founded in 1618, was purchased by the English in 1845.

Transfiguration. The change of Christ's appearance on Mount Tabor, in the presence of Peter, James, and John, A.D. 32 (Matt. xvii.). The feast of the Transfiguration, kept on 6 Aug., was instituted by pope Calixtus II. in 1455.

Transfusion of Blood, see Blood.

Transit, see Venus.

Translation to HEAVEN. The translation of Enoch to heaven at the age of 365 years, 3017 B.C. The prophet Elijah was translated to heaven in a chariot of fire, 896 B.C.—The possibility of translation to the abode of eternal life has been maintained by some extravagant enthusiasts. The Irish house of commons expelled Mr. Asgill from his seat for his book asserting the possibility of translation to the other world without death, 1708.

Transpadane Republic, comprising Lombardy and part of the Venetian territories, was established by Bonaparte after his victory at Lodi, 10 May, 1796. With the Cispadane Republic, it merged into the Cisalpine Republic, Oct. 1797.

Transportation, see Banishment. Judges were given the power of sentencing offenders to transportation "into any of his majesty's dominions in North America," by 18 Charles II. c. 8 (1666), and by 4 Geo. I. c. 11 (1718). Transportation ceased in 1775, but was revived in 1786. The reception of convicts was successfully refused by the Cape of Good Hope (in 1849), and by the Australian colonies (1864). Transportation, even to West Australia, where labor is wanted, ceased after a few years, through the fierce opposition of the eastern colonies. In consequence of the difficulty then experienced in transporting felons, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 was passed to provide other punishment—namely, penal servirtude, empowering her majesty to grant pardon to offenders under certain conditions, and licenses to others to be at large, such licenses being liable to be revoked if necessary; and many have been. These licenses are termed "tickets of leave." The system was much assailed in Oct. and Nov. 1862, on account of violent crimes being traced to *ticket-of-leave*ers; see Crime.

John Eyre, esq., a man of fortune, was sentenced to transportation for stealing a few quires of paper.—Phillips.....1 Nov. 1771
The rev. Dr. Halloran, tutor to the earl of Chesterfield, was transported for forging a frank (10d. postage).

9 Sept. 1818
The first transportation of felons to Botany Bay was in May, 1787; where governor Phillip arrived with about 600 on 20 Jan. 1788; convicts were afterwards sent to Van Diemen's Land, Norfolk Island, etc.

Returning from transportation was punishable with death until 5 Will. IV. c. 67, Aug. 1834, when an act was passed making the offence punishable by transportation for life.

A shipment of convicts to West Australia (which had already received 10,000) in 1867.

Transubstantiation, the doctrine of the "real presence." That the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into the very flesh and blood of Christ by the consecration, was broached in the days of Gregory III. (731), and accepted by Amalarius and Rabbertus (about 830), but rejected by Rabanus Maurus, Johannes Scotus Erigena, Berengarius, Wicliffe, and others. In the Lateran council, held at Rome by Innocent III., the word "Transubstantiation" was used to express this doctrine, which was decreed to be incontrovertible; and all who opposed it were condemned as heretics. This was confirmed by the Council of Trent, 18 Jan. 1562. John Huss, Jerome of Prague, and other martyrs of the Reformation, suffered for denying this dogma, which is renounced by the Church of England (28th article), and by all Protestant dissenters. The declaration against transubstantiation, invocation of the saints, and the sacrifice of the mass, on taking any civil office, was abolished by an act passed 25 July, 1867; see Sacrament.

Luther maintained the doctrine of consubstantiation—viz., that, after consecration, the body and blood of Christ are substantially present in the bread and wine. He was opposed by Bucer, Carlstadt, Zwingle, and others (termed sacramentarians), who asserted that the Lord's supper is only a commemorative rite.

Transylvania, an Austrian province, was part of the ancient Dacia (which see). In 1526, John Zapoly rendered himself independent of the emperor Ferdinand I. by the aid of the Turks. His successors ruled with much difficulty till Jan. 1699, when the emperor Leopold I., by the treaty of Carlowitz, finally incorporated Transylvania into the Austrian dominions. The Transylvanian deputies did not take their seat in the Austrian parliament till 20 Oct. 1863. A decree for the convocation of the Transylvanian diet was issued 12 Sept. 1865. The inhabitants are about 1,100,000 ignorant Roumanians, 1,500,000 Saxon colonists, and 550,000 Magyars, the last being the ruling class. The union of Transylvania with Hungary in 1848, which has caused much discontent, was ratified by the Transylvanian diet, 25 Dec. 1866.

Trappists. The first abbey of La Trappe in Normandy was founded, in 1140, by Rotrou, comte de Perche. The present order of Trappists owes its origin to the learned Jean le Bouthillier de la Rancé (editor of Amusements when aged 14), who renounced the world, and sold all his property, giving the proceeds to the abbey of La Trappe, to which he retired in 1662, to live there in great austerity. After several efforts he succeeded in reforming the monks, and in establishing a new rule, which commands silence, prayer, reading, and manual labor, and which forbids study, wine, fish, etc. Rancé was born in 1620, and died in 1700. The Trappists' new building was consecrated in Aug. 1833.

A number of these monks, driven from France in the revolution of 1790, were received by Mr. Wold of Lulworth, Dorset.

shire, who gave them some land to cultivate and a habitation, where they remained till 1815. This order was charged with rebellion and conspiracy in France, and sixty-four English and Irish Trappists were shipped by the French government at Paimbœuf, 19 Nov., and were landed from the Hebe, French frigate, at Cork, 30 Nov. 1831. They established themselves at Mount Mellary, county of Waterford.

Trasimene, see Thrasymene.

Trautenau (Bohemia). On 27 June, 1866, the first corps of the army of the crown-prince of Prussia seized Trautenau, but was defeated and repulsed by the Austrians under Gablenz; on the 28th the Prussians defeated the Austrians with great loss.

Travellers' Club (Pall Mall), established in 1815. A member must have "travelled out of the British islands to a distance of at least 500 miles from London in a direct line."

Travelling IN ENGLAND. In 1707 it took in summer one day, in winter nearly two days, to travel from London to Oxford (55 miles). In 1817 the journey was accomplished in six or seven hours. By the Great Western railway express (63 miles) it is done in 1½ hour. In 1828 a gentleman travelled from Newcastle to London (273 miles) inside the best coach in 35 hours, at an expense of 6*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, or 6*d.* per mile (including dinner, etc.). In 1857 the charge of the Great Northern railway (275½ miles) first-class express (6 hours) was 2*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.*

Tread-mill, an invention of the Chinese to raise water for the irrigation of the fields. The complicated tread-mill introduced into the prisons of Great Britain is the invention of Mr. (afterwards sir William) Cubitt, of Ipswich. It was erected at Brixton jail, 1817, and soon afterwards in other large prisons.

Treason, see High-treason.—PETTY TREASON (a term abolished in 1828, defined by the statute of 25 Edw. III. 1352) was a wife's murder of her husband, a servant's murder of his master, and an ecclesiastical person's murder of his prelate or other superior.

Treason-felony. By the Crown and Government Security act, 11 Vict. c. 12 (1848), certain treasons heretofore punishable with death were mitigated to felonies, and subjected to transportation or imprisonment. The Fenians in Ireland were tried under this act; see Trials, 1865.

Treasurer of England, LORD HIGH, the third great officer of the crown, a lord by virtue of his office, having the custody of the king's treasure, governing the upper court of exchequer, and formerly sitting judicially among the barons. The first lord high treasurer in England was Odo, earl of Kent, in the reign of William I. This great trust is now confided to a commission, and is vested in five persons, called "lords commissioners for executing the office of lord high treasurer," and of these the chancellor of the exchequer is usually one, the first lord being usually the premier; see Administrations, for a succession of these officers. A third lord of the treasury (Mr. Stansfeld) was appointed, Dec. 1868, succeeded by Mr. W. H. Gladstone, Dec. 1869.

The first of this rank in IRELAND was John de St. John, Henry III. 1217; the last, William, duke of Devonshire, 1766; vice-treasurers were appointed till 1789; then commissioners till 1816, when the revenues of Great Britain and Ireland were united.

The first lord high treasurer of SCOTLAND was sir Walter Ogilvie, appointed by James I. in 1420; the last, in 1641, John, earl of Traquair; afterwards commissioners were appointed.

Treasurer of the Chamber, formerly an officer of great consideration, and always a member of the privy council. He discharged the bills of all the king's tradesmen, and had his office in Cleveland row, in the vicinity of the royal palace. His duties were transferred and the office suppressed at the same time with the offices of master of the great wardrobe and cofferer of the household, in 1782.—Beaton.

Treaties. The first formal and written treaty made in England with any foreign nation was entered into at Kingston between Henry III. and the dauphin of France (then in England and leagued with the barons), 11 Sept. 1217. The first commercial treaty was with Guy, earl of Flanders, 2 Edw. 1274; the second with Portugal and Spain, 1308.—Anderson. The chief treaties of the nations of Europe will be found described in their respective places. The following forms an index; see Coalitions, Commerce, Leagues, etc.

Trebia, now Trebbia, a river in N. Italy, near which Hannibal defeated the Roman consul Sempronius, 218 B.C.; and Suwarow, after a struggle, defeated the French marshal MacDonald and compelled him to retreat, 17 19 June, 1799.

Trebizond, a port of Asia Minor in the Black Sea, was colonized by the Greeks, and became subject to the kings of Pontus. It enjoyed self-government under the Roman empire, and when the Latins took Constantinople, in 1204, it became the seat of an empire which endured till 1461, when it was conquered by the Turks under Mahomet I.

Trees IN LONDON. Many were planted by John Evelyn in the Mall, St. James's, etc. He recommended this in his "Fumifugium," published 1661. The planting of rows of trees in suburban roads began in 1875.

Trees of Liberty were planted in Paris and other parts of France during the revolutionary eras, 1790 and 1848. These trees were cut down in Paris in Jan. 1850, when riots ensued; put down by the military.

Trent (the ancient Tridentum), in the Tyrol, belongs to Austria. The council held here is reckoned in the Roman Catholic church as the 18th general council. Its decisions have been implicitly received as the standard of faith, morals, and discipline in that church. It first sat 13 Dec. 1545, and continued (with interruptions) under pope Paul III., Julius III., and Pius IV. to 4 Dec. 1563; its last sitting, the 25th. A jubilee in relation to this council was celebrated in June, 1863. Trent was several times taken during the French war.

At this council was decreed, with anathemas, the canon of Scripture (including the Apocrypha), and the church its sole interpreter; the traditions to be equal with Scripture; the seven sacraments (baptism, confirmation, the Lord's supper, penance, extreme unction, orders, and matrimony), transubstantiation, purgatory, indulgences, celibacy of the clergy, auricular confession, etc.

"Trent" STEAMER, see United States, Nov.-Dec. 1861.

Trenton, BATTLE OF. Washington and his army had been driven from the Hudson to the Delaware and beyond, before Cornwallis and a pursuing army. At Trenton, a Hessian force, 1500 strong, under col. Rahl, and a troop of 500 light-horsemen, were stationed. Count Donop, another German commander, was a few miles below with a considerable force. On the evening of Christmas, 1776, Washington marched back to the Delaware, a few miles above Trenton, with 2400 men and artillery, and before sunrise the next morning had crossed and was on his way towards Trenton. The enemy were surprised. A severe engagement ensued. The British light-horse fled; forty or fifty Hessians were killed or fatally wounded (Rahl among the latter), and a thousand made prisoners. This was an inspiring victory at a dark moment.

Trevecca, see Cheshunt.

Trèves, or Trier, the Roman Treviri, in Rhenish Prussia, was a prosperous city of the Gauls, 12 B.C. The emperor Gallienus held his court here, A.D. 255. The church of St. Simeon dates from the fourth century. Trèves was made an electorate in the fourteenth century, and became subject to the archbishop in 1585. Councils held here, 385-1423. The archbishopric is said to have been founded before the seventh century, and to be the oldest in Germany. After various changes, Trèves was acquired by Prussia, June, 1815. In 1844, much excitement was occasioned by miracles said to have been wrought by a "holy coat."

"Tria Juncta in Uno" (three joined in one), the motto of the knights of the military order of the Bath, signifying "faith, hope, and charity;" see Bath.

Trial at Bar signifies by the whole court or a plurality of judges. This plan was adopted at Bristol after the riots in 1832; also at O'Connell's trial, 1844; and arranged for the trial of the claimant of the Tichborne estates for perjury, in April, 1873.

Trials. Regulations for conducting trials were made by Lothaire and Edric, kings of Kent, about 673 to 680. Alfred the Great is said to have begun trial by jury; but there is good evidence of such trials before his time. Arrangements were made for more speedy trials by "the Winter Assizes act," 1876; see Appeal.

 Gorham v. the bishop of Exeter; ecclesiastical case; judgment given in the Court of Arches against the plaintiff. . . . 2 Aug. "
 [The bishop had refused to institute the rev. Mr. Gorham into the living of Brampton-Speke, in Devonshire, alleging want of orthodoxy in the plaintiff, who denied that spiritual regeneration was conferred by baptism; the court held that the charge against the plaintiff of holding false doctrine was proved, and that the bishop was justified in his refusal. Mr. Gorham appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which pronounced its opinion (8 March, 1850) that "the doctrine held by Mr. Gorham was not contrary or repugnant to the declared doctrine of the church of England, and that Mr. Gorham ought not, by reason of the doctrine held by him, to have been refused admission to the vicarage of Brampton Speke." This decision led to subsequent proceedings in the three courts of law, successively, for a rule to show cause why a prohibition should not issue, directed to the judge of the Arches court, and to the archbishop of Canterbury, against giving effect to the judgment of her majesty in council. The rule was refused in each court, and in the end Mr. Gorham was instituted into the vicarage in question, 7 Aug. 1850.]

- Patience Swynfen v. F. H. Swynfen; a will case; the will affirmed 27 July, 1858
- [The plaintiff was Patience Swynfen, widow of Henry John Swynfen, son of the testator, Samuel Swynfen. Her husband died 15 June, 1854, and his father on 16 July following, having made a will 19 days before his death, devising the Swynfen estate (worth about 60,000l.) to his son's wife, but leaving a large amount of personal estate undisposed of. The defendant, F. H. Swynfen, son of the testator's eldest half-brother, claimed the estate as heir-at-law on the ground of the testator's insanity. The issue was brought to trial in March, 1856; but proceedings were stayed by Mrs. Swynfen's counsel, sir F. Theiger, entering into an agreement with the opposite counsel, sir Alexander Cockburn, without her consent, and in defiance of her instructions. After various proceedings, the court of chancery ordered a new trial. She gained her cause, mainly through the energy of her counsel, Mr. Charles R. Kennedy, to whom she had promised to pay 20,000l. for his extraordinary services. Mrs. Swynfen, however, married a Mr. Broun, and repudiated Mr. Kennedy's claim. The latter, in an action against her, obtained a verdict in his favor on 29 March, 1862, which was, on appeal, finally reversed in Feb. 1864. Mrs. Swynfen was consulted in an action brought against her counsel (afterwards lord Chelmsford and lord-chancellor), in July, 1862, and June, 1860.]

Tribunes of the People (Tribuni plebis), magistrates of Rome, first chosen from among the commons to represent them, 494 B.C., when the people, after a quarrel with the senators, had retired to Mons Sacer. The first two tribunes were C. Licinius and L. Albinus, but their number was soon after raised to five, and 87 years after to ten, which number remained fixed. The office was annual, and as the first had been created on the 4th of the ides of December, that day was chosen for the election. In A.D. 1847 Nicolo di Rienzi assumed absolute power in Rome as tribune of the people, and reformed many abuses; but, committing extravagances, he lost his popularity and was compelled to abdicate. He returned to Rome and was assassinated, 8 Sept. 1848.

Trichiniasis, a fatal disease, occasioned by eating raw or underdone pork containing a minute worm named Trichina spiralis. Prof. Owen discovered these worms in cysts, in human muscle, in 1832. The trichinae are thoroughly destroyed by proper cooking. The disease excited much attention in 1865, and was the subject of a lecture by Dr. Thudichum at the Society of Arts on 18 April, 1866.

Tricolor Flag (red, white, and blue), adopted by France, 1789.

Tricoteuses (knitters), a name given to a number of French republican females, who zealously attended political meetings and executions in 1792, knitting at intervals.

Tridentine, see Trent and Catechism.

Triennial Parliaments. On 15 Feb. 1641, an act was passed providing for the meeting of a parliament at least once in three years. This law was broken by the Long Parliament, and was repealed in 1664. Another triennial bill, passed in 1694, was repealed by the Septennial act, 1716; see Parliaments and Septennial Parliaments.

Trieste, an Austrian port on the Adriatic, declared a free port by the emperor Charles VI. 1719, confirmed by Maria Theresa in 1750. It was held by the French in 1797 and 1805. Since the establishment of the overland mail to India, it has risen to great commercial importance. After various changes of rulers it was restored to Austria in 1814; see Lloyd's, note.

Trigonometrical Survey, see Ordinance.

Trimmer, a term applied to Charles Montague, earl of Halifax, and others who held similar political opinions, midway between those of the extreme Whigs and Tories, about the latter part of the seventeenth century. He assumed the title as an honor, asserting that it could be rightly given to the British constitution and church. Macaulay says that Halifax was a trimmer on principle, and not a renegade. He died in 1715.

Trinacria, a name of Sicily. The title, "King of Trinacria," was temporarily assumed by Frederick II. (1302), and Frederick III. (1373).

Trincomalee (Ceylon) was taken from the Dutch by the English, in 1782; it was retaken by the French the same year, but was restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1783. It surrendered to the British under col. Stewart, 26 Aug. 1795, and was confirmed to England by the peace of Amiens in 1802; see Ceylon. Of a series of actions off Trincomalee between sir Edward Hughes and the French admiral Suffren, one was fought 18 Feb. 1782, the enemy having eleven ships to nine; on 12 April following, they had eighteen ships to eleven; and on 6 July same year, they had fifteen ships to twelve. In all these conflicts the French were defeated.

Trinidad, an island in the West Indies, discovered by Columbus in 1498, was taken from the Spaniards by sir Walter Raleigh in 1595; by the French from the English in 1676. Taken by the British, with four ships of the line, and a military force under command of sir Ralph Abercromby, to whom the island capitulated, 18 Feb. 1797; they captured two and burned three Spanish ships of war in the harbor. This possession was confirmed to England by the peace of Amiens in 1802. The insurrection of the negroes occurred 4 Jan. 1832. Population in 1861, 84,438. Governor, hon. Arthur H. Gordon, 1866; James R. Longden, 1870; sir H. T. Irving, 1874, sir Sandford Freeling, 1880.

Trinity and Trinitarians. Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, who flourished in the second century, was the first who used the term Trinity to express the three sacred persons in the Godhead. His "Defence of Christianity" was edited by Gesner, at Zurich, in 1546.—Watkins. An order of the Trinity, termed Mathurins, was founded about 1198 by John de Matha and Felix de Valois. The Trinity fraternity, originally of fifteen persons, was instituted at Rome by St. Philip Neri in 1548. The act to exempt from penalties persons denying the doctrine of the Trinity (such as Unitarians and Swedenborgians) passed in 1813. Trinitarian Bible Society founded, 1831.

Trinity College, Dublin, called the University; grant of the Augustine monastery of All-Saints within the suburbs for erecting this college, conferred by queen Elizabeth, 1591. First stone laid by Thomas Smith, mayor of Dublin, 1 Jan. 1593. New charter, 1637. Made a barrack for soldiers, 1689.—Burns. The principal or west front erected, 1759. Library erected, 1732. This college grants degrees upon examination without residence. The Roman Catholics desire exemption from mixed education and special privileges. Great changes were proposed by the Irish University bill, which was brought into parliament Feb. 1873, but withdrawn. Religious tests were abolished in the same year.

A proposal to establish a Roman Catholic college within the university was negatived by the senate (74-7).

The Church Choral Society incorporated as Trinity College, London. 1873

Trinity House, LONDON, founded by sir Thomas Spert, 1512, as an "association for piloting ships," was incorporated in 1514, and reincorporated in 1604, 1660, and 1685. The present Trinity House was erected in 1795. By their charter the brethren of the Trinity House have the power of examining, licensing, and regulating pilots, and of erecting beacons and light-houses, and of placing buoys in the channels and rivers. Spert, the first master, died 8 Sept. 1541.—TRINITY HORSE, originally guilds or fraternities, founded at Deptford, Hull, and Newcastle, were incorporated by Henry VIII., 1536-41.

Trinity Sunday, the Sunday following Whitsunday. The festival of the Holy Trinity was instituted by pope Gregory IV., in 828, on his ascending the papal chair, and is observed by the Latin and Protestant churches on the Sunday next following Pentecost or Whitsuntide, of which, originally, it was merely an octave. The observance of the festival was first enjoined in the council of Arles, 1260. It was appointed to be held on the present day by pope John XXI., in 1334.

Trinobantes, a British tribe which occupied Middlesex and Essex, and joined in opposing the invasion of Julius Cæsar, 54 B.C., but soon submitted. They joined Ibadicea and were defeated by Suetonius Paulinus near London, 61.

Tripartite Treaty, name given to treaty of Paris, 1856.

Triple Alliance was ratified between the States-General and England against France, for the protection of the Spanish Netherlands; Sweden afterwards joining the league, it was known as the Triple Alliance, 23 Jan. 1668.—Another Triple Alliance was that between England, Holland, and France against Spain, Jan. 1717.—Another between Great Britain, Russia, and Austria, 28 Sept. 1795.

Tripoli (three cities). I., in Syria, comprised three quarters built by the Tyrians, Sidonians, and Arabians; was taken by the Crusaders, 1109, and made a county for Raymond of Toulouse. It was conquered by the Egyptians in 1832; restored to the Porte, 1835; surrendered to the British, 1841.—II., a Turkish province, N. Africa, comprised the cities Sabrata, Cæa (the present Tripoli, the capital), and Leptis (the ancient Tripolitana); after having been held by Greeks, Romans, Vandals, and Saracens, it was conquered and annexed by the Turks, 1551. Hannef Bey, pacha in 1741, made himself independent, and the government remained in his family till 1835, when Tripoli was restored to nominal subjugation to the sultan. Population (1871) about 1,150,000.

Tripolitza (Greece), was stormed by the Greeks, who committed dreadful cruelties, 5 Oct. 1831; retaken by the Egyptians, 30 June, 1832; given up to the Greeks, 1838.

Triremes, galleys with three banks of oars, are said to have been invented by the Corinthians, 784 or 700 B.C.

Triumphs were granted by the Roman senate to generals of armies after they had won great victories. They were received into the city with great magnificence and public acclamations. There were the great, called the Triumph; and the less, the Ovation; see Ovation.

Triumvirate, Roman. In 60 B.C., Julius Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus formed a coalition to rule the state. This lasted ten years, and the civil war ensued. The second triumvirate, 48 B.C., was formed by Octavius Cæsar, Mark Antony, and Lepidus, through whom the Romans totally lost their liberty. Lepidus was expelled in 36; Antony was subdued in 31, and Octavius made himself absolute; see Rome. In Feb. 1849, a triumvirate was appointed at Rome, consisting of Joseph Mazzini, Armellini, and Saffi, which resigned on 1 July, 1849, when the city was taken by the French.

Trivium, see Arts.

Trocadero (Paris), a mound on the right bank of the Seine, so named in memory of a fort near Cadix, captured by the French while suppressing the insurrection in 1823. On this ground was erected the palace of the "Trocadero," in connection with the international exhibition of 1878; see Paris.

Troppau, CONGRESS OF, in Austrian Silesia. The emperors Francis of Austria and Alexander of Russia met at Troppau, 20 Oct. 1820. The congress between them and the king of Prussia, against Naples, took place 10 Nov.; and the conference was transferred to Laybach, as nearer to Italy, 17 Dec. 1820; see Laybach.

Troubadours and Trouvères (from trouver, to find or invent), the poets of the Middle Ages (from the eleventh to the fifteenth century). The former flourished in the south of France and north of Spain, and used the Langue d'oc (that is, oc for oui, yes); the latter flourished in the north of France, and used the Langue d'oïl (that is, oïl for oui). The Troubadours produced romances, but excelled chiefly in lyric poetry; the Trouvères excelled in romances, several of which are extant; as the Brut d'Angleterre, and the Ron, by Wace; the "Romance of the Rose," by Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meung. The Troubadours were usually accompanied by Jongleurs, who sang their masters' verses, with the accompaniment of the guitar. Histories of these French poets, and specimens of their works, have been published in France. These poets, although frequently very licentious, tended to promote civilization during those warlike times.

Troy Weight. The Romans introduced their ounce, our avoirdupois ounce, into Britain. The present ounce was brought from Grand Cairo into Europe, about the time of the Crusades, 1095, and was first adopted at Troyes, a city of France, whence the name. It is used to weigh gold, silver, and precious stones. The Troy weight, Scots, was established by James VI. (our James I.) in 1618; see Standard.

Troyes (central France), where a treaty was concluded between England, France, and Burgundy, whereby it was stipulated that Henry V. should marry Catherine, daughter of Charles VI., be appointed regent of France, and, after the death of Charles, should inherit the crown, 21 May, 1420. Troyes was taken by the allied armies, 7 Feb.; retaken by Napoleon, 30 Feb.; and again taken by the allies, 4 March, 1814.

Truce of God (Ferra, or Truga Dei), a term given to a cessation of the private feuds and conflicts so general during the Middle Ages all over Europe, said to have been strongly advocated by the bishop of Aquitaine, in 1082. The clergy strenuously exerted their influence for the purpose. A synod at Roussillon, 1087, decreed that none should attack his enemy between Saturday evening (at noon) and Monday morning (at the hour of prime). Similar regulations were adopted in England, 1042 (sometimes Friday and Wednesday being chosen for the time). The truce of God was confirmed by many councils of the church, especially the Lateran Council, in 1179.

Truck System of paying workmen's wages in goods (sold at "tommy-shops") instead of money, was prohibited by parliament in 1831. By the Truck act, a commission to inquire into its alleged prevalence was appointed; act passed 10 Aug. 1870.

Trumpet. Some of the Greek historians ascribe the invention of the trumpet to the Tyrrhenians, and others to the Egyptians. It was in use in the time of Homer. First torches, then shells of fish, sounded like trumpets, were the signals in primitive wars.—Potter. The Jewish feast of trumpets was appointed 1490 B.C. (Lev. xxiii. 24). Offa, king of Mercia, is said to have had trumpets sounded before him when travelling, about A.D. 790. The speaking-trumpet is said to have been used by Alexander the Great in 336 B.C.; improved by Kircher in A.D. 1652; by Salland, 1654; and philosophically explained by Morland, 1671.

Trumpet-flower, Bignonia radiosa, was brought from North America, about 1640. The Trumpet Hensy-suckle, Lonicera sempervivens, came from North America in 1656. The Bignonia Capensis was brought to England from the Cape in 1828. The Large-flowered Trumpet-flower, or Bignonia grandiflora, was brought from China in 1800.

Truro (W. Cornwall). The town was founded by Richard de Lucy, chief-justice of England in the twelfth century, and chartered by Reginald, earl of Cornwall, illegitimate son of Henry I. An act to provide for the foundation of a bishopric of Truro passed 11 Aug. 1878, and, money sufficient for its endowment having been subscribed, the see was constituted by order in council, 9 Dec. same year. Truro was made a city Aug. 1877.

Truss. A transverse spring-truss for ruptures was patented by Robert Brand in 1771, and by many other persons since. The National Truss Society, to assist indigent persons, was established in 1786; and many similar societies since.

Tuam (W. Ireland). St. Jarlath, the son of Loga, who lived about 501, is looked upon as the first founder of the cathedral of Tuam, though the abbey is said to have been founded in 487. The church was anciently called Tuam-da-Guand. In 1151, Edan O'Hoisin was the first archbishop, at least the first who received the pall, for some of his predecessors are sometimes called bishops of Connaught, and sometimes archbishops, by Irish historians. The see of Mayo was annexed to Tuam in 1559. Tuam is valued in the king's books, by an extent returned anno 28 Eliz., at 50*l.* sterling per annum.—Beaton. It ceased to be archiepiscopal, conformably with the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. 1833; and is now a bishopric only, to which Killala and Achoury, a joint see, has been added; see Archbishops. New Protestant cathedral of St. Mary, consecrated by the bishop, the Hon. Dr. Charles B. Bernard, 9 Oct. 1878.

Tubman, see Postman.

Tubular Bridges. The Britannia tubular suspension bridge, then the most wonderful enterprise in engineering in the world, was constructed, 1846-50 (Mr. R. Stephenson and Mr. Fairbairn, engineers), about a mile southward of the Menai Strait suspension bridge.*

On the Britannia rock, near the centre of the Menai Strait, the surface of which is about ten feet above low-water level, is built a tower two hundred feet above high-water (commenced building May, 1846), and on which rest two lines of tubes or hollow girders, strong enough to bear their weight and laden trains in addition, the ends resting on the abutments on each shore; each tube being more than a quarter of a mile in length. The height of the tube within is thirty feet at the Britannia tower, diminishing to 23 feet at the abutments. The lifting of these tubes to their places was a most gigantic operation, successfully performed.

Tuesday (in Latin Dies Martis, the day of Mars), the third day of the week, so called from Tuisto, Tir, or Tuesco, a Saxon deity, worshipped on this day. Tuisto is mentioned by Tacitus; see Week-days.

Tugendbund ("League of Virtue"), formed in Prussia soon after the peace of Tilsit, June, 1807, ostensibly for relieving the sufferers by the late wars, and for the revival of morality and patriotism. Its headquarters were at Königsburg. It excited the jealousy of Napoleon, who demanded its suppression in 1809. It was dissolved at the peace in 1815.

Tuileries (Paris), the imperial palace of France.

* The Britannia tubular bridge was intended to supply the place of one of the finest bridges in the kingdom; and the railway, of which the tubular bridge forms a part, is in like manner a substitute for one of the finest and best roads ever constructed. The road from London to Holyhead has been long regarded as the highway from the British metropolis to Dublin; and the late Mr. Felford was applied to by the government to perfect this route by the London and Holyhead railway, which he did by erecting a beautiful suspension bridge over the river Conway and over the Menai Strait, commenced in July, 1848, and finished in July, 1855.

commenced by Catherine de Medicis, after the plans of Philibert de l'Orme, 1564; continued by Henry IV.; and finished by Louis XIV. This palace was stormed by the mob, 10 Aug. 1792; and ransacked in the revolutions of July, 1830, and Feb. 1848. Louis Napoleon made it his residence in 1851, and greatly renovated it. The restoration of the Tuileries (much injured by fire by the Communists, May, 1871) was determined on, Oct. 1872.

Tulchan Bishops. Episcopacy was revived in Scotland by the regent Morton, who, with other nobles, absorbed the larger portion of the revenue, 1572-3.—Tulchan was a stuffed calf-skin set before a cow to facilitate milking.

Tulips, indigenous in the east of Europe, came to England from Vienna about 1578. It is recorded in the register of Alkmaar, in Holland, that in 1639, 120 tulips, with the offsets, sold for 90,000 florins; and that one, called the Viceroy, sold for 4203 guilders! The States stopped this ruinous traffic. The tulip-tree, Liriodendron tulipifera, was brought to England from America, about 1603.

Tunbridge Wells (Kent). The springs were discovered, it is stated, by Dudley, lord North, who, when very ill, was restored to health by the use of the waters, 1606. The wells were visited by the queens of Charles I. and II., and by queen Anne, and soon became fashionable.

Tungsten (also called wolfram and scheelium), a hard, whitish, brittle metal. From tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Luyart, in 1786, obtained the metal. In 1859 it was employed in making a new kind of steel.

Tunis (N. Africa) stands nearly on the site of Carthage. Tunis was besieged by Louis IX. of France, who died near it, 25 Aug. 1270. It remained under African kings till taken by Barbarossa, for Solymann the Magnificent, 1531. Barbarossa was expelled by the emperor Charles V., when 10,000 Christian slaves were set at liberty, June, 1535. The country was recovered by the Turks under Selim II., 1575. The bey of Tunis was first appointed in 1574. Tunis was reduced by admiral Blake on the bey refusing to deliver up the British captives, 1655. The Hussein dynasty was founded 1705. In July, 1856, the bey agreed to make constitutional reforms. He died 22 Sept. 1859; and his brother and successor, Mohamed-es-Sadok, took the oath of fidelity to the constitution.

Tunnage and POUNDAGE were ancient duties levied on every tun of wine and pound of other goods, imported or exported, and were the origin of our "customs." They commenced in England about 1346, and were granted to the kings for life, beginning with Edward IV. Charles I. gave great offence by levying them on his own authority, 1628. They were granted to Charles II. for his lifetime, 24 June, 1660. By the act 27 Geo. III. c. 13, these and other duties were repealed, 1787, and a new arrangement of excise and customs was introduced.

Tunnels, for drainage, are ancient. The earliest tunnel for internal navigation was executed by M. Riquet, in the reign of Louis XIV., at Beziers, in France. The first in England was by Mr. Brindley, on the duke of Bridgewater's canal, near Manchester, about 1766. Project of the Gravesend tunnel, 1800; the report upon it, 1801. The Thames Tunnel was projected by Mr. Brunel in 1823, and opened for foot-passengers, 25 March, 1843; see Thames Tunnel. Innumerable tunnels have been made for railways. The railway tunnel at Liverpool was completed in the middle of 1829, lit up with gas, and exhibited once a week. On the London and Birmingham railway there are eight tunnels (the Primrose Hill, Watford, Kilsby, etc.), their total length being 7336 yards.—Smiles. It was computed by Mr. Fowler that there were 80 miles of tunnels in the United Kingdom in 1865, which cost about 6,500,000*l.*, at the average of 45*l.* a yard; see Alps and Thames.

Turin, the ancient Augusta Taurinorum in Piedmont, capital of the Sardinian states, and of the kingdom of Italy, till 1864, when it was superseded by Florence. Its importance dates from the permanent union of Savoy and Piedmont in 1416. The French besieged this city; but prince Eugene defeated their army, and compelled them to raise the siege, 7 Sept. 1706. In 1798, the French republican army took possession of Turin, seized all the strong places and arsenals of Piedmont, and obliged the king and his family to remove to the island of Sardinia. In 1799 the French were driven out by the Austrians and Russians; but the city and all Piedmont surrendered to the French, June, 1800. In May, 1814, it was restored to the king of Sardinia; see Italy, 1864. Here prince Humbert was married to his cousin Margherita amid great rejoicing, 22 April, 1868. The monument to Cavour was inaugurated 8 Nov. 1878. An exhibition opened by the king, 25 April, 1880; see Treaties.

Turkestan, called by the Persians Turan, Independent Tartary, the original country of the Turks, in Central Asia, was reached by Alexander, 331 B.C. The Russians are gradually encroaching on this country; on 14 Feb. 1865, a new province, Turkestan, was created by decree, and gen. Kauffmann made governor, 26 July, 1867.

Turkey. The Turks were originally a tribe of Tartars; but, by incorporation with the peoples they have conquered, have become a mixed race. About 760, they obtained possession of a part of Armenia, called from them Turcomania. They gradually extended their power; but in the thirteenth century, being harassed by other Tartar tribes, they returned to Asia Minor. The Turkish empire till 1878 comprehended the almost independent principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, Servia, and Montenegro, the hereditary viceroyalty of Egypt and Tunis. The Turkish quadrilateral fortresses were Shumla, Varna, Silistria, and Rustchuk. The population of the empire was estimated at 43,600,000 (1871); 47,660,000 (1877). By the treaty of Berlin (13 July, 1878) Turkey is said to have Turner's Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35 (1850), relates to the court of chancery.

Turner's Legacies. Joseph M. W. Turner, a great landscape-painter, was born in April, 1775, and died 19 Dec. 1851. He bequeathed to the nation all the pictures and drawings collected by him and deposited at his residence, 47 Queen Anne street, on condition that a suitable gallery should be erected for them within ten years; and directed his funded property to be expended in founding an asylum at Twickenham for decayed artists. The will was disputed by his relatives, but a compromise was made. The oil-paintings (100 in number) and the drawings (1400) were obtained by the nation, and the engravings and some other property were transferred to the next of kin. The drawings were cleaned and mounted under the careful superintendence of Mr. Ruskin, and the pictures were sent to Marlborough House for exhibition. In 1861, many of the pictures were removed from the South Kensington Museum to the National Gallery, others in 1869. The sketches, plates, etc., of Turner's "Liber Studiorum" were sold for about 20,000*l.*, 28 March, 1873.

Turning, see Lathe. In our dock-yards, blocks and other materials for our ships of war are now produced by an almost instantaneous process, from rough pieces of oak, by the machinery of Mr. (afterwards sir Mark Isambard) Brunel (died 1849); see Blocks.

Turnpikes, see Tolls.

Turpentine-tree (Pistacia terebinthus) came from Barbary, before 1656. Spirits of turpentine were first applied with success to the rot in sheep, one third of the spirit diluted with two thirds water, 1772.

Turret Ships, see Navy of England.

Tuscan Order of ARCHITECTURE, a debased Doric, used in Tuscany for buildings in which strength is chiefly required.—Wotton.

Tuscany, formerly a grand-duchy in central Italy, the northern part of the ancient Etruria (which see). It formed part of the Lombard kingdom, after the conquest of which by Charlemagne, 774, it was made a marquiseate for Boniface about 828. His descendant, the great countess Matilda, bequeathed the southern part of her domains to the pope (1115). In the northern part (then called Tuscina), the cities Florence, Pisa, Sienna, Lucca, etc., gradually became flourishing republics. Florence became the chief under the government of the Medici family; see Florence. The duchy in that family began in 1531, and the grand-duchy in 1569. After the extinction of the Medicis in 1737, Tuscany was given by the treaty of Vienna (1738) to Francis, duke of Lorraine (married to Maria Theresa of Austria in 1736), who had ceded his hereditary estates to France. Population in 1860, 1,826,830.

The French enter Florence 28 March, 1799

 Insurrection at Florence; republic proclaimed; the grand-duke flies 11 Feb. 1849
 He is restored by the Austrians July, 1849
 Rigorous imprisonment of the Medici, husband and wife, converts to Protestantism, for reading the Bible May, 1852
 The earls of Shaftesbury and Roden and others in vain intercede for them at Florence Oct. "
 They are released after the intervention of the British government March, 1853
 [An annuity was provided for them by subscription.]
 The Tuscan army demand alliance with the Sardinians; the grand-duke refuses, and departs to Bologna; the king of Sardinia is proclaimed dictator, and a provisional government formed 27 April, 1859
 The king assumes the command of the army, but declines the dictatorship 30 April, "
 The Sardinian commissary Buoncompagni invested with the powers of government 11 May, " Prince Napoleon arrives at Leghorn, addresses the Tuscans, and erects his standard 23 May, "
 The grand-duke Leopold II. abdicates in favor of his son Ferdinand 21 July, " Tuscan constituent assembly meets 11 Aug. "
 It declares against the house of Lorraine, and votes for annexation to Sardinia Sept. "
 Prince Eugene of Savoy-Carignan elected governor-general of central Italy; he declines, but recommends Buoncompagni, Nov., who is accepted by the Tuscans, 8 Dec. "
 Annexation to Sardinia voted by universal suffrage, 11, 12 March; decreed 22 March, 1860
 Prince Eugene appointed governor 26 March, "
 Florence made the capital of Italy, by decree published 11 Dec. 1864

 1608. Cosmo II.
 1621. Ferdinand II.
 1670. Cosmo III. (visited England, and wrote an account of his travels).
 1723. John Gaston (last of the Medici).
 1737. Francis II. (duke of Lorraine); became emperor of Germany in 1745.
 1765. Leopold I. (emperor in 1790).
 1790. Ferdinand III. (second son of Leopold I.); expelled by the French in 1800.

KINGS OF ETRURIA.

1801. Louis I., duke of Parma.
 1803. Louis II.

GRAND-DUCHESSES.

- 1803-14. Eliza Bonaparte (married to Bacciochi, made princess of Lucca).

GRAND DUCHY.

1814. Ferdinand III. restored.

1824. Leopold II., 18 June (born 3 Oct. 1797; abdicated, 21 July, 1868), died 20 Jan. 1870.

1880. Ferdinand IV., 21 July (born 10 June, 1859; protested against the annexation of his grand-duchy, 26 March, 1890).

See, Leopold Ferdinand, born 2 Dec. 1892.

Tusculum (now Frascati), a city of Latium (S. Italy). The Tusculans supported Tarquinius Superbus against the Romans, by whom they were totally defeated, 497 B.C. The Tusculans, on account of their friendship with Rome, suffered much from the other Latins, who took their city, 374, but were severely chastised for it. Here Cicero during his retirement wrote his "Tusculana Disputationes," about 46 B.C.

Twelfth-day, the feast of the Epiphany, or manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, 6 Jan.; see Epiphany.

Twelve Tables, see Decemviri.

Twins, joined together, have been born frequently, but seldom lived long. Helen-Judith, joined Hungarian twins, were born in 1715, and died in 1723. Millie-Christine, negro twins, born in North Carolina in 1851, were wholly distinct in the upper part of the body, but one in the lower part of the spinal column and pelvis; the four legs obeying nerves from a common centre. They sang and danced well, and were named the "Two-headed Nightingale." The will, understanding, and conscience were distinct; see Siamese Twins.

Twin-ship, see under Stamm.

"Tropenny Trash," a term given to W. Cobbett's Weekly Political Register, after 2 Nov. 1816, when he reduced the price from 12d. to 2d.; the sale greatly increased.

Tyburn (W. London), at the west end of Oxford road (now street), the chief place in London for the execution of malefactors till 1783. Pennant (who died 1798) remembered Oxford street as "a deep, hollow road, and full of sloughs, with here and there a ragged house, the lurking-place of cutthroats."

In conformity with an act passed in 1807 a so-called "Tyburn ticket" was given to the proprietor of a criminal executed at Tyburn. The ticket gave exemption from serving on juries and parochial offices. The act was repealed in 1818.

"Tyburnia" (a N. W. suburb of London) was built between 1839 and 1860, on the green fields and nursery grounds in Paddington belonging to the sea of London.

Tyler's Insurrection, in opposition to the poll-tax imposed on all persons above 15, 5 Nov. 1800. One of the collectors, acting with insolent rudeness to Wm. Tyler's daughter, was struck dead by the father, June, 1301. His neighbors took arms, and in a short time almost the whole of the population of the southern and eastern counties rose, extorting freedom from their lords, and plundering. On 12 June, 1381, they gathered upon Blackheath to the number of 100,000 men, and on 14 June murdered Simon of Sudbury, archbishop of Canterbury, and sir Robert Hales, the royal treasurer. The king, Richard II., invited Tyler to a parley, which took place on the 15th at Smithfield, where the latter addressed the king in a menacing manner, now and again lifting up his sword. On this the mayor, Watworth, stunned Tyler with a blow of his mace, and one of the king's knights despatched him. Richard temporized with the multitude by promising a charter, and thus led them out of the city, when sir R. Knollys and a band of knights attacked and dispersed them with great slaughter. The insurrection in Norfolk and Suffolk was subdued by the bishop of Norwich, and 1500 of the rebels were executed.

Tynemouth (Northumberland). Here are remains of a monastery built by king Edwin, 625; destroyed by the Danes, rebuilt by king Egfrid, 671-86; often ravaged by Danes, 795-993; refounded and made a castle, by Robert de Mowbray, 1090; plundered by Scots, 1316 and 1349; fortified for Charles I., 1642; taken by Scots, 1644; finally ruined, 1665; and made a depot, 1763. The chapel has been restored. Tynemouth was made a borough, returning one member to parliament, 1882. An aquarium, winter-garden, etc., was opened 27 Aug. 1878.

Type-composing Machine. The best-known and most perfect type-composing and distributing machine is that invented by Timothy Alden, of Yarmouth, Mass.; born 1813, died 1858. It was first patented in 1854. This machine was imperfect, and was afterwards much improved by Henry W. Alden, cousin of the inventor. He was assisted in this work by William Machay. The machine, thus improved, was worked in the Tribune office during the years 1858-60. The necessity of a "distributor" that would not require the type to be classified had long been felt, and during the trial at the Tribune office, John T. Slinger, a practical scientific machinist, discovered a method by which it could be effected. He also remedied several minor defects, which rendered the machine practical and useful. See under Printing, 1842-72.

Type-founding, see under Printing, 1462, 1726.

Type-writers. M. Foucault sent to the Paris exhibition of 1855 a writing-machine for the blind; and several were invented by Wheatstone. After successive improvements, Messrs. Remington, in America, in 1878, contracted to construct 25,000. The speed is said to have been raised to seventy-five words a minute.

The action of the type-writer somewhat resembles that of a pianoforte. Pressure upon a key marked with a letter raises a hammer with a type-cut letter, which presses upon paper; provision is made for inking the type, shifting, etc.

Tyrant. In early Greek history, the term was applied to any man who governed with irresponsible power. Solon objected to the term, and chose the name Archon (ruler), 594 B.C. The earliest tyrants were those at Sicyon, beginning with Cleisthenes, in the seventh century B.C. Tyranny declined in Greece about 480 B.C., and revived after the close of the Peloponnesian war, 404 B.C.; see Thirty Tyrants.

Tyre (Phœnicia), a great city, said to have been first built by Agenor. Another city was built 1237 (about 2267, Hale) B.C. It was besieged by the Assyrians, who retired from before it, after a siege of upwards of five years, 713 B.C. Taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 573 B.C., and the city demolished, when the Tyrians removed to an opposite island, and built a new and magnificent city. It was taken by Alexander with much difficulty, after a siege of seven months, July, 332 B.C. He joined the island to the continent by a mole.—Strabo. Tyre was captured by the Crusaders, 7 July, 1124; by the French, 8 April, 1799; and by the allied fleet, during the war against Mehemet Ali, 1841.

Tyre, ERA OF, began on 19 Oct. 126 B.C., with the month of Hyperbætanus. The months were the same as those used in the Grecian era, and the year is similar to the Julian year. To reduce this era to ours, subtract 124; and if the given year be less than 126, deduct it from 126, and the remainder will be the year before Christ.

Tyrol, the eastern part of ancient Rætia, now a province of the Austrian empire, was ceded to the house of Hapsburg in 1086 by Margaret, the heiress of the last count. It became an appanage of the younger (or Tyrol) branch of the imperial house, which came to the throne in the person of Maximilian II., in 1612. The French conquered the Tyrol in 1805, and united it to Bavaria; but in 1809 an insurrection broke out, headed by Andrew Hofer, an innkeeper, who drove the Bavarians out of the Tyrol, thoroughly defeated some French detachments, but laid down his arms at the treaty of Vienna. He was subsequently accused of corresponding with the Austrians, captured and sent to Mantua, and there shot by order of the French government, 20 Feb. 1810. The Austrian emperor ennobled his family in 1819, and erected his statue in Innsbruck in 1864. The Tyrolean riflemen were very effective in the Italian war in 1859.

Tyrone (near Ulster, N. Ireland), formerly the territories of the O'Neills, and the seat of the insurrection in 1641.

Tyrrhæni included the ancient Etruscans, and other tribes, said to have come from Lydia, Asia Minor.

U.

Ubiquitarians or UBIQUARIANS, a small German sect, originated by John Brentius about 1560, who asserted that the body of Christ was present everywhere (ubique).

Uhlan, the German lancers, very effective in the war in 1870.

Ukraine (Polish for a frontier), a vast fertile plain in Russia, ceded to the Cossacks by Poland in 1672, and obtained by Russia in 1682. The country was divided, Poland having the west side of the Dnieper, and Russia the east. The whole country was assigned to Russia by the treaty of partition in 1795.

Ulm, in Württemberg, S. Germany, where a PEACE was signed, 3 July, 1620, by which Frederick V. lost Bohemia (having been driven from it previously). Ulm was taken by the French in 1796. After a battle between the French and Austrians, in which the latter, under gen. Mack, were defeated with dreadful loss by marshal Ney, Ulm surrendered with 28,000 men, the flower of the Austrian army, 17-20 Oct. 1805.

Ulphilas's Bible, see under Bible.

Ulster, the N. division of Ireland. After the death of Strongbow, 1176, John de Courcy was made earl of Ulster; Hugh de Lacy was earl, 1243; and Walter de Burgh, 1264; whose descendant, Elizabeth, married Lionel, son of Edward III., 1352. He thus became earl of Ulster. In 1611, the British colonization of the forfeited lands (termed the Ulster settlements or plantations) began, much land being granted to the corporation of London; see Irish Society. The consequent rebellion of the Irish chieftains, Roger More, Phelim O'Neale, McGuire, earl of Inniskillen, and others, broke out on 23 Oct. 1641 (see Ireland).—Ulster King-of-Arms appointed for Ireland, 1553.—By the ancient "Ulster tenant-right," the outgoing tenant of a farm received from his successor a sum of money for the privilege of occupancy. A modified form of this right was adopted in the Irish land act, passed 8 July, 1870.

Ultramontanists (from ultra montes, beyond the mountains), a term originally applied in France to those who upheld the extreme authority of the pope in opposition to the freedom of the Gallican church, which had been secured by various bulls, and especially by the concordat of 15 July, 1801. Ultramontanists now are those who maintain the official infallibility of the bishop of Rome.

Ulundi (Zululand, South Africa). On 4 July, 1879, the Zulus, commanded by their king, Cetuywayo, who had refused the conditions of peace, were totally defeated near here by lord Chelmsford, after a severe conflict. Capt. Wyatt-Edgell, 17 lancers, and 9 men were killed, and about 53 wounded. The British were attacked in the open country by the Zulus, who enveloped our hollow square and charged on all sides up to within 60 yards, when they broke and fled under the heavy fire. They were pursued and routed by cavalry. About 23,000 Zulus engaged, 1500 killed. The British showed much firmness and the Zulus displayed great courage. The royal kraal at Ulundi and other military kraals were burned.

Umbrella, described in early dictionaries as "a portable penthouse to carry in a person's hand to screen him from violent rain or heat." Umbrellas appear in the carvings at Persepolis. Niebuhr saw a great Arabian prince returning from a mosque, he and each of his family having a large umbrella carried by their side. Old China-ware shows the Chinese shaded by umbrellas. It is said that the first person who generally used an umbrella in the streets of London was the benevolent Jonas Hanway, who died in 1786.

John Macdonald, a footman, who wrote his own life, informs us that he had "a fine silk umbrella, which he brought from Spain; but he could not with any comfort to himself use it, the people calling out, 'Frenchman! why don't you get a coach?'" The hackney-coachmen and chairmen were clamorous against their rival. The footman says he "persisted for three months, till they took no further notice of this novelty. Foreigners began to use theirs; and then the English." 1778.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," a story by Mrs. H. Beecher Stowe, published in portions in a newspaper in 1850; complete in March, 1852; setting forth the evils of negro slavery. The sale was enormous, and the translations numerous, and it greatly contributed to emancipation. The rev. Josiah Henson, sometimes improperly called the original "Uncle Tom," was received by the queen at Buckingham palace, 2 March, 1877, and was much benefited by his visit to Britain.

Undulatory Theory of LIGHT supposes a progressive wave-like motion between the eye and the luminous body seen. It is said to have been suggested by Francisco Grimaldi about 1665, and was propounded by Robert Hooke and Huyghens, about 1672; opposed by Newton; but confirmed by Thomas Young by experiments in 1801, and is now generally adopted; see Emission and Light.

Uniformity Acts. That of 2 and 3 Edward VI., 15 Jan. 1549, ordained that the order of divine worship drawn up by Cranmer and others, "with the aid of the Holy Ghost," should be the only one used after 20 May. The penalties for refusing to use it were fine and imprisonment. This act was confirmed in 1552; repealed by Mary, 1554; and re-enacted by Elizabeth in 1559. The act of Uniformity, 14 Charles II. c. 4, was passed in 1662. It enjoined uniformity in matters of religion, and obliged all clergy to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles, and use the same form of worship, and the same book of common prayer. Its enforcement on 24 Aug. 1662, termed Black Bartholomew's day, caused, it is said, upwards of 2000 ministers to quit the church of England. This day was commemorated by dissenters in 1862. The Act of Uniformity Amendment act, whereby shortened services were authorized, and other changes made, was passed 18 July, 1872. The Uniformity of Process act, which made many law changes, was passed 23 May, 1832.

Uniforms. Military uniforms were first used in France "in a regular manner" by Louis XIV. about 1668. In England the uniform was soon afterwards adopted in the military service, but with little analogy to the modern dress; see under Navy.

Unigenitus, see Bull.

Uninflammable Salts. At the British Association, 15 Sept. 1859, MM. Versmann and Oppenheim announced their discovery that fabrics steeped in solutions of tungstate of soda, or sulphate or phosphate of ammonia, burn without flame.

Union Chapel, Islington, rebuilt; opened 5 Dec. 1877; was termed a "congregational cathedral." Rev. Dr. H. Allon, minister, 1852.

Union Chargeability Act, providing for the better distribution of the charge for relieving the poor in unions, was passed in June, 1865. One object of the act is the improvement of the dwellings of agricultural laborers.

Union Jack. The original flag of England was the banner of St. George, i. e., white with a red cross, which, 12 April, 1606 (three years after James I. ascended the throne), was incorporated with the banner of Scotland, i. e., blue with a white diagonal cross. This combination obtained the name of "Union Jack," in al-

The census report thus classifies the population: Males, 25,520,582; females, 24,632,284. Native born, 43,475,505; foreign born, 6,677,300. Whites, 43,404,877; colored, 6,677,151. The remaining 170,838 are composed of Indians not in tribal relations and under government care, Chinese, and other Asiatics. The Chinese are estimated at 105,363.

The senate is composed of two members for each state, elected for six years. The representatives in congress are elected for two years. (Formerly five slaves were counted as three persons, but this system ended with the abolition of slavery. In 1872 the number of representatives was raised from 233 to 283, to commence 3 March, 1873. A new ratio of apportionment, usually involving some change in the total number of representatives, is adopted after each census. The exact apportionment, founded upon the census of 1880, has not yet (Jan. 1882) been determined.

ARMY (see title Army).—That which achieved independence was disbanded at the end of the war. In 1789, a war department was established, and in 1790 the army consisted of 1216 men for the Indian frontier. In 1808, the militia was newly equipped. When war with Great Britain was declared on 18 June, 1812, 35,000 men were voted; and this army was disbanded at the peace in 1815.

In 1865, Army, 11,658. Militia, 1,873,558. Fleet, 72 vessels (2230 guns).

In 1880, the United States militia were 3,070,987. Fleet, 92 vessels (of all kinds); in Oct. 1862, 256 vessels of war.

Federal Army, 29 July, 1861, estimated at 660,971. In Dec. 1862, nearly 1,000,000 men. In April, 1865, about 1,500,000, at the end of the war, when the reduction began at once. Number of soldiers in 1867, 54,890; in July, 1871, 32,135; 1875, 27,525 men. Present aggregate strength, 25,000 men.

Fleet, in July, 1867, 261 vessels of all kinds; 2218 guns; Jan. 1871, 179 vessels, 1440 guns; 1875, 155 vessels, 1203 guns. Railways, miles: 1830, 23; 1840, 2818; 1850, 9021; 1860, 30,635; 1870, 52,914; 1880, 93,637.

 Insurrection at Harper's Ferry..... 16 Oct. "
 John Brown, called capt. Brown and old Brown, was a prominent leader in the violent conflicts in Kansas, during the agitation respecting the question of its becoming a slave state. He was an enthusiast abolitionist, and contended that all means for annihilating slavery were justifiable. He gathered together a band who so much annoyed Missouri and other slave states, that a reward was offered for his head. He had arranged for the successful issue of the insurrection above mentioned, so far as to devise a provisional government and a new constitution. On 16 Oct. he and his band seized the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, a town on the borders of Virginia and Maryland, stopped the railway trains, and cut the telegraph wires; a conflict with the military ensued, and Brown was captured. Unity, see Christian.

Universal Suffrage (Plebiscitum), one of the six points of the charter (see Chartists), was adopted by the French in their constitution of 1791, and used in the election of their president in 1851 and of their emperor in 1852, and by the Italian states in voting for annexation to Sardinia in 1860, 1861, 1866, and 1870.

Universalists, who believe in the final salvation of all men. This doctrine, declared in the Talmud, and ascribed to Origen about 230, was advocated by other early fathers, but opposed by St. Augustine, about 420; and condemned by the 5th general council at Constantinople, May, June, 553. It was received by the Unitarians in the seventeenth century, and avowed by numerous clergymen of the Church of England. James Kelly, who published his "Union" in 1760, founded the sect of Universalists in Britain; and John Murray, in America, about 1770. The sect barely exists in Britain, but flourishes in America.

Universities. The most ancient in Europe are those of Bologna, Oxford, Cambridge, Paris, and Salamanca. In old Aberdeen was a monastery, in which youths were instructed in theology, the canon law, and the school philosophy, at least 200 years before the university and King's College were founded; see Degrees. University Boat-race. The contest between the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, at first near Oxford, afterwards on the river Thames, began 10 June, 1829, and has been annual since 1856. In 1864, after 20 contests, the opposing parties were equal; but on 8 April, 1865, 24 March, 1866, 13 April, 1867, 4 April, 1868, and 17 March, 1869, Oxford won, the last time being the 9th in succession. Cambridge won, 6 April, 1870, 1 April, 1871, 23 March, 1872, 29 March, 1873, and 28 March, 1874. Oxford won, 20 March, 1875; Cambridge won, 8 April, 1876. Dead heat, neither won, 24 March, 1877; Oxford won, 13 April, 1878; Cambridge won, 5 April, 1879; Oxford won on Monday, 22 March, 1880, and Friday, 8 April, 1881. In the international boat-race between the universities of Oxford and Harvard, Massachusetts, U.S., Oxford won, 27 Aug. 1869.

Upsal (Sweden). The Swedish rulers were kings of Upsal till 1001. The university was founded in 1476, by Sten Sture, the "protector," and opened 21 Sept. 1477. Celebration of foundation of university, Sept. 1877.

Uranium, a brittle gray metal discovered by Klaproth in 1789, in the mineral pitchblende. It has lately been employed in the manufacture of glass for certain philosophical purposes.

Uranus, a planet with eight satellites, was discovered by William Herschel, 13 March, 1781; first called Georgium Sidus, after George III.; next Herschel; and finally Uranus. It is about twice as distant from the sun as the planet Saturn. The anniversary of its first revolution (in 84 years 7 days) since its discovery, was celebrated on 20 March, 1865. Its perturbations led to the discovery of Neptune in 1846. Uranus has 8 satellites; 6 discovered by Herschel, 2 in 1787, 2 in 1790, 2 in 1794; 1 by Lassell, and 1 by Struve, in 1847.

Uses, STATUTE OF, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10 (1535-6); see Charitable Uses.

Ushant, an island near Brest, N.W. France, near which two naval battles were fought between the British and French fleets.

(1.) On 27 July, 1778, after an indecisive action of three hours, the French, under cover of the night, withdrew into the harbor of Brest. Admiral Keppel commanded the English fleet; the count d'Orvilliers the French. The failure of a complete victory was attributed to admiral Sir Hugu Palliser's non compliance with the admiral's signals. Palliser preferred articles of accusation against his commander, who was tried and acquitted, and the charge against him declared to be "malicious and ill founded."

(2.) Lord Howe with 25 ships signally defeated the French fleet (26 ships, under Villaret-Joyeuse), taking six ships of the line, and sinking one (the Vengeur), 1 June, 1794. While the two fleets were engaged in this action, a large fleet of merchantmen, on the safety of which the French nation depended for its means of prosecuting the war, got safely into Brest harbor, which gave occasion to the enemy to claim the laurels of the day, notwithstanding their loss in ships and in killed and wounded, which was very great. The day was long termed in England "the glorious first of June."

Usury from a stranger was permitted to the Jews, but forbidden from their brethren, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xxii. 25; Deut. xxiii. 13). This law was enforced by Nehemiah, 445 B.C. (Neh. v.). Usury was prohibited by the English parliament, 1341. Until the fifteenth century, no Christians were allowed to receive interest of money, and Jews were the only usurers, and therefore often banished and persecuted; see Jews. By 37 Hen. VIII. the rate of interest was fixed at 10 per cent., 1545. This statute was repealed by Edward VI., but re-enacted 13 Eliz. 1570. For later legislation, see Interest.

Utah, a western territory of North America, was organized 9 Sept. 1850; the capital, Great Salt Lake City, is the chief seat of the Mormons (which see).

Utica (N. Africa), an ancient Tyrian colony, an ally of Carthage, named in the treaty with the Romans, 348 B.C. Here Cato the Younger, after the defeat of the partisans of Pompey at Thapsus, committed suicide, 46 B.C. Utica flourished greatly after the fall of Carthage, and was made a Roman city by Augustus on account of its favoring Julius Caesar. It suffered by the invasion of the Vandals, 439, and of the Saracens, about 700.

Utilitarianism, termed the "greatest happiness principle," the philosophy which proposes the attainment of the greatest happiness of the greatest number; a doctrine ascribed to Priestley by Bentham. The doctrine is found in the writings of Locke, Hartley, Hume, and Paley; but was chiefly propounded by Jeremy Bentham in his "Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation," 1780-9, and by John Stuart Mill, who died 9 May, 1873. Mill founded a small "utilitarian society" in 1822. He took the name from an expression in Galt's "Annals of the Parish."

Utraquists, see Calixtins.

Utrecht (the Roman Trajectum ad Rhenum) became the seat of an independent bishopric about 695. The last prelate, Henry of Bavaria, weary of his turbulent subjects, sold his temporal government to the emperor Charles V. in 1528. The union of the seven united provinces began here (see United Provinces), signed 23 Jan. 1579; 300th anniversary celebrated 23 Jan. 1879. The treaty of Utrecht, which terminated the wars of queen Anne, was signed by the ministers of Great Britain and France, and all the other allies, except the ministers of the empire, 11 April, 1713. This treaty secured the Protestant succession in England, the separation of the French and Spanish crowns, the destruction of the works of Dunkirk, the enlargement of the British colonies and plantations in America, and a full satisfaction for the claims of the allies. Utrecht surrendered to the Prussians, 9 May, 1787; was acquired by the French, 18 Jan. 1795; and restored at the peace, 1814.

* Various French histories, on the authority of the French demagogue Barrere, state that the English had 36 ships of the line, and the French only 26; and that the crew of the Fengar sang the Marseillaise while the ship sank, displaying the tricolor flag. All this was denied in 1802, and disproved by rear admiral Griffith in Nov. 1834. The Fengar surrendered to the British, who exerted themselves to save the crew. The French statement was accepted by Alison, and at first by Carlyle, but afterwards contradicted by both.

missioners met here to discuss terms of peace between Charles I. and the parliament; they separated without effect, 22 Feb. The latter required absolute control of the army and navy, the abolition of the episcopacy, liturgy, etc.

Vacations, see Terms.

Vaccination (from Variola vaccina, the cow-pox), discovered by Dr. Edward Jenner. He was born in 1749, and educated for the medical profession, partially under John Hunter. Having heard that milkmaids who had had the cow-pox never took the small-pox, he, about 1780, conceived the idea of vaccination. He made the first experiment by transferring to a healthy child on 14 May, 1796, the pus from the pustule of a milkmaid who had caught the cow-pox from the cows. He announced his success in a memoir published 1798, and vaccination, begun 21 Jan. 1799, soon became general, after much opposition. For this Dr. Jenner received 10,000*l.* from parliament, 2 June, 1802, and 20,000*l.* in 1807. The first national institution for vaccination, the Royal Jennerian Institution, was founded 19 Jan. 1803. The emperor Napoleon valued Dr. Jenner so highly that he liberated Dr. Wickham, when a prisoner of war, at Jenner's request, and subsequently whole families of English, making it a point to refuse him nothing that he asked. Vaccination, although much opposed, was practised throughout all Europe previously to 1816. Dr. Jenner died suddenly, 26 Jan. 1823.

Vadimonis Lacus, the Vadimonian lake, Umbria, central Italy, near which the Etruscans were totally defeated in two severe engagements by the Roman consuls—1, by Fabius Maximus, 309 B.C.; 2, by Cornelius Dolabella, 283.

Vagrants. By law, after being whipped, a vagrant was to take an oath to return to the place where he was born, or had last dwelt for three years, 1530. A vagrant a second time convicted was to lose the upper part of the gristle of his right ear, 1535; a third time convicted, death. A vagabond to be branded with a V, and be a slave for two years, 1547. If he absconded and was caught, he was to be branded with S, and be a slave for life. Vagrants were punished by whipping, jailing, boring the ears, and death for a second offence, 1572. The milder statutes were those of 17 Geo. II.; 32, 35, and 59 Geo. III. The present Vagrant act (5 Geo. IV. c. 83) was passed in 1824. There were about 33,000 tramps in England and Wales in 1865. For vagrants in London, see under Poor.

Waldenses, see Waldenses.

Valençay, a château near Châteauroux, central France, where Napoleon I. imprisoned Ferdinand of Spain from 1808 to 1813. His kingdom was restored to Ferdinand by a treaty signed 8 Dec. 1813.

Valencia (E. Spain), the Valentia Edetanorum of the Romans, became the capital of a Moorish kingdom, 1000; annexed to Aragon, 1238. Its university, founded, it is said, in the thirteenth century, was revived in the fifteenth. Valencia was taken by the earl of Peterborough in 1705, but submitted to the Bourbons after the unfortunate battle of Almanza, in 1707. It resisted the attempts made on it by marshal Moncey, but was taken from the Spaniards with a garrison of more than 16,000 men, and immense stores, by the French under Suchet, 9 Jan. 1812.

Valenciennes (N. France). This city (the Roman Valentianæ), after many changes, was taken by Louis XIV. in 1677, and annexed 1678. It was besieged from 23 May to 28 July, 1793, when the French garrison surrendered to the allies under the duke of York. It was retaken, together with Condé, by the French, 27-30 Aug. 1794; on capitulation, the garrison and 1100 emigrants were made prisoners, with immense stores.

Valentia, a Roman province, including the country between the walls of Severus and Adrian, was reconquered from the Picts and Scots by Theodosius, and named after Valentinian I., the reigning emperor, 368.

Valentine's Day (14 Feb.). Valentine is said to have been a bishop, who suffered martyrdom under Claudius II. at Rome; others say under Aurelian, in 271. 618,000 letters passed through the post-office on 14 Feb. 1856. 530,300 was the estimated number of valentines delivered in 1864; in 1870, 1,545,755. The origin of the ancient custom of “choosing a valentine” has been much controverted; see Post.

Valentinians, followers of Valentine, a priest, who, on being disappointed of a bishopric, forsook the Christian faith, declaring there were thirty gods and goddesses, fifteen of each sex, which he called Æones, or Ages. He taught in the second century, and published a gospel and psalms: his followers added other errors.

Valladolid (Spain), the Roman Pintia and the Moorish Belad Walid; was recovered for the Christians by Ordoño II., the first king of Leon, 914-23. It became the capital of Castile in the fifteenth century. It was taken by the French, Jan. 1808; and captured by the English, 4 June, 1813. Here died Christopher Columbus, 20 May, 1506.

Vallambrosa (central Italy). A Benedictine abbey was founded here by John Gualbert, about 1038. The monks were termed Vallambrosians.

Valmy (N.E. France). Here the French, commanded by Kellermann, defeated the Prussians, commanded by the duke of Brunswick, 20 Sept. 1792. The victory was of immense moral advantage to the republicans; and Kellermann was made duke of Valmy in 1808.

Valois, a county (N. France) given by Philip III. to his younger son Charles, whose son Philip became king as Philip IV. in 1328; see France.

Valor Ecclesiasticus, a report of the annual value of church property, made by order in 1534, was published by the Record Commission in 1810-34.

Valparaiso, principal port of Chili, South America, was bombarded by the Spanish admiral Mendez Nuñez, on 31 March, 1866, when much property was destroyed. It suffered by earthquakes in 1822, 1829, and 1851.

Valtelline (N. Italy), a district near the Rætian Alps, seized by the Grison league, 1512, and ceded to it, 1530. At the instigation of Spain, the Catholics rose and massacred the Protestants, 19-21 July, 1620. After much contention between the French and Austrians, the neutrality of the Valtelline was assured in 1639. It was annexed to the Cisalpine Republic in 1797; to Italy, 1807; to Austria, 1814; to Italy, 1860.

Valuation of Property Act, to provide for the uniform assessment of ratable property in the metropolis, was passed 9 Aug. 1869.

Valvasor, or VAVASSOR. The first dignity beneath a peer was anciently that of vidames, vice-domini, or valvasors. Valvasors are mentioned by our ancient lawyers as viri magnæ dignitatis, and sir Edward Coke speaks highly of them. Now, the first personal dignity after the nobility is a knight of the Garter.—Blackstone.

Vanadium (from Vanadis, the Scandinavian Venus), metal discovered by Sefström, in 1830, combined with iron ore. A similar metal, discovered in lead ore by Del Rio in 1801, and named Erythronium, was proved by Wöhler to be vanadium. Vanadium was discovered in the copper-bearing beds in Cheshire, in 1865, by H. E. Roscoe, by whom its peculiarities were further studied, and published in 1867-8. It is likely to be useful in photography and dyeing.

Vancouver's Island, North Pacific Ocean, near the mainland. Settlements were made here by the English in 1781, which were seized by the Spaniards in 1789, but restored. By a treaty between the British government and that of the United States, in 1846, this island was secured to the former. It has become of much greater importance since the discovery of gold in the neighboring mainland in 1858, and the consequent establishment of the colony of British Columbia (which see). Victoria, the capital, was founded in 1857. The island was united with British Columbia by act passed in Aug. 1866; and on 24 May, 1868, Victoria was declared the capital. Lord Dufferin, governor-general of Canada, was warmly received here, 15 Aug. 1876; see Juan, Son. Chinese immigrants are virtually excluded by a poll-tax, 1878.

Vancouver's Voyage. Capt. Vancouver served as a midshipman under capt. Cook, and was appointed to command during a voyage of discovery, to ascertain the existence of any navigable communication between the North Pacific and North Atlantic oceans. He sailed 7 Jan. 1791, and returned 24 Sept. 1795. He compiled an account of this voyage of survey of the northwest coast of America, and died in 1798.

Vandals, a Germanic race, attacked the Roman empire in the third century, and began to ravage Germany and Gaul, 406-14; their kingdom in Spain was founded in 411; under Genseric, they invaded and conquered the Roman territories in Africa, 429, and took Carthage Oct. 439. They were subdued by Belisarius in 534. They were driven out by the Saracen Moors. The dukes of Mecklenburg style themselves princes of the Vandals.

Varangians, or VARAGIANS, a name given to northern pirates, who invaded Flanders, about 813; France, about 840; Italy, 852. Their leader, Ruric, invited by the Novgorodians to help them, founded the Russian monarchy, 862.

Varennes, a town in N.E. France, is celebrated for the arrest of Louis XVI., his queen, sister, and two children. They fled from the Tuileries on 21 June, 1791; were taken here the next day, and conducted back to Paris, mainly through Drouet, the postmaster, who at an intermediate town recognized the king.

Variable Stars. The variation of brightness in certain stars is said to have been first observed in a small star of Cetus, or the Whale, by Daniel Fabricius, 13 Aug. 1596. In October of same year the star had vanished. Since then many similar variations have been observed by Goodricke, Herschel, and other astronomers; and Mr. Pogson has constructed a table of thirty-eight variable stars. No satisfactory explanation has yet been given of the phenomena.—Engl. Cyc.

Varna, a fortified seaport in Bulgaria, formerly European Turkey. A great battle was fought near this place, 10 Nov. 1444, between the Turks under Amurath II., and the Hungarians under their king Ladislaus and John Hunniades. The latter were defeated with great slaughter: the king was killed, and Hunniades made prisoner, who had opposed the Christians breaking the truce for ten years, recently made at Segedin. The emperor Nicholas of Russia arrived before Varna, the headquarters of his army, then besieging the place, 5 Aug. 1828. The Turkish garrison made a vigorous attack on the besiegers, 7 Aug.; and another on the 21st, but were repulsed. Varna surrendered, after a sanguinary conflict, to the Russian arms, 11 Oct. 1828. It was restored to the peace in 1829; its fortifications were dismantled, but have since been restored. The allied armies disembarked at Varna, 29 May, 1854, and sailed for the Crimea, 3 Sept. They suffered severely from cholera. In conformity with the treaty of Berlin, Varna was evacuated by the Turks, and occupied by Russians, autumn, 1878.

Vassar College (on the east bank of the Hudson, United States), for the higher education of women, was founded by Matthew Vassar in 1861.

Vassy (N.E. France). The massacre of the Protestants at this place by the duke of Guise, on 1 March, 1562, led to desolating civil wars.

Vatican (Rome), the ancient Mons Vaticanus, a hill of Rome. The commencement of the palace is ascribed to Constantine, Liberius, and Symmachus. It became the residence of the pope at his return from Arignon, 1377. The palace is said to contain 7000 rooms, rich in works of art, ancient and modern. The library, founded by pope Nicholas V., 1448, is exceedingly rich in printed books and MSS.—Pistolesi's description of the Vatican, with numerous plates, was published 1829-38.—The phrase "Thunders of the Vatican" was first used by Voltaire, 1748.—the ancient Vatican Codex of the Old and New Testament in Greek was published at Rome in 1857. For "Vatican Decrees," see Councils.

Vaud, a Swiss canton, after having been successfully held by the Franks, the kings of Burgundy, emperors of Germany, dukes of Zähringen, and dukes of Savoy, was conquered by the Bernese, Jan. 1536, and annexed, 1554. Vaud, made independent in 1798, joined the confederation in 1815. A new constitution was obtained in 1830, after agitation.

Vauxhall Bridge, constructed of iron, under the direction of Mr. Walker, at an expense of 150,000*l.* (to be defrayed by a toll). The first stone was laid 9 May, 1811, by prince Charles, eldest son of the duke of Brunswick; and the bridge was opened on 4 June, 1816; freed from toll, 24 May, 1879.

Vauxhall Gardens (London), were so denominated from the manor of Vauxhall, Falkeshall, Fox-hall, or Faukeshall, said to have been the property of Fulke de Breauté about 1282. The tradition that this house, or any other adjacent, was the property of Guy Fawkes is erroneous. The premises were the property of Jane Vaux in 1615, and the mansion-house was then called Stockden's. From her it passed through various hands, till it became the property of Mr. Tyers in 1782. There is no certain account of the time when these premises were first opened for the entertainment of the public; but the New Spring Gardens at Vauxhall are mentioned by Pepys 1665, Wycherley 1672, and in the Spectator 1711, as a place of great resort. The gardens were opened for a "ridotto al fresco," 7 June, 1782, by Jonathan Tyers, who spared no pains or expense to maintain his success. The greatest season was in 1823, when 133,279 persons visited the gardens, and the receipts were 29,500*l.* The greatest number of persons in one night was 2 Aug. 1833, when 20,137 persons paid for admission. The number on the then supposed last night, 5 Sept. 1839, was 1069 persons. Vauxhall was sold by auction, 9 Sept. 1841, for 20,200*l.*, and again 20 Aug. 1850. The last performances at Vauxhall took place on 25 July, 1859. The ground has been sold for building purposes. Six persons killed and many injured by fall of stack of wood at Buckley's saw-mills, 25 Feb. 1880.

Vedas, the sacred books of the Hindoos, in Sanscrit, were probably written about 1000 a.c. Veda means knowledge. These books comprise hymns, prayers, and liturgical formulae. The edition by prof. Max Müller printed under the patronage of the East India Company appeared in 1849-74. Four volumes of a translation by H. H. Wilson appeared in 1850-67.

Vegetables for the table were brought from Flanders about 1520; see Gardening.

Vegetarian Society, founded 1847, whose members restrict themselves to a vegetable diet, held their fifteenth anniversary in London, 4 Sept. 1862.

Meetings held at Manchester, 14 Oct. 1874, et seq., 22 Oct. 1879.
"Fraternitas," a settlement of vegetarians, existed in California in 1880.

Vehmio Tribunal: Vrämgerichte, Främgerichte, or Femgerichte, were secret tribunals established in Westphalia to maintain religion and the public peace, had their origin in the time of Charlemagne, and rose to importance in 1182, when Westphalia became subject to the archbishop of Cologne. Persons of the most exalted rank were subjected to their decisions, being frequently seized, tried, and executed. The emperors endeavored to suppress them, but did not succeed till the sixteenth century. Their last court, it is said, was held in 1568. Sir W. Scott has described them in "Anne of Geierstein." A remnant of this tribunal was abolished by Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, in 1811.

Vell, an independent Latin city near Rome. Between the Romans and Veientes frequent wars occurred, till Vell was utterly destroyed, after ten years' siege, 396 a.c. The Roman family, the Fabii, who had seceded from Rome for political reasons, were surprised and destroyed at the river Cremera by the Veientes, 477 a.c.

Vellore (S.E. India) became the residence of the family of the dethroned sultan of Mysore, and was strongly garrisoned by English troops, 1799. The revolt of the sepoys, in which the family of the late Tipoo took an active part, took place 10 July, 1806. The mairaguts were subdued by col. Gillespie, and mostly put to the sword; about 800 sepoys were killed.

Velocipedes. A machine of this kind was invented by Blanchard the aeronaut, and described in the Journal de Paris, 27 July, 1779, and one was invented by Niephore Niepce in 1818. The "dandy-horse," or "Draisiana," a machine called a velocipede, was patented for the Baron von Drais, in Paris and London, in 1818, and described in "Ackerman's Repository," Feb. 1819. These machines came again into use in 1861; and since 1867 have been very common under various forms, termed bicycles and tricycles; the chief inventor of which, James Starley, an ingenious mechanic of Albourne, Sumex, was buried at Coventry, June, 1881. Velocipede races took place at the Crystal Palace, 28 May, 1869, and frequently since. Mr. John Mayall and two friends travelled to Brighton on velocipedes, 17 Feb. 1869.

Mr. Stanton went from London to Bath, 106 miles, on a bicycle in 8 h. 28 min. 17 Aug. 1874

Velvet. The manufacture, long confined to Genoa, Lucca, and other places in Italy, was carried to France, and thence to England, about 1685. Velvet is mentioned by Joinville in 1272; and our king Richard II., in his will, directed his body to be clothed "in velvet," 1399. Jerome Lanyer in London patented his "velvet paper" in 1634.

Venaisain Comtat, or COMTAT (S. France), after various changes, was ceded to pope Gregory X. 1274, and retained by his successors till 1791, when, with Avignon, it was reunited to France.

Venezuela, the seat of a South American republic. When the Spaniards landed here in 1499, they observed some huts built upon piles, in an Indian village named Corn, in order to raise them above the stagnated water that covered the plain; and this induced them to give it the name of Venezuela, or Little Venice. This state, in July, 1814, declared in congressional assembly the sovereignty of its people, which was recognized in 1818. It formed part of the republic of Colombia till it separated from the federal union, Nov. 1829.

Ventilators were invented by the rev. Dr. Halse, and described to the Royal Society of London, May, 1741; and the ventilator for the use of ships was announced by Mr. Triewald in Nov. same year. The marquess of Chabannes's plan for warming and ventilating theatres and houses for audiences was applied to those of London about 1819. The systems of Dr. Reid (about 1834) and others followed, with much controversy. Dr. Arnott's work on this subject was published in 1838. A commission on warming and ventilation issued a report in 1859.

Ventriloquism (speaking from the belly) is evidently described in Isa. xxix. 4 (about 712 B.C.). Among eminent ventriloquists were baron Menges and M. Saint Gille, about 1772 (whose experiments were examined by a commission of the French Academy); Thomas King (about 1716), Charles Mathews (1824), and M. Alexandre (1822).

Venus, the Roman goddess of love and beauty (the Greek Aphrodite). The transit of the planet Venus over the sun was predicted by Kepler, but not observed. The first transit observed was by the rev. Jeremiah Horrox, or Horrocks, and his friend William Crabtree, on 24 Nov. 1639, as predicted by Horrox in 1633. The astronomer-royal Maskelyne observed the transit at St. Helena, 6 June, 1761. Capt. Cook made his first voyage in the Endeavour to Otaheite to observe a transit of Venus, 3 June, 1769; see Cook's Voyages. The diurnal rotation of Venus was discovered by Cassini in 1667. The transit, 6 Dec. 1882, may be observed in Eastern Europe, Asia, New Zealand, Australia, the Mauritius, etc.; see Sun, note.

Halley suggested the observation of the transit as a means of estimating the distance of the earth from the sun, and devised a method for this purpose..... 1716

Vera Cruz (Mexico), built about 1600, was taken by the Americans in 1847, and by the allies on 17 Dec. 1861, during the intervention; retaken by the liberals under Juarez, 27 June, 1867.

Vercelli (the ancient Vercellæ), Piedmont, near which Marius defeated the Cimbri, 101 A.C. It was the seat of a republic in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. It was taken by the Spaniards, 1630; French, 1704; and allies, 1706; and afterwards partook of the fortunes of Piedmont.

Verden (Hanover). Here Charlemagne massacred about 4500 Saxons, who had rebelled and relapsed into idolatry, 782.

Verdun (the ancient Verodanum), a first-class fortress on the Meuse, N.E. France, made a magazine for his legions by Julius Caesar. It was acquired by the Franks in the sixth century, and formed part of the dominions of Lothaire by the treaty of Verdun, 843, when the empire was divided between the sons of Louis I. It was taken and annexed to the empire by Otto I. about 939. It surrendered to France in 1552, and was formally ceded in 1648. It was taken and held by the Prussians 43 days, Sept. Oct. 1792. Gen. Beaurepaire, the commandant, committed suicide before the surrender, and 14 ladies were executed on 28 May, 1794, for going to the king of Prussia to solicit his clemency for the town. Verdun surrendered to the Germans 8 Nov. 1870, after a brave defence, two vigorous sallies being made 28 Oct. Above 4000 men were captured, with a large quantity of arms and ammunition. It was the last place held by the Germans, and was given up 15, 16 Sept. 1873, and the troops retired.

Vergara (N. Spain). Here the Carlist general Martore made a treaty, termed "The Pacification of Vergara," with Espartero, 31 Aug. 1839. The monument to celebrate it was destroyed by the Carlists in Aug. 1873.

Vermandois (N. France), a county given by Charlemagne to his second son Pepin, whose family held it till the eleventh century. In 1156 it came by marriage to the counts of Flanders, and in 1185 it was seized by Philip II., and incorporated with the monarchy in 1215.

Vermont, a northern state of the United States, was settled by the French, 1724-31, and ceded to Great Britain in 1763. It was freed from the authority of New York, and admitted as a state of the Union in 1791.

Vernouil (N.W. France), the site of a battle fought 17 Aug. 1424, between the Burgundians and English under the regent duke of Bedford, and the French, assisted by the Scots, commanded by the count de Narbonne, the earls of Douglas and Buchan, etc. The French at first were successful, but some Lombard auxiliaries who had taken the English camp commenced pillaging. Two thousand English archers came then fresh to the attack, and the French and Scots were totally defeated and their leaders killed.

Vernon Gallery. The inadequate manner in which modern British art was represented in the National Gallery was somewhat remedied in 1847 by the munificent present to the nation by Mr. Robert Vernon of a collection of 157 pictures, all but two being by first-rate British artists. They were first exhibited at Mr. Vernon's house in Pall Mall, next in the vaults beneath the National Gallery, afterwards at Marlborough house, and are now at the South Kensington Museum. In 1857 Mr. John Sheepshanks followed Mr. Vernon's example; see Sheepshanks's Donations.

Verona (N. Italy) was founded by the Gauls or Etruscans, see Campus Raudius. The amphitheatre was built by Titus, A.D. 82. Verona has been the site of many conflicts. It was taken by Constantine, 312; and on 27 Sept. 489, Theodoric defeated Odovacer, king of Italy. Verona was taken by Charlemagne 774. About 1260 Mastino della Scala was elected podestà, and his descendants (the Scaligeri) ruled till subdued by the Visconti, dukes of Milan, 1387. Verona was conquered by the Venetians 1405, and held by them, with some intermissions, till its capture by the French general Massena, 3 June, 1796. Near to it Charles Albert of Sardinia defeated the Austrians, 6 May, 1848. Verona is one of the four strong Austrian fortresses termed the Quadrangle, or Quadrilateral (which see), and here the emperor Francis Joseph, on 12 July, 1859, in an order of the day, announced to his army that he must yield to circumstances unfavorable to his policy, and thanked his people and army for their support. It was surrendered to the Italian government, 16 Oct. 1866; and the king was received by 70,000 persons in the amphitheatre, 18 Nov. 1866. Above 50,000 coins of Gallienus and other emperors, chiefly bronze, discovered near Verona, Jan. 1877.

Versailles (near Paris) was a small village, in a forest thirty miles in circuit, where Louis XIII. built a hunting-seat about 1632. Louis XIV., between 1661 and 1687, enlarged it into a magnificent palace, which became the usual residence of the kings of France. By the treaty between Great Britain and the revolted colonies of British North America, signed at Paris, the latter power was admitted to be a sovereign and independent state, 8 Sept. 1783. On the same day a treaty was signed at Versailles between Great Britain, France, and Spain, by which Pondicherry and Cancale, with other possessions in Bengal, were restored to France, and Trincomalee restored to the Dutch. Here was held the military festival of the royal guards, 1 Oct. 1789, which was followed (on the 6th and 6th) by the attack of the mob, who massacred the guards and brought the king back to Paris. Versailles became the residence of Louis Philippe in 1830. The historical gallery was opened in 1837. Versailles, with the troops there, surrendered to the Germans 19 Sept. 1870, and the crown-prince of Prussia entered the next day; and on 26 Sept. he awarded the iron cross to above 80 soldiers at the foot of the statue of Louis XIV. The palace was converted into a hospital. The royal headquarters were removed here from Ferrières 5 Oct. After the peace Versailles became the seat of the French government (see France), March, 1871.

Verse, see Poetry, Hexameter, Elegy, Iambic, etc. Surrey's translation of part of Virgil's "Æneid" into blank verse is the first English composition of the kind, omitting tragedy, extant in the English language (published in 1547). The verse previously used in our grave compositions was the stanza of eight lines, the ottava rima (as adopted, with the addition of one line, by Spenser in his "Fæerie Queene," who probably borrowed it from Ariosto and Tasso). Boccaccio introduced it into Italy in his "Teseide," having copied it from the old French chansons. Trissino is said to have been the first introducer of blank verse among the moderns, about 1508.—Voanias.

Veseronce (S.E. France), near Vienne. Here Gondegar, king of the Burgundians, defeated and killed Clodomir, king of Orleans, and revenged the murder of his brother Sigismund and his family, 524. This conflict is called also the battle of Voiron.

Vespers, see Sicilian Vespers. In the house of the French ambassador at Blackfriars, in London, a Jesuit was preaching to upwards of three hundred persons in an upper room, the floor of which gave way with the weight, when the whole congregation was precipitated to the street, and the preacher and more than a hundred of his auditory, chiefly persons of rank, were killed. This catastrophe, termed the Fatal Vespers, occurred 26 Oct. 1623.—Stow.

Vesta. The planet Vesta (the ninth) was discovered by Dr. Olbers of Bremen on 29 March, 1807. She appears like a star of the sixth magnitude.

Vestals, virgin priestesses, took care of the perpetual fire consecrated to Vesta. The mother of Romulus was a vestal. Numa is said to have appointed four, 710 B.C., and Tarquin added two. Minutia was buried alive for breaking her virgin vow, 657 B.C.; Sextilia, 278 B.C.; and Cornelia Maximiliana, A.D. 92; see Chastity. The order was abolished by Theodosius, 399.

"Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation," a work which upholds the doctrine of progressive development as an hypothetic history of organic creation, ascribed to Robert Chambers and other persons, first appeared in 1844, and occasioned much controversy; see Origin of Species.

Vesuvius. By an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum (which see) were overwhelmed, 24 Aug. A.D. 79, and more than 200,000 persons perished, among them Pliny the naturalist. Numerous other disastrous eruptions have occurred. Torre del Greco, with 4000 persons, was destroyed, 17 Dec. 1631. There was a dreadful eruption took place suddenly, 24 Nov. 1759, and another 8 Aug. 1767. The violent burst in 1767 was the 34th from the time of Titus. One in June, 1794, was most destructive: the lava flowed over 5000 acres of rich vineyards and cultivated land, and Torre del Greco was a second time burned; the top of the mountain fell in, and the crater is now nearly two miles in circumference. A great eruption in Oct. 1822, and others in May, 1855, May and June, 1858, caused great destruction. A series of violent eruptions, causing much damage, occurred in Dec. 1861, and in Feb. 1865. Torre del Greco was again destroyed in Dec. 1861. Another eruption began 12 Nov. 1867, and continued increasing in grandeur and danger, March, 1868. The phenomena were observed by professors Tyndall and Miller, sir John Lubbock, and other scientific men, in April, 1868. A great eruption began 8 Oct. 1868, and continued, causing much destruction, 19, 20 Nov. A severe eruption began 23 April and ended about 3 May, 1872; above 60 lives were lost. The mountain was disturbed in 1876, and another eruption began about 20 Sept. 1878; lava was spouted to the height of 300 feet. An eruption began 11 June, 1879. Prof. John Phillips's "Vesuvius" was published 1869.

Vicenza (the ancient Vicentia, N. Italy) was the seat of a republic in the twelfth century. It greatly suffered by the ravages of Alaric, 401, and Attila, 452. Having joined the Lombard league, it was sacked by Frederic II. 1236. After many changes it was subjected to Venice, and with it fell under the French domination, 1796; and was given to Austria in 1814. Having revolted, it was retaken by Radetzky, 11 June, 1848. It was annexed to the kingdom of Italy, Oct. 1866.

Vice-president of the Board of Trade. This office was abolished in 1867, and a secretary with a seat in parliament substituted.

Vice-president of the United States. The vice-president of the United States is president of the senate, and in the event of the death, resignation, or disability of the president the vice-president succeeds him. Four vice-presidents have in this way become presidents, as follows: John Tyler, succeeding William Henry Harrison, who died 4 April, 1841; Millard Fillmore, succeeding Zachary Taylor, who died 9 July, 1850; Andrew Johnson, succeeding Abraham Lincoln who died 15 April, 1865; and Chester A. Arthur, succeeding James A. Garfield, who died 19 Oct. 1881.

Vicksburg (Miss.). CAMPAIGN FOR THE POSSESSION OF, 18 May, 1862-4 July, 1863. Vicksburg lies on the east bank of the Mississippi, 400 miles above New Orleans, and about the same distance from Cairo. It is connected with Jackson, the state capital, by railroad; and from De Soto, on the opposite bank, a railroad running to Monroe drains the land-commerce of northern Louisiana. It was the most important and the most defensible military position on the Mississippi. The town, before the war, had a population of about 5000; it is situated on the shelving declivity of high hills, and, with its dwellings scattered in groups on the terraces, presents a very picturesque appearance. The high bluffs upon which the town stands extend southward along the river to Warrenton, and northward till they touch the Yazoo, about 15 miles from Haines's Bluff. Between these bluffs—which were in time strongly fortified by the confederates—and the Yazoo is a low country, full of swamps, lagoons, sloughs, and bayous. It was in this sort of country that Sherman landed his troops (Dec. 1862), and sustained a repulse. The country in the rear of Vicksburg is very rough, and broken by abrupt ravines. The following are the remarkable incidents of the Vicksburg campaign in their chronological order:

S. P. Lee, commanding the advanced naval division of Farragut's squadron, demanded the surrender of Vicksburg, and was refused. M. L. Smith at this time commanded the military defences of Vicksburg with 10,000 men. 18 May, 1862
Gen. Thomas Williams, with four regiments and eight guns, occupies the peninsula opposite Vicksburg. 24 June, "
Farragut runs the Vicksburg blockade to join Davis, and bombards Vicksburg. 26 June, "
Van Dorn takes command at Vicksburg. 28 June, " Expedition up the Yazoo to destroy the ram Arkansas, meets the ram coming down, and retires; the ram passes out into the Mississippi, and takes refuge under the guns of Vicksburg. 15 July, "
Ellet and W. D. Porter, with the Queen of the West and Essex, attack the ram, are repulsed, and with difficulty escape. 22 July, "
Williams's canal begun upon his arrival on the peninsula, proves a failure. 22 July, " Williams's force leaves for Baton Rouge. 24 July, " Destruction of the ram Arkansas, after Breckinridge's defeat at Baton Rouge. 6 Aug. " Vicksburg defences strengthened, and a line of works thrown up on the bluffs south of the Yazoo, Aug.-Dec. "
Gen. J. C. Pemberton supersedes Van Dorn. Oct. "
Grant, moving upon Jackson and the rear of Vicksburg, is compelled to retreat by the surrender of Holly Springs. 30 Dec. "
Sherman embarks from Memphis with 30,000 men 20 Dec.; is re-enforced by 12,000 men at Helena; conveyed up the Yazoo by Porter's fleet 26 Dec.; lands near Chickasaw Bayou 27 Dec.; advances against the northern defences of Vicksburg 28 Dec.; assaults and is repulsed with a loss of 2000 men. 29 Dec. "
Withdrawal of Sherman's expedition from the Yazoo. 2 Jan. 1863
Grant meets Sherman, McClelland, and Porter at the mouth of White River, and consults with them as to further operations against Vicksburg. 18 Jan. " Occupation of Young's Point, 9 miles above Vicksburg, on the opposite bank. 21 Jan. "
The Queen of the West captured in the Red River by the confederates. 15 Feb. " Confederates destroy the Indianola below Vicksburg. 24 Feb. "
Porter sends his "Dummy" past Vicksburg; in the panic which follows the confederates destroy the Queen of the West, and annihilate the Indianola, which they had raised. 24 Feb. "
Grant arrives at Young's Point, 2 Feb.; resumes the work on Williams's canal; the levee breaks, and the project is abandoned. 8 March. "
The Lake Providence route (for getting below Vicksburg on the west bank) opened, but immediately abandoned, 16 March, 1863

The Yazoo Pass route (for obtaining a foothold on the high land above Haines's Bluff) abandoned, 23 March, 1863

The Steele's Bayou route (for turning Fort Pemberton by way of Cypress Bayou, Steele's Bayou, Big Sunflower River, and Deer Creek, thus reaching the rear of Vicksburg) tried and abandoned, Feb.

After the failure of these experiments, Grant advances to New Carthage, 29 March, and sends transports past the Vicksburg batteries, 10-22 April, Grierson's raid from Le Grange, Tennessee, to Baton Rouge, Louisiana, 17 April-2 May.

Porter attacks Grand Gulf, but the troops fail to make a landing, 29 April, 1863

McClernand lands at Bruinsburg, below Vicksburg, 30 April, followed by M'Pherson, and defeats two confederate brigades under Bowen at Port Gibson, 2 May, 1863

Confederate evacuation of Grand Gulf, 3 May, 1863

Sherman reaches Hard Times, and joins Grant's army, 6-8 May, 1863

Battle of Raymond; M'Pherson defeats Gregg and Walker. National loss, 410; confederate, 823, 12 May, 1863

Capture of Jackson, after a brief conflict, by Sherman and M'Pherson. National loss, 255; confederate, 845, 14 May, 1863

Battle of Champion's Hill, or Baker's Creek. Pemberton crossed the Big Black, and took position on Baker's Creek, about 25 miles west of Jackson; here he was defeated by Grant, 16 May, 1863

Battle of the Big Black; on the banks of this river Pemberton made a brief stand, and was defeated by McClernand, 17 May, 1863

Pemberton enters the fortifications of Vicksburg 17 May, 1863

Grant invests Vicksburg; Sherman establishes himself on the Yazoo; Porter opens communications for Grant's army by the Yazoo, 18 May, 1863

First assault on Vicksburg repulsed, 19 May, 1863

Second assault on Vicksburg repulsed, 22 May, 1863

Grant's army re-enforced to nearly 70,000 men, June, 1863

Surrender of Vicksburg, with 27,000 men, 128 pieces of artillery, and 80 siege guns, 4 July, 1863

[In the battles around Vicksburg before its surrender, the confederate loss in killed, wounded, and captured was about 10,000; Grant estimates his loss as 8755. After the capture of Vicksburg, Sherman, with the bulk of Grant's army, advanced against Johnston, and compelled the latter to evacuate Jackson, 16 July, 1863. Johnston, after the first battle of Jackson (14 May), had in vain endeavored to induce Pemberton to join him and fight a decisive battle outside of Vicksburg.]

* A conference of the four great powers, England, France, Austria, and Prussia, was held 24 July, when a note was agreed on and transmitted for acceptance to St. Petersburg and Constantinople, 31 July. This note was accepted by the czar, 10 Aug., but the sultan required modifications, which were rejected by Russia, 7 Sept. The sultan's note (31 Dec.) contained four points: 1. The promptest possible evacuation of the principalities. 2. Revision of the treaties. 3. Maintenance of religious privileges to the communities of all confessions. 4. A definite settlement of the convention respecting the holy places. It was approved by the four powers, and the conferences closed on 16 Jan. 1854. A new conference of plenipotentiaries, from Great Britain (lord John Russell), France (M. Drouyn de L'Huys), Austria (count Buol), Turkey (Arif Effendi), and Russia (count Gortchakoff), took place, March, 1854. Two points, the protectorate of the principalities and the free navigation of the Danube, were agreed to; but the proposals of the powers as to the reduction of the Russian power in the Black Sea were rejected by the czar, and the conference closed, 5 June, 1854. The English and French envoy's assent to the Austrian propositions was not approved of by their governments, and they both resigned their official positions.

[The enormous building with annexes was designed by Mr Scott Russell, most ably supported by the Austrian engineers, the grand central rotunda, 312 feet in diameter, with lofty dome, is an exaggerated Pantheon, suspended on iron girders in place of masonry, and dwarfs St Peter's at Rome.]

TREATY OF VIENNA.

1. The treaty between the emperor of Germany and the king of Spain, by which they confirmed to each other each parts of the Spanish dominions as they were respectively possessed of, and by a private treaty the emperor engaged to employ a force to procure the restoration of Gibraltar to Spain, and to use means for placing the Pretender on the throne of Great Britain. Spain guaranteed the Pragmatic Sanction. 30 April, 1725.
2. Treaty of alliance between the emperor of Germany, Charles VI., George II., king of Great Britain, and the states of Holland, by which the Pragmatic Sanction was guaranteed, and the disputes as to the Spanish succession terminated. (Spain acceded to the treaty on the 23d of July.) Signed 16 March, 1731.
3. Treaty of peace between the emperor Charles VI. of Germany and the king of France, Louis XV., by which the latter power agreed to guarantee the Pragmatic Sanction, and Lorraine was ceded to France. Signed 16 Nov. 1738; see Pragmatic Sanction.
4. Treaty between Napoleon I. of France and Francis (II. of Germany) I. of Austria, by which Austria ceded to France the Tyrol, Dalmatia, and other territories, which were shortly afterwards declared to be united to France under the title of the Illyrian Provinces, and engaged to adhere to the prohibitory system adopted towards England by France and Russia. 14 Oct. 1809.
5. Treaty between Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, confirming the principles on which they had acted by the treaty of Chaumont, 1 March, 1814. Signed 26 March, 1818.
6. Treaty between the king of the Netherlands on the one part, and Great Britain, Russia, Austria, and Prussia on the other, agreeing to the enlargement of the Dutch territories, and vesting the sovereignty in the house of Orange. 21 May, 1818.
7. Treaty by which Denmark ceded Swedish Pomerania and Rugen to Prussia, in exchange for Lauenburg, 4 June, 1818.
8. Commercial treaty for twelve years between Austria and Prussia. Signed at Vienna, 19 Feb. 1820.
9. Treaty for the maintenance of Turkey, by the representatives of Great Britain, France, Austria, and Russia. Signed 9 April, 1824.
10. Treaty between Austria and Prussia and Denmark, by which Denmark ceded the duchies. 30 Oct. 1824.
11. Treaty of peace between Austria and Italy, Venetia given up to Italy. 3 Oct. 1866.

Vienna, the ancient Vinna Aulobogum (A.E. France). Here the emperor Valentinian II. was put to death by Arbogastes, 15 May, 392, and a short reaction in favor of paganism followed. Vienna was capital of the kingdom of Burgundy in 452 and 679, and sometimes gave its name to the kingdom. A general council was held here in 1311. Vienna was annexed to the French monarchy, 1448.

Vigo (N.W. Spain) was attacked and burned by the English, under Drake and Norris, in 1599. Sir George Rooke, with the combined English and Dutch fleets, attacked the French fleet and the Spanish galleons in the port of Vigo, when several men-of-war and galleons were taken, and many destroyed, and abundance of plate and other valuable effects fell into the hands of the conquerors, 12 Oct. 1702. Vigo was taken by lord Cobham in 1719, but relinquished after raising contributions. It was again taken by the British, 27 March, 1809.

Vikings. Scandinavian chiefs, Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians, who in the fourth century migrated—eastward, to the countries beyond the Baltic; westward and southward, chiefly to the British Isles.

Villafranca. Near here, and Llerena, Spain, the British cavalry, under sir Stapleton Cotton, defeated

French cavalry under marshal Soult, 21 April, 1812.—VILLAFRANCA, a small port on the Mediterranean, near Genoa, was bought for a steam-packet station by a Russian company, about Aug. 1855, which caused some political excitement.—At VILLAFRANCA, in Lombardy, the emperors of France and Austria met, on 11 July, 1859 (after the battle of Solferino), and on 12 July signed the preliminaries of peace, the basis of the treaty of Zurich (which see).

Villa Viciosa. 1. In Portugal. Here the Portuguese, under the French general Schomberg, defeated the Spaniards, 1685.—2. In Castile, Spain. Here the struggle for the Spanish crown was decided in favor of Philip V. by Vendôme's victory over Starobinski and the Austrians, 10 Dec. 1710.

Villain, or VILLAIN, see Slavery in England.

Ville de Havre, French Atlantic mail steamer, 6100 tons, sailed from New York for Havre, 16 Nov. 1878; was run into by a Glasgow clipper, Leckmere, about 2 A.M., 22 Nov., and sank in twelve minutes; 236 out of 313 persons perished.

The crew of the Leckmere rescued 87, who were conveyed to Cardiff by the American vessel Princeton, capt. Drygalski, arriving there.....1 Dec. 1898
 The Leckmere, beginning to sink, 22 Nov., was abandoned by her crew, who were rescued by the British Queen, and brought to Plymouth.....4 Dec. "
 On judicial examination, the Leckmere was exonerated in England, but censured in France.....Jan. 1904

Villeta (Paraguay, South America). Here Lopes and the Paraguayans were totally defeated by the Brazilians and their allies, 11 Dec. 1868. Lopes and 300 men fled; 3000 prisoners were made; and the war was considered to be ended.

Vimiera (in Portugal), where the British and Spanish forces, under sir Arthur Wellesley, defeated the French, under marshal Junot, duke of Abrantes, 21 Aug. 1808. The attack, made with great bravery, was gallantly repulsed, it was repeated by Kellermann at the head of the French reserve, which was also repulsed. The French, charged with the bayonet, withdrew on all points in confusion, leaving many prisoners.

Vincennes, a strong castle near Paris; a residence of the French kings from the twelfth to the fourteenth century. Henry V. of England died at the Bois de Vincennes, 31 Aug. 1422. At the fane of the castle, Louis duc d'Anguien was shot by order of Napoleon, after a hasty trial, early on the morning of 23 March, 1804.

Vincent, CAPE ST. (S.W. Portugal); see Cape St. Vincent and Rodney's Victory.

Vincent de Paul, St. CHARITABLE SOCIETY, founded in 1625, in France, by twelve young men. It extends its extremely beneficial operations into Britain. Its power excited the jealousy of the French government, which suppressed its central committee of Paris in Oct. 1861. St. Vincent de Paul was born 1578; established the congregation of Lazarists, or Vincentians, 1625; Sisters of Charity, 1684; a foundling hospital, 1648. He died 1660.

Vincent, St. (West Indies), long a neutral island; but at the peace of 1763 the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English. The latter soon after engaged in a war against the Caribs, on the windward side of the island, who were obliged to assent to a peace, by which they ceded a large tract of land to the British crown. In 1779 the Caribs greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the French, who, however, restored it in 1788. In 1796 the French landed some troops, and again instigated the Caribs to an insurrection, which was not subdued for several months. The great eruption of the Soufriere mountain, some 400 years of more than a century, occurred in Vincy (N. France). Here Charles Martel defeated the Neustrians, 21 May, 717, and acquired their country.

Vine. The vine was planted by Noah, 2347 B.C. (Gen. ix. 20). A colony of vine-dressers from Phoece, in Ionia, settled at Marseilles, and instructed the South Gauls in tillage, vine-dressing, and commerce, about 600 B.C. Some think that vines are aborigines of Languedoc, Provence, and Sicily; and that they grew spontaneously on the Mediterranean shores of Italy, France, and Spain. The vine was carried into Champagne, and part of Germany, by the emperor Probus, about A.D. 279. The vine and sugar-cane were planted in Madeira in 1420. In the gardens of Hampton-court palace is an old and celebrated vine, said to surpass any known vine in Europe; see Grapes and Wine. The Tokay vines were planted in 1350.

Vine disease. In the spring of 1845, Mr. E. Tucker, of Margate, observed a fungus (since named oidium Tuckeri) on grapes in the hot houses of Mr. Slater, of Margate. It is a whitish mildew, and totally destroys the fruit.

The spores of this oidium were found in the vineries at Versailles in 1847. The disease soon reached the trellised vines, and in 1850 many lost all their produce.

In 1852 it spread over France, Italy, Spain, Syria, and in Zante and Cephalonia attacked the currants, reducing the crop to one twelfth of the usual amount.

Through its ravages, the wine manufacture in Madeira ceased for several years.

Many attempts have been made to arrest the progress of this disease, but without much effect. Sulphur-dust is the most efficacious remedy.

The disease had much abated in France, Portugal, and Madeira, in 1863. In 1862 Californian vines were introduced into the two latter.

New malady (microscopic insect, phyloxera vastatrix) in S. France, observed..... 1865

Remedy, sulphuret of carbon, recommended by M. Dumas..... 1873

Not successful; great destruction; 12,000*l.* offered for a remedy..... July, 1876

Phylloxera prevalent in Malaga and France; reported July, Aug. 1878; Portugal, Italy, Spain, Sept.-Nov. 1879; appears in Victoria, Australia..... Nov. 1880

Vinegar. The ancients had several kinds, which they used for drink. The Roman soldiers were accustomed to take it in their march. The Bible represents Boaz, a rich citizen of Bethlehem, as providing vinegar for his reapers (1312 B.C.), a custom still prevalent in Spain and Italy.

Vinegar Hill (near Enniscorthy, in Wexford, S.E. Ireland). Here the Irish rebels, headed by father John, a priest, encamped and committed many outrages on the surrounding country. They were gradually surrounded by the British troops, commanded by Lake, 21 June, 1798; and after a fierce struggle, with much slaughter, totally dispersed.

Vintners, see Viticultors.

Viol and Violin. The lyre of the Greeks became our harp, and the viol of the middle ages became the violin. The violin is mentioned as early as 1200, in the legendary life of St. Christopher. It was introduced into England, some say, by Charles II. Stradivarius (or Stradivari) of Cremona, was a renowned violin-maker (1700 to 1722). The eminent violinist Paganini visited England, 1831; died at Nice, 27 May, 1840.

Virgin Islands (West Indies), an eastern group discovered by Columbus (1494): Virgin Gorda, Tortola, Anegada, etc., and the Danish isles, St. Thomas, Santa Cruz, and St. John.

Tortola settled by Dutch buccaneers about 1648; expelled by the English (who have held it since)..... 1666

St. Thomas settled by Danes 1672, and St. John a few years after; held by the British 1801-2, 1807-15; proposed sale to the United States for 1,500,000*l.* to be made a "territory." Danish proclamation, 25 Oct. 1857; purchase declined by United States senate.

23 March, May, 1870

By a dreadful hurricane off St. Thomas, the royal mail steamers Rhone and Wye were entirely wrecked; the Conway and Derwent, and above 60 other vessels, driven ashore; about 1000 persons said to have perished.

Much suffering occasioned in Tortola; houses blown down or unroofed, etc. (a report reached London that the isle was submerged)..... 29 Oct. 1867

Earthquake at St. Thomas and other isles; much damage; few lives lost..... Nov. "

Santa Cruz. A negro insurrection, in which M. Fontaine, a planter, was killed; Frederickssted and 36 out of 50 sugar plantations were burned, and about 3000 whites rendered homeless. During the suppression by col. Garde, the governor, about 200 negroes were killed..... 1-5 Oct. 1878

Virgin Mary. The Assumption of the Virgin is a festival in the Greek and Latin churches, in honor of the miraculous ascent of Mary into heaven, according to their belief, 15 Aug. A.D. 45. The Presentation of the Virgin is a feast celebrated 21 Nov., said to have been instituted among the Greeks in the eleventh century; its institution in the West is ascribed to pope Gregory XI., 1872; see Annunciation, and Conception, Immaculate.

Virginals; an early keyed instrument of the kind termed clavichords; used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; played on by queen Elizabeth and Mary queen of Scots. According to Johnson, it owed its name to young women being the usual performers. Tallis, Morley, Purcell, Gibbons, and Bull composed for this instrument.

Virginia, see Rome, 449 B.C.

Virginia, one of the original states of the United States. The name was given by Raleigh, 13 July, 1584, to the whole region from the Cape Fear river to Halifax, discovered by Cabot in 1497. Vain attempts to plant colonies were made in 1585, at Roanoke, N. C. The first permanent English settlement in America was made at Jamestown, Virginia, 23 May, 1607. Virginia was made a royal province 1624; Bacon's Rebellion, 1676. Virginia seceded from the Union, 17 April, 1861 (see West Virginia). Virginia readmitted to representation in congress, 1870. During the civil war, 1861-5, Virginia was a principal theatre of operations. Richmond was made the capital of the Southern Confederacy, May, 1861, and from that time it was the objective point of the operations of the national army. The principal battles fought in Virginia were: Bull Run, 21 July, 1861; Ball's Bluff, 21 Oct. 1861; Hampton Roads (Monitor and Merrimac) 9 March, 1862; Fair Oaks, or Seven Pines, 31 May-1 June, 1862; Seven Days' Battle, 25 June-1 July, 1862; Cedar Mountain, 9 Aug.; Second Bull Run, 29-30 Aug. 1862; Fredericksburg, 13 Dec. 1862; Chancellorsville, 2-3 May, 1863; Wilderness, 5-6 May, 1864; Spottsylvania, 8-12 May, 1864; New Market, 15 May, 1864; Cold Harbor, 3 June, 1864; mine explosion at Petersburg, 30 July, 1864; Winchester, 19 Sept. 1864; Fisher's Hill, 22 Sept. 1864; Five Forks, 1 April, 1865; Petersburg and Richmond taken, 3 April, 1865; Lee's surrender, 9 April, 1865. See United States, Richmond, Grant's Virginia Campaign, Peminsular Campaign, etc.

Virginia City, see Nevada.

Virgilius, American blockade-runner, see Cuba, 1873.

Virtue, LEAGUE OF, see Tugendbund.

Visconti, the name of a noble Italian family, which ruled in Milan from about 1277 to 1447; the heiress of the family was married to Francesco Sforza, who became duke 1450.

Viscount (Vice Comes), anciently the name of the deputy of an earl. The first viscount in England created by patent was John, lord Beaumont, whom Henry VI. created viscount Beaumont, giving him precedence above all barons, 10 Feb. 1440.—Ashmole. This title is of older date in Ireland and France. John Barry, lord Barry, was made viscount Buttevant, in Ireland, 9 Rich. II. 1385.—Benton.

Visible Speech, a term applied by Mr. Alex. Melville Bell to his "Universal Self-Interpreting Physiological Alphabet," comprising thirty symbols representing the conformations of the mouth when uttering sounds. He stated that about fifty different types would be required to print all known languages with these symbols. He expounded his system to the Society of Arts, London, 14 March, 1866; and published a book in 1867.

Visigoths, separated from the Ostrogoths about 330; see Goths. The emperor Valens, about 369, admitted them into the Roman territories upon the condition of their serving when wanted in the Roman armies; and Theodosius the Great permitted them to form distinct corps commanded by their own officers. In 400, under Alaric, they invaded Italy, and in 410 took Rome. They founded their kingdom of Toulouse, 414; conquered the Alans, and extended their rule into Spain, 414; expelled the Romans in 469; and finally were themselves conquered by the Saracens under Muza, in 711, when their last king, Roderic, was defeated and slain; see Spain for a list of the Visigothic kings. Their rule in France ended with their defeat by Clovis at Vouglé, in 507.

Visitations, see Heralds.

Vital Force, defined by Humboldt "as an unknown cause preventing the elements from obeying their primitive affinities." This theory is now opposed by many physiologists, and animal motion is attributed to muscular and nervous irritability, illustrated by the researches of Galvani, Humboldt, sir Charles Bell, Marshall Hall, and others. The subject has been much discussed recently by Huxley and other eminent physiologists.

Viti Isles, see Fiji.

Vittoria (N. Spain), the site of a victory obtained by Wellington over the French army commanded by Joseph Bonaparte, king of Spain, and marshal Jourdan, 21 June, 1813. The hostile armies were nearly equal, from 70,000 to 75,000 each. After a long and fearful battle, the French were driven, towards evening, through the town of Vittoria, and in their retreat were thrown into irretrievable confusion. The British loss was 22 officers and 479 men killed; 167 officers and 2640 men wounded. Marshal Jourdan lost 151 pieces of cannon, 431 wagons of ammunition, all his baggage, provisions, cattle, and treasure, with his baton as a marshal of France. Continuing the pursuit on the 25th, Wellington took Jourdan's only remaining gun.

Vivarium, see Aquarivarium.

Vivisection. Physiological experiments upon living animals having much increased, the societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals in Dresden and Paris in 1859 requested the opinion of a committee of eminent scientific men on the merits of the knowledge thus acquired. Their judgment was not unanimous. The London society took up the question in 1860, and printed a pamphlet by Mr. G. Macilwain against vivisection. In Aug. 1862, an international conference to discuss the question was held at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham. The subject was discussed in 1866, and a prize awarded by the London society. Sir Charles Bell's opinion of vivisection was that it either obacured the subject it was meant to illustrate, or misled men into practical errors of the most serious character.

Discussion revived in consequence of the prosecution of Dr. Schiff in Florence, who justified vivisection when chloroform or any other anæsthetic is used. 1873-4
Rival societies. 1. Society for the abolition of vivisection. 1875. 2. International Association for total suppression of vivisection. 1876 Commission (vicecount Cardwell, prof. Huxley, and others) to inquire into the practice appointed 23 June, 1875, report signed 8 Jan., published March, 1876; a bill to regulate vivisection (Cruelty to Animals act) brought into parliament, strongly opposed by the medical profession in general, June, July, passed, 15 Aug. 1876. Vivisectioners are to have a license or certificate.

Vizier, GRAND, an officer of the Ottoman Porte, said to have been first appointed by Amurath I., about 1386.

The office was abolished in 1838, but has since been frequently revived and suppressed.

Vladimir (central Russia), a city founded in the twelfth century, and the capital of a grand-duchy from 1157 to about 1328.

Voiron, see Veserence.

Volcanoes. In different parts of the earth there are above 200 volcanoes which have been active in modern times; see Etna, Vesuvius, and Island. In Mexico, a plain was filled up into a mountain more than a thousand feet in height by the burning lava from a volcano, in 1759. A volcano in the isle of Ferro broke out 18 Sept. 1777, which threw out an immense quantity of red water, that discolored the sea for several leagues. A new volcano appeared in one of the Azore islands, 1 May, 1808.

Volhynia, a Polish province, annexed to Russia 1795.

Volsci, an ancient Latin people, frequently at war with the Romans. From their capital, Corioli, Caius Martius (who defeated them about 490 B.C.) derived his name Coriolanus. The story of his banishment by his ungrateful countrymen, of his revenge on them by bringing the Volsci to the gates of Rome, yet afterwards sparing the city at the entreaties of his mother, Volturna (487 B.C.), is considered by many as a poetical legend. The Volsci and their allies were totally defeated at Sutrium by the consul Valerius Corvus (346), and incorporated with the Roman people about 338.

Volturni, the inhabitants of an Etrurian city, who, after a sharp contest, were completely overcome by the Roman consul Titus Coruncanius, 280 B.C.

Voltaic Pile or BATTERY was constructed by Galvani; see Galvanism in article Electricity. The principle was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como (born 1745), for thirty years professor of natural philosophy at Pavia, and announced by him to the Royal Society of London in 1793. The battery was first set up in 1800. Volta was made an Italian count and senator by Napoleon Bonaparte, and was otherwise greatly honored. While young he invented the electrophorus, electric pistol, and hydrogen lamp. He died in 1826, aged 81. The form of the Voltaic battery has been greatly improved by the researches of modern philosophers. The nitric-acid battery of sir W. R. Grove was constructed in 1839; Alfred Smee's battery in 1840; the carbon battery of prof. Robert Bunsen in 1842. The first is very much used in this country; that of Bunsen on the continent; see Copper-zinc Couple.

Volturno, a river in S. Italy, near Capua, near to which Garibaldi and his followers held a strong position. This was furiously assailed by the royal troops on 1 Oct. 1860, who were finally repulsed after a desperate struggle, the fiercest in which Garibaldi had yet been engaged. He was aided greatly by a band of Piedmontese from Naples. On 2 Oct. gen. Bixio completed the victory by capturing 2500 fresh Neapolitan troops and dispersing others.

Voluntary Contributions. Public contributions for the support of the British government against the policy and designs of France amounted to two millions and a half sterling in 1798. About 200,000*l.* were transmitted to England from India in 1799. Sir Robert Peel, of Bury, among other contributions of equal amount, subscribed 10,000*l.*—Annual Register. See Patriotic Fund. In 1862 nearly a million pounds were subscribed in the British empire for the relief of the Lancashire cotton-spinners; see Cotton and Mansum-house, where voluntary contributions for beneficent purposes are continually received.

Volunteers were enrolled in England for the American war, 1778, and especially in consequence of the threatened invasion of revolutionary France, 1793-4. Besides our large army, and 85,000 men voted for the sea, we subsidized 40,000 Germans, raised our militia to 100,000 men, and armed the citizens as volunteers; the yeomanry formed cavalry regiments. Between 1798 and 1804, when this force was of greatest amount, it numbered 410,000, of which 70,000 were Irish.* On 26 Oct. 1803, king George III. reviewed in Hyde Park 12,401 London volunteers, and on 28 Oct. 14,676 more. The English volunteers were, according to official accounts, 341,600 on 1 Jan. 1804; see Naval Volunteers. In May, 1859, in consequence of the prevalence of the fear of a French invasion, the formation of volunteer corps of riflemen commenced under the auspices of the government, and by the end of the year many thousands were enrolled in all parts of the kingdom. The volunteers were said to be "a force potentially the strongest defence of England," 19 April, 1870: see Artillery Association and Naval Artillery Volunteer Force.

YKOMASRY were enrolled by lord Chatham in 1761. The present 49 regiments of cavalry (about 300 each) cost 80,000. 1870

[The first Middlesex volunteers were formed in 1803 as the duke of Cumberland's sharpshooters. They retained their organization as a rifle club when other volunteers were disbanded. In 1835 they were permitted by the duchess of Kent to take the name of the Royal Victoria Rifle Club.]

Circular letter from col. Jonathan Peel proposing organization of National Volunteer Association for promoting the practice of rifle-shooting, 12 May, 1859. It was established in London, under the patronage of the queen and prince-consort, Mr. Sidney (afterwards lord) Herbert, secretary at war, president, and the earl of Derby and other noblemen vice-presidents. (Annual subscription one guinea, or a composition for life of ten guineas.) 16 Nov. 1859

* The first regiment of Irish volunteers was formed at Dublin, under command of the duke of Leinster, 12 Oct. 1779. They armed generally to the amount of 20,000 men, and received the unanimous thanks of the houses of lords and commons in Ireland, for their patriotism and spirit, for coming forward and defending their country. At the period when the force appeared, Irish affairs bore a serious aspect; manufactures had decreased, and foreign trade had been hurt by a prohibition of the export of salted provisions and butter. No notice of the complaints of the people had been taken in the English parliament, when, owing to the alarm of an invasion, ministers allowed the nation to arm, and an immense force was soon raised. The Irish took this occasion to demand a free trade, and government saw there was no trilling with a country with arms in its hands. The Irish parliament unanimously addressed the king for a free trade, and it was granted, 1779.

Vouglé, or VOUILLÉ (S.W. France, near Poitiers), where Alaric II., king of the Visigoths, was defeated and slain by Clovis, king of France, 507, who subdued the whole country from the Loire to the Pyrenees. A peace followed between the Franks and Visigoths, who had been settled above one hundred years in that part of Gaul called Septimania. Clovis soon afterwards made Paris his capital.

Voyages. By order of Pharaoh-Necho, of Egypt, some Phœnician pilots sailed from Egypt down the Arabian gulf, round what is now called the Cape of Good Hope, entered the Mediterranean by the Strait of Gibraltar, coasted along the north of Africa, and at length arrived in Egypt, after a navigation of about three years, 604 B.C.—Herodotus. The first voyage round the world was made by a ship, part of a Spanish squadron which had been under the command of Magellan (who was killed at the Philippine islands in a skirmish) in 1519-20; see Circumnavigators and North-west Passage.

Voysey Establishment Fund. The rev. Charles Voysey having been deprived for heresy (see Church of England, 1871), began a series of services at St. George's hall, Langham place, 1 Oct. 1871. The fund for their maintenance was supported by bishop Hinds of Norwich (retired), sir John Bowring, and other eminent liberals. He termed his congregation a "Theistic Church."

Vulcan, see Planets. The Greek god Hephaistos answered to the Roman Vulcan.

Vulcanite (vulcanized india-rubber), also termed Ebonite.

Vulgate (from vulgatus, published), a term applied to the Latin version of the Scriptures which is authorized by the council of Trent (1546), and which is attributed to St. Jerome, about 384. The older version, called the Italic, is said to have been made in the beginning of the second century. A critical edition was printed by order of pope Sixtus V. in 1590, which, being considered inaccurate, was superseded by the edition of pope Clement V. in 1592. The earliest printed vulgate is without date, by Gutenberg and Fust, probably about 1455; the first dated (Fust and Schœffer) is 1462.

Wages in England. The wages of sundry workmen were first fixed by act of parliament 25 Edw. III. 1350. Haymakers had but one penny a day. Master-carpenters, masons, tilers, and other coverers of houses, had not more than 3d. per day (about 9d. of our money); and their servants, 1½d.—Viner's Statutes.

By the 23 Henry VI. the wages of a bailiff of husbandry was 23s. 4d. per annum, and clothing of the price of 5s., with meat and drink; chief hind, carter, or shepherd, 20s., clothing, 4s.; common servant of husbandry, 15s., clothing, 40d.; woman-servant, 10s., clothing, 4s. 1444
 By the 11 Henry VII. a like rate of wages with a little advance; as, for instance, a freeman, master-carpenter, rough mason, bricklayer, master-tiler, plumber, glazier, carver, or joiner, was allowed from Easter to Michaelmas to take 6d. a day without meat and drink; or, with meat and drink, 4d.; from Michaelmas to

Easter, to abate 1d. A master having under him six men was allowed 1d. a day extra. 1495
 In 1866 the annual amount of wages paid in the United Kingdom was estimated by Mr. Gladstone at 250,000,000l.; by Mr. Bass at 350,000,000l.; and by prof. Leone Levi at 418,300,000l., earned by 10,697,000 workers, ages 20 to 60.
 In 1872-8 many trades struck for increase of wages, and frequently were successful; in 1877-9, unsuccessful.
 In 1878 prof. Levi estimated that 503,000,000l. were earned (by men, 390,000,000l.; by women, 113,000,000l.); after deducting for holidays, etc., 422,700,000l.
 He says that "in no other country are wages more liberal, but in no other country are they more wastefully used." See Strikes.

Waghorn's New Overland Route to India.

Lieut. Waghorn devoted a large portion of his life to connect India with England. On 31 Oct. 1845, he arrived in London by a new route, with the Bombay mail of the 1st of that month. His despatches reached Suez on the 19th, and Alexandria on the 20th, whence he proceeded by steamboat to a place twelve miles nearer London than Trieste. He hurried through Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Prussia, and Belgium, and reached London at half-past four on the morning of the first-mentioned day. The authorities of the different countries through which he passed eagerly facilitated his movements. The ordinary express, by way of Marseilles, reached London 2 Nov. following. Mr. Waghorn subsequently addressed a letter to the Times newspaper, in which he stated that in a couple of years he would bring the Bombay mail to London in 21 days. He died 8 Jan. 1850.

The Overland Mail, which had left Bombay on 1 Dec. 1845, arrived early on the 30th in London, by way of Marseilles and Paris. The speedy arrival was owing to the great exertions made by the French government to show that the route through France was shorter and better.

Wagnerism, see under Music.

Wagons were rare in the last century. They, with carts, etc., not excepting those used in agriculture, were taxed in 1783. The carriers' wagons are now nearly superseded by the railways.

Wagram, a village near Vienna, where Napoleon I. totally defeated the archduke Charles, 5, 6 July, 1809. The slaughter on both sides was dreadful; 20,000 Austrians were taken by the French, and the defeated army retired to Moravia. An armistice was signed on the 12th; and on 24 Oct., by a treaty of peace, Austria ceded all her sea-coast to France; the kingdoms of Saxony and Bavaria were enlarged at her expense; part of Poland in Galicia was ceded to Russia; and Joseph Bonaparte was recognized as king of Spain.

Wahabees, or WAHABITES, a warlike Mahometan reforming sect, considering themselves the only true followers of the prophet, established themselves in Arabia about 1750, under the rule of Abd-el-Wahab, who died 1787. His grandson, Saoud, in 1801, defeated an expedition headed by the caliph of Bagdad. In 1803 this sect seized Mecca and Medina, and continued their conquests, although their chief was assassinated in the midst of his victories. His son, Abdallah, long resisted Mahomed Ali, pacha of Egypt, but in 1818 was defeated and taken prisoner by Ibrahim Pacha, who sent him to Constantinople, where he was put to death. The sect, now flourishing, is well described by Mr. W. Gifford Palgrave, in his "Journey and Residence in Arabia in 1862-3," published in 1865. It is influential in India, and is suspected of a tendency to insurrection.

Wahlstatt, see Katbach.

Waits, the night minstrels who perform shortly before Christmas. The name was given to the musicians attached to the king's court. We find that a company of waits was established at Exeter in 1400 to "pipe the watch." The waits in London and Westminster were long officially recognized by the corporation.

Wakefield (W. Yorkshire), an ancient town. Near it a battle was fought between the adherents of Margaret, the queen of Henry VI., and the duke of York, in which the latter was slain, and 3000 Yorkists fell upon the field, 31 Dec. 1460. The earl of Warwick supported the cause of the duke's son, the earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., and the civil war was continued. An art and industrial exhibition was opened at Wakefield, 30 Aug. 1865. The Bishoppes act, authorizing the establishment of a see at Wakefield, was passed 16 Aug. 1878.

Wakes, the ancient parish festivals on the saint's day to commemorate the dedication of the church; regulated in 1536, but gradually became obsolete.

Walbrook Church (London), a masterpiece of sir Christopher Wren, completed in 1679. There was a church here in 1135, and a new church was erected in 1429.

Walcheren (an island at the mouth of the Scheldt, Holland). The unfortunate expedition of the British to this isle in 1809 consisted of 35 ships of the line, and 200 smaller vessels, principally transports, and 40,000 land forces, the latter under the command of the earl of Chatham, and the fleet under sir Richard Strachan. For a long time the destination of the expedition remained secret; but before 28 July, 1809, when it set sail, the French journals had announced that Walcheren was the point of attack. Flushing was invested in Aug.; a dreadful bombardment followed, and the place was taken 15 Aug.; but no suggestion on the part of the naval commander, nor urging on the part of the officers, could induce the earl to vigorous action until the period of probable success was gone, and necessity obliged him to return with as many of the troops as disease and an unhealthy climate had spared. The place was evacuated 23 Dec. 1809. The house of commons instituted an inquiry, and lord Chatham resigned his post of master-general of the ordnance, to prevent greater disgrace; but the policy of ministers in planning the expedition was, nevertheless, approved. The following epigram, of which various readings exist, appeared at the time:

"Lord Chatham [or the warrior earl] with [his] sabre drawn,
Stood waiting for sir Richard Strachan;
Sir Richard, longing [or eager] to be at 'em,
Stood waiting for the earl of Chatham."

Waldeck and Pyrmont, united German principalities, established in 1682. The late reigning family claim descent from the Saxon hero, Witikind, who flourished about 772. Prince George Victor, born 14 Jan. 1831, succeeded his father, George, 15 May, 1845. Heir: Frederic, son, born 20 Jan. 1865. On 22 Oct. 1867, the states approved a treaty of annexation, and the administration was transferred to Prussia, 1 Jan. 1868. Population in Dec. 1871, 56,218; 1873, 57,743.

Waldenses (also called Valdenses, Vallenses, and Vaudois), a sect inhabiting the Cottian Alps, derive their name, according to some authors, from Peter de Waldo, of Lyons (1170). They had a translation of the Bible, and allied themselves to the Albigenses, whose persecution led to the establishment of the Holy Office or Inquisition; see Albigenses. The Waldenses settled in the valleys of Piedmont about 1375, but were frequently dreadfully persecuted, especially in the seventeenth century, when Charles I. of England interceded for them (1627-9), and Oliver Cromwell by threats (1655-6) obtained them some degree of toleration. They were permitted to have a church at Turin, Dec. 1853. In March, 1868, it was stated that there were in Italy 28 ordained Waldensian ministers, and 30 other teachers.

Wales, Cambria, Cymru, the land of the Cymry, called by the Romans Britannia Secunda. Welsh and Wales are corruptions of Teutonic epithets applied to foreigners, especially Gauls. After the Roman emperor Honorius gave up Britain, Vortigern was elected king of South Britain. He invited the Saxons over to defend his country against the Picts and Scots; but the Saxons perfidiously sent for reinforcements, consisting of Saxons, Danes, and Angles, by which they made themselves masters of South Britain. Many of the Britons retired to Wales, and defended themselves against the Saxons in their inaccessible mountains, about 447. In this state Wales remained unconquered till Henry II.

subdued South Wales in 1157; and in 1282 Edward I. entirely reduced the whole country, an end being put to its independence by the death of Llewelyn, the last prince.* In 1284 the queen gave birth to a son at Caernarvon, whom Edward styled prince of Wales, now title of the heir to the crown of Great Britain. Wales was united and incorporated with England by act of parliament, 1536; see Britain and Bards.

Pembroke castle taken; colonel Poyer shot..... 25 April, 1649

† At the commencement of the civil war, Pembroke castle was the only Welsh fortress in the possession of the parliament, and it was intrusted to the command of col. Langhorne.

In 1648, he, and colonels Powel and Poyer, embraced the cause of the king, and made Pembroke their headquarters; after the defeat at St. Fagan's they retired to the castle, followed by an army led by Cromwell. They capitulated, after having endured great sufferings from want of water. Langhorne, Powel, and Poyer were tried by a court-martial, and condemned to death; but Cromwell having been induced to spare the lives of two of them, it was ordered that they should draw lots for the favor, and three papers were folded up, on two of which were written the words, "Life given by God;" the third was left blank. The latter was drawn by col. Poyer, who was shot in London accordingly on the above-mentioned day, after long imprisonment.—Pennant.

* The statute of Wales, enacted at Rhuddlan, 19 March, 1284 (or March, 1283), alleges that "Divine Providence has now removed all obstacles, and transferred wholly and entirely to the king's dominion the land of Wales and its inhabitants, heretofore subject unto him in feudal right." The ancient laws were to be preserved in civil causes; but the law of inheritance was to be changed, and the English criminal law to be put in force.—Annals of England.

 1751. George, his son (afterwards George III.).
 1762. George, his son (afterwards George IV.); born 12 Aug.

* WALES, PRINCESS OF. This title was held, some authors say, during the early period of her life, by the princess Mary of England, eldest daughter of Henry VIII., and afterwards queen Mary I. She was created, they state, by her father princess of Wales, in order to conciliate the Welsh people and keep alive the name, and was the only princess of Wales in her own right; a rank she enjoyed until the birth of a son to Henry, who was afterwards Edward VI., born in 1537. This is denied by Banks Walnut-tree has long existed in England.* The black walnut-tree (Juglans nigra) was brought to this country from North America before 1629.

Walpole's Administrations. Mr. Walpole (afterwards sir Robert, and earl of Oxford) was born in 1676; became secretary at war in 1708; was expelled the house of commons on a charge of misappropriating the public money, 1711; committed to the Tower, 17 Jan. 1712; became first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer in Oct. 1715. He resigned, on a disunion of the cabinet, in 1717, bringing in the sinking-fund bill on the day of his resignation. On the earl of Sunderland retiring in 1721, he resumed his office, and held it till Feb. 1742. He died 18 March, 1745.

SECOND WALPOLE ADMINISTRATION (APRIL, 1721).

Sir Robert Walpole, first lord of the treasury.

Thomas, lord Parker, created earl of Macclesfield, lord-chancellor.

Henry, lord Carleton (succeeded by William, duke of Devonshire, lord-president).

Evelyn, duke of Kingston (succeeded by lord Trevor), privy seal.

James, earl of Berkeley, first lord of the admiralty.

Charles (viscount Townshend), and John, lord Carteret (the latter succeeded by the duke of Newcastle), secretaries of state.

Duke of Marlborough (succeeded by the earl of Cadogan), ordnance.

George Treby (succeeded by Henry Pelham), secretary at war. Viscount Torrington, etc.

Walrus. One placed in the Zoological Gardens in 1853 lived a few days only; another was placed there in the autumn of 1867, and died 25 Dec.

* Near Welwyn, in Hertfordshire, there was the largest walnut-tree on record; it was felled in 1627, and from it were cut nineteen loads of planks; and as much was sold to a gunsmith in London as cost 10*l*. carriage; besides which there were thirty loads of roots and branches. When standing it covered 76 poles of ground; a space equal to 2299 square yards, statute measure.

Waltz, the popular German national dance, was introduced into England by baron Neuman and others in 1813.—Ruikes.

Wandewash (S. India). Here the French, under Lally, were severely defeated by col. Eyre Coote, 22 Jan. 1760.

Wandsworth, near London. Here was organized a "presbytery," 20 Nov. 1572. In Garratt lane, near this place, a mock election of a mayor of Garratt was formerly held, after every general election of parliament, to which Foote's dramatic piece, "The Mayor of Garratt" (1763), gave no small celebrity. The iron bridge here was opened 26 Sept. 1873.

War, called by Erasmus "the malady of princes." Ozymandias of Egypt, the first warlike king, passed into Asia, and conquered Bactria, 2100 B.C.—Usher. He is supposed by some to be the Osiris of the priests. It is computed that, up to the present time, no less than 6,860,000,000 men have perished on the field of battle; see Battles, Secretaries, Neutral Powers. An international conference on "usages of war" began at Brussels, 27 July, 1874, and closed without important results; see Brussels Conference. In 1880, about 4,000,000 men in arms; annual cost, 500,000,000*l*.

For the wars with India, China, Persia, Abyssinia, Afghanistan, and Zululand, see those countries respectively.

War Affairs. On account of the war with Russia, the duke of Newcastle, previously colonial secretary, was appointed a secretary for war affairs, and a cabinet minister, 9 June, 1854; see Secretaries. War-office act, passed 20 June, 1870, appoints a financial secretary (who may sit in parliament) and other officers. An act for the protection of war-department stores was passed in 1867. By the warrant abolishing purchase in the army, in 1871, Mr. Cardwell became virtually uncontrolled minister of war. For WAR-OFFICE CHARGE, see under Army and Admiralty.

War, GAME OF (German, Kriegspiel), invented by a civilian in Germany (after the war which ended 1815), and completed by a Prussian officer about 1824. A society (including Von Moltke) was formed at Magdeburg to study it. Prince Arthur lectured on this game at Dover, 13 March, 1872.

Warbeck's Insurrection. Perkin Warbeck, the son of a Florentine Jew, to whom Edward IV. had stood godfather, was persuaded by Margaret, duchess of Burgundy, sister to Richard III., to personate her nephew Richard, Edward V.'s brother, which he did first in Ireland, where he landed, 1492. The imposture was discovered by Henry VII., 1493. Some writers consider that Warbeck was not an impostor.

Warbeck attempted to land in Kent, with 600 men; 169 were taken prisoners, and executed, July, 1495.

Recommended by the king of France to James IV. of Scotland, who gave him his kinswoman, lord Huntley's daughter, in marriage, when he assumed the title of Richard IV. James IV. invaded England in his favor, 1496.

Left Scotland, and went to Bodmin, in Cornwall, where 3000 joined him, Sept. 1497.

On the approach of Henry took sanctuary at Beaulieu; surrendered; taken to London, Oct. 1497.

Said to have been set in the stocks at Westminster and Cheap-side, and sent to the Tower, June, 1499.

Accused of plotting with the earl of Warwick to escape out of the Tower, by murdering the lieutenant, Aug.; the plot failed, and he was hanged at Tyburn, 23 Nov.; the earl beheaded, 28 Nov. 1499.

Warburg (N. Germany). Here the French were defeated by the duke of Brunswick and the allies, 31 July, 1760.

Wardian Cases. In 1829, Mr. N. B. Ward, from observing a small fern and grass growing in a closed glass bottle, in which he had placed a chrysalis covered with moist earth, was led to construct his well-known closely glazed cases, which afford to plants light, heat, and moisture, and exclude deleterious gases, smoke, etc. They are particularly adapted for ferns. In 1833 they were first employed for the transmission of plants to Sydney, etc., with great success, and prof. Faraday lectured on the subject in 1838.

Wardmotes, meetings of the citizens of London in their wards, where they elect annually their common-councilmen. The practice is said to have begun in 1386. They had previously assembled in Guildhall.

Warrants General, do not specify the name of the accused. They were declared to be illegal by lord chief-justice Pratt, 6 Dec. 1763, in relation to the seizure and committal of Mr. Wilkes for a libel on the king; see North Britain.

Waste Lands. The enclosure of waste lands and commons, in order to promote agriculture, first began in England about the year 1547, and gave rise to Ket's rebellion, 1549. Enclosures were again promoted by the authority of parliament, 1785. The waste lands in England were estimated in 1794 to amount to 14,000,000 acres, of which there were taken into cultivation 2,857,476 acres before June, 1801. In 1841 there were about 6,700,000 acres of waste land, of which more than half was thought to be capable of improvement; see Agriculture.

 A watch which belonged to queen Elizabeth is preserved in the library of the Royal Institution, London.
 Spring pocket-watches (watches properly so called) have had their invention ascribed to Dr. Hooke by the English, and to M. Huyghens by the Dutch. Dr. Derham, in his "Artificial Clockmaker," says that Dr. Hooke was the inventor; and he appears certainly to have produced what is called the pendulum watch about 1658; manifest, among other evidences, from an inscription on one of the double-balance watches presented to Charles II.: "Rob. Hooke, inven. 1658; T. Tompion, fecit, 1676."

Water-color Painting was gradually raised from the hard dry style of the last century to its present brilliancy, by the efforts of Nicholson, Copley Fielding, Sandby, Varley, the great Turner, Pyne, Cattermole, Prout, etc., within the present century. The Water-color Society's exhibition was begun in 1806.

Waterford (S. Ireland), built about 879, was totally destroyed by fire in 981. Rebuilt and considerably enlarged by Strongbow in 1171, and still further in the reign of Henry VII., who granted considerable privileges to the citizens. Richard II. landed and was crowned here in 1399; in 1690, James II. embarked from hence for France, after the battle of the Boyne; and William III. resided here twice, and confirmed its privileges. Memorable storm here, 18 April, 1792. The cathedral of Waterford, dedicated to the blessed Trinity, was first built by the Osmen, and by Malchus, the first bishop of Waterford, after his return from England from his consecration, 1096. This see was united with that of Lismore in 1868. It was valued in the king's books, by an extent returned 29 Henry VIII., at 72*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* Irish per annum. By stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 87 (the Irish Church Temporalities act), the see of Waterford and Lismore was united with the see of Cashel and Emly, 14 Aug. 1833. The interior of the cathedral, organ, etc., were destroyed by fire, 25 Oct. 1815.

Water-glass, a name given to a liquid mixture of sand (silicx) and one of the alkalis (potash or soda). Glauber (De Lithiæ) mentions a similar mixture in 1644. Dr. Von Fuchs, the modern inventor, gave an account of his process in 1825; and Mr. Frederick Ransome, of Ipswich, ignorant of Von Fuchs's discovery, patented a mode of preparing water-glass in 1845, which he has since greatly improved upon. In 1857, M. Kuhlmann, of Lille, published a pamphlet setting forth the advantageous employment of water-glass in hardening porous stone and in stereochromy (which see). It has been applied to the exterior of many buildings in France and England. The memoirs of Von Fuchs and Kuhlmann were translated and printed in England, in 1850, by direction of the prince-consort.

Watering Streets. Mr. Cooper's plan for using solutions of chloride of lime or of sodium (which dry slowly and attract moisture and ammonia and other gases, and combine them with the material of the road) was partially used in the parish of St. Mary-le-Bone in 1868, and also in Liverpool, Boston, and other towns. The plan was ordered to be tried in Westminster in July, 1870.

Waterloo, in Belgium, the site of the great battle, on Sunday, 18 June, 1815, between the French army of 71,947 men and 246 guns, under Napoleon, and the allies commanded by the duke of Wellington; the latter, with 67,661 men and 156 guns, resisted the various attacks of the enemy from about ten in the morning until five in the afternoon. About that time 16,000 Prussians reached the field of battle; and by seven, the force under Blücher amounted to above 50,000 men, with 104 guns. Wellington then moved forward his whole army. A total rout ensued, and the carnage was immense. Of the British (28,991), 98 officers and 1916 men were killed and missing, and 868 officers and 4560 men wounded—total, 6982; and the total loss of the allied army amounted to 4206 killed, 14,539 wounded, and 4281 missing, making 22,976 hors de combat. Napoleon, quitting the wreck of his army, returned to Paris; and, finding it impossible to raise another, abdicated.—P. Nicolau.

By the side of the chapel of Waterloo, which was uninjured by shot or shell on 18 June, 1815, Marlborough cut off a large division of the French forces, 17 Aug. 1706. The conquerors on the same field are the only British commanders whose careers brought them to dakedoma.

Waterloo Bridge (London). A bridge over this part of the Thames was repeatedly suggested during the last century, but no actual preparations to carry it into effect were made till 1806, when Mr. G. Dodd procured an act of parliament, and gave the present site, plan, and dimensions of the bridge; but, in consequence of some disagreement with the committee, he was superseded by Mr. John Rennie, who completed this noble structure. It was commenced 11 Oct. 1811, and opened 18 June, 1817, on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, when the prince-regent, the duke of Wellington, and other distinguished personages were present. Its length within the abutments is 1242 feet; its width within the balustrades is 42 feet; and the span of each arch, of which there are nine, is 120 feet. Bought for 475,000*l.* by Metropolitan Board of Works; opened toll-free, 5 Oct. 1878; lit by electric light from 10 Oct. 1879.

On 9 Oct. 1857, two youths named Kilsby found on one of the abutments of the bridge a carpet-bag containing human bones and flesh, which had been cut up, salted, and boiled, and some foreign clothes. No crew could be found respecting these remains, which were interred in Woking cemetery.

Water-mills, used for grinding corn, are said to have been invented by Belisarius, the general of Justinian, while besieged in Rome by the Goths, 553. The ancients parched their corn, and pounded it in mortars. Afterwards mills were invented, which were turned by men and beasts with great labor; yet Pliny mentions wheels turned by water; see Telo-dynamic transmitter.

Water-spout. Two water-spouts fell on the Glatz mountains in Germany, and caused dreadful devastation to Hautenbach and many other villages; many persons perished, 13 July, 1827. A water-spout at Glanlesk, near Killarney, in Ireland, passed over a farm of Mr. John Macarthy, destroying farm-houses and other buildings; seventeen persons perished, 4 Aug. 1831. The estimated length of one seen near Calcutta, 27 Sept. 1855, was 1000 feet. It lasted ten minutes, and was absorbed upwards. One seen on 24 Sept. 1856, burst into heavy rain. The town of Miskolcz, Hungary, destroyed by a water-spout; great loss of life and property, 30 Aug. 1878.

Wattignies (N. France). Here Jourdan and the French republicans defeated the Austrians under the prince of Coburg, and raised the siege of Maubeuge, 14-16 Oct. 1793.

Wave Principle (in accordance with which the curves of the hull of a ship should be adapted to the curves of a wave of the sea) formed the subject of experiments begun by Mr. John Scott Russell in 1832, with the view of increasing the speed of ships. Col. Beaufoy is said to have spent 30,000*l.* in researches upon this matter. It was also taken up by the British Association, who have published reports of the investigations. The principle has been adopted by naval architects; see Undulatory Theory and Facht.

Waverley Novels. The publication of the series began with "Waverley; or, 'Tis Sixty Years Since," in 1814, and closed with "Tales of my Landlord," fourth series, in 1831. The authorship was acknowledged by sir Walter Scott, at a dinner, 23 Feb. 1827. The original MSS. of several of Scott's poems and novels were sold by auction by Christie and Manson for 1255 guineas, 6 July, 1867.

Wawz, or WAWER (Poland). The Poles under Skrzynecki attacked the Russians at Wawz, and after two days' hard fighting all the Russian positions were carried by storm, and they retreated, with the loss of 12,000 men and 2000 prisoners, 31 March, 1831. The loss of the Poles was small, but their triumph was soon followed by defeat and ruin.

Wax came into use for candles in the twelfth century; and wax candles were esteemed a luxury in 1300, being but little used. In China, caniles of vegetable wax have been in use for centuries; see Candleberry. The wax-tree, Ligustrum lucidum, was brought from China before 1794. SEALING-WAX was not brought into use in England until about 1556. Its use has been much superseded by the introduction of adhesive envelopes, about 1844.

We. Sovereigns generally use we for I, which style began with king John, 1199.—Coke. The German emperors and French kings used the plural about 1200.

Weald of Kent and Sussex, the site of very large, ancient forests; St. Leonard's still remaining; near which, in the Wealden formation, Dr. G. A. Mantell discovered the remains of huge extinct animals, 1825 et seq. Mr. R. Furley published an exhaustive "History of the Weald of Kent," 1871-4.

Weaving appears to have been practised in China more than a thousand years before it was known in Europe or Asia. The Egyptians ascribed the art to Isis, the Greeks to Minerva, and the Peruvians to the wife of Manco Capac. Our Saviour's vest, or coat, had not any seam, being woven from the top throughout, in one whole piece. The print of a frame for weaving such a vest may be seen in Calmet's "Dictionary" under the word Vestments. Two weavers from Brabant settled at York, where they manufactured woollens, which, says king Edward, "may prove of great benefit to us and our subjects" (1331). Flemish dyers, cloth-drappers, linen-makers, silk-throwsters, etc., settled at Canterbury, Norwich, Colchester, Southampton, and other places, on account of the duke of Alva's persecution, 1567; see Loom and Electric Loom.

Wedding-rings were used by the ancients, and put upon the wedding-finger, from a supposed connection with a vein there with the heart. According to Pliny, they were made of iron; in the time of Tertullian of gold. Wedding-rings are to be of standard gold by statute, 1855; see Adriatic.

Weddings. Silver weddings are celebrated after a union of 25 years, golden weddings after a union of 50 years, and diamond weddings after a union of 60 years. John, king of Saxony, celebrated his golden wedding 10 Nov. 1872.

Weedon Inquiry (Northamptonshire). Commissioners were appointed to inquire into the accounts of Mr. Elliot, superintendent of the great military clothing establishment at this place, in July, 1858, and commenced sitting in September. Many of the statements were afterwards disputed, and caused much dissatisfaction.

Week, the space of seven days, supposed to have been first used among the Jews, who observed the sabbath every seventh day. They had three sorts of weeks—the common one of seven days; the second of years, seven years; the third of seven times seven years, at the end of which was the jubilee. All the present English names are derived from the Saxon:

Weights and Measures. These and the stamping of gold and silver money are attributed to Pheidon, tyrant of Argos, 835 B.C.; see Arundelian Marbles. Weights were originally taken from grains of wheat, the lowest being still called a grain.—Chalmers. See Critik.

Much information is given by Mr H. W. Chisholm in his work "On the Science of Weighing and Measuring," 1877.

The Jews ascribed weights and measures to Cain; the Egyptians to Theuth, or Thoth, the Greeks to Hermes (the Roman Mercury).

The basis of ancient measures was the natural proportions of the human body, the digit, or breadth of the middle part of the first joint of the forefinger, being the lowest unit of the scale.

The Egyptian cubit (six palms), under the Pharaohs, was about 18.24 English inches, the cubit of Ptolemy about 21.87 inches, he determined the length of a stadium and of a degree.

The sacred cubit of the Jews (Newton), 24.7 inches. Assyrian weights are described by Mr Layard in his "Nineveh."

The standard measure was originally kept at Winchester by the law of King Edgar. 972

Standards of weights and measures were provided for the whole kingdom of England by the sheriffs of London 9 Rich. I. 1197

A multitude of all ranks, estimated at a million and a half of persons, were congregated in the line of route, a distance of three miles, to witness and share in the imposing spectacle. The military consisted of the household regiments of horse and foot guards, the 2d battalion of the rifles, a battalion of the Royal Marines, the 33d regiment, the 17th Lancers, the 14th Light Dragoons, the regiment of Scots (Groya), a body of Chelsea pensioners, and men of different arms of the Indian army.

The body was placed upon a sumptuous funeral-car, drawn by twelve horses richly caparisoned, and the coffin was thus seen by the whole of the crowd.

The procession moved about seven o'clock, and it was three o'clock before the body was lowered into the vault beside the remains of Nelson, under the dome of St. Paul's cathedral.

WELLINGTON MONUMENT IN ST. PAUL'S.

A number of models exhibited in Westminster hall; none chosen, 1857.

The execution of the monument intrusted to Mr. A. Stevens, sculptor, and Mr. Penrose, architect. The stone sarcophagus was completed in 1858.

In Aug. 1870, above 17,000*l.* had been expended, and it was stated that 15,000*l.* more were required. Parliament had granted 30,000*l.* Fresh arrangements were made with Mr. Stevens. He died 1 May, 1875. Monument reported complete, 1 Feb.; uncovered 20 April, 1878.

Wells were dug by Abraham, 1892 B.C., and Isaac, 1804 (Gen. xxi. 30, and xxvi. 19). Danaus is said to have introduced well-digging into Greece from Egypt. Norton's "tube-well," patented Oct. 1867, is said to be the invention of Hiram J. Messenger, Stephen Brewer, and Byron Mudge, Americans, of the state of New York. The apparatus consists of an iron tube perforated with holes at the lower end, and shod with a steel point, which readily enters the hardest soil when forcibly driven. It was used with great advantage during the civil war, 1861-4; by the British in their campaign in Abyssinia in 1867-8; and by the Russians in Khiva, 1873.

Wells (Somerset). The cathedral church was built by Ina, king of the West Saxons, 704, and by him dedicated to St. Andrew. Other West Saxon kings endowed it, and it was erected into a bishopric in 909, during the reign of Edward the Elder. The present church was begun by Robert, 18th bishop of this see, and completed by his immediate successor. The first bishop was Æthelm, or Adelmus (afterwards bishop of Canterbury). The see was united with Bath (which see) in 1088.

Welsh Charity Schools; established in Gray's Inn road, London, 1715; removed to Ashford, near Staines, Middlesex, 1852.

Wends, a branch of the Slavonic family which spread over Germany in the sixth century, and settled especially in the northeastern parts.

Wesleyan Methodists, a sect founded by John Wesley (born 1703, died 1791) and his brother Charles, who in 1727, with a few other students, formed themselves into a small society for the purpose of mutual edification by religious exercises. From their strictness of life they were called Methodists, in 1729. John Wesley went to Georgia, in America, in 1735, with a view of converting the Indians. On his return to England, in 1738, he commenced itinerant preaching, and gathered many followers. On finding many churches shut against him, he built spacious meeting-houses in London, Bristol, and other places. For some time he was united with George Whitefield; but, differing with him respecting the doctrine of election, they separated in 1741; see Whitefield. Wesley was almost continually engaged in travelling through the United Kingdom. His two leading doctrines were the instantaneousness of conversion and Christian perfection, or deliverance from all sin. His society was well organized, and he preserved his influence over it to the last. "His genius for government was not inferior to that of Richelieu."—Macaulay. The deed of declaration establishing the conference is dated 28 Feb. 1784. In 1851 there were 428 circuits in Great Britain, with between 13,000 and 14,000 local or lay preachers, and about 920 itinerant preachers, and 6579 chapels.

The Conference, the highest Wesleyan court, till lately composed of 100 ministers, who meet annually. It was instituted by John Wesley in 1739. 1784
At the centenary of the existence of Methodism 215,000*l.* were collected, to be expended on the objects of the Society. 1839

An ecumenical conference to be held in the autumn of 1881, settled 31 July, 1880
138th annual conference opened 19 July, 1881
Out of the original connection have seceded:

	Chapels in 1881
New Connection in 1796	301
Primitive Methodists (1810)	2871
Bible Christians, or Bryanites (1815)	493
Wesleyan Methodist Association (1834)	329
Wesleyan Methodist Reformers (1849)	2000

The last arose out of the publication of "Fly Sheets," advocating reform in the body (1844-8). The suspected authors and their friends were expelled. By these disruptions the main body is thought to have lost 100,000 members.—This sect in America numbered about a million in 1844, when a division took place on the slavery question.

Wesleyan Methodist church members in Great Britain in 1668, 342,380; in 1872, 346,500; in 1874, 337,645; in 1876, 372,638; in 1878, 380,867 (1412 ministers); in 1880, 376,678.

West Virginia, a state of the United States, formed by separation from Virginia in consequence of the secession of the latter. Convention of West Virginia repudiated the act of secession, 11 June, 1861; elected governor, 20 June. At an election held for that purpose, the people voted to set up the new state of Kanawha, 24 Oct. 1861. Constitution adopted in convention, Nov. 1861; ratified by the people, 3 May, 1862, the name having been changed to West Virginia 3 Dec. 1861. State admitted to the Union, 20 April, 1863.

Western Australia, formerly SWAN RIVER SETTLEMENT, which was projected by col. Peel in 1823. Regulations issued from the colonial office, and capt. Stirling, appointed lieutenant-governor Jan. 17, 1829, arrived at the appointed site in August following. The three towns of Perth, Fremantle, and Guildford were founded the same year. In March, 1830, fifty ships, with 2000 emigrants, with property amounting to 1,000,000*l.*, had arrived before hardly any dwellings had been erected or land surveyed. The more energetic settlers left for home or the neighboring colonies, and the colony languished for twenty years for want of suitable inhabitants—the first settlers, from their previous habits and rank in life, proving unfit for the rough work of colonization. In 1848 the colonists requested that convicts might be sent out to them, and in 1849 a band arrived, who were kindly received and well treated. The best results ensued. By 1853 2000 had arrived, and the inhabitants of Perth had requested that 1000 should be sent out annually. The reception of convicts is to cease in after-years, in consequence of the energetic opposition of the other Australian colonies (1865).—The settlement of King George's Sound was founded in 1826 by the government of New South Wales. It was used as a military station for four years. In 1830 the home government ordered the settlement to be transferred to Swan River. Since the establishment of steam communication, the little town of Albany here, employed as a coal-ing-station, has become a thriving seaport. It possesses an excellent harbor, used by whalers. A journal called the Fremantle Gazette was published here in March, 1831. Population of Western Australia in 1859, 14,887; Jan. 1862, 15,555; Jan. 1877, about 27,821. Governor John Stephen Hampton, appointed 1861; sir Benjamin C. C. Pine, May, 1868; Frederick A. Weld, 1869; William C. F. Robinson, 1874; major-gen. sir Harry St. George Ord, 1877; sir W. F. Robinson, 1880.

Western Church (called also the LATIN or ROMAN) broke off communion with the Greek or Eastern Church, 658; see Greek Church. Its history is mainly comprised in that of the popes and of the European kingdoms; see Popes. This church was disturbed by the Arian heresy about 345 and 500; by Pelagianism, about 409; by the introduction of image-worship about 600; by the injunction of the celibacy of the clergy and the rise of the monastic orders, about 649; by the contests between the emperors and the popes respecting ecclesiastical investitures, between 1073 and 1178; by the rise and progress of the Reformation in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; by the contests between the Jesuits and Jansenists in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; and by the progress of modern philosophy and rationalism, and by ultramontaniam, in the nineteenth; see Roman Catholics.

Western Empire. The Roman empire was divided into Eastern and Western by Diocletian in 296; but was reunited under Constantine in 340. It was again divided into Eastern and Western by Valentinian and Valens, the former having the Western portion, or Rome, 364; see Eastern Empire, Italy, and Rome.

EMPERORS.

364. Valentinian, son of Gratian, takes the Western, and his brother Valens the Eastern empire.
367. Gratian, a youth, son of Valentinian, made a colleague in the government by his father.
375. Valentinian II., another son, also very young, is, on the death of his father, associated with Gratian, who is assassinated by his general, Andragathius, in 383. Valentinian murdered by one of his officers, Arbogastes, in 392.
392. Eugenius, a usurper, assumes the imperial dignity; he and Arbogastes are defeated by
394. Theodosius the Great, who becomes sole emperor. [Andragathius threw himself into the sea, and Arbogastes died by his own hand.]
395. Honorius, son of Theodosius, reigns, on his father's death, in the West, and his brother Arcadius in the East. Honorius dies in 423.
423. Usurpation of John, the Notary, defeated and slain near Ravenna.
425. Valentinian III., son of the empress Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great; murdered at the instance of his successor,
455. Maximus: he marries Eudoxia, widow of Valentinian, who, to avenge the death of her first husband and the guilt of her second, invites the African Vandals into Italy, and Rome is sacked. Maximus stoned to death.
455. Marcus Aetilius Avitus; forced to resign, and dies in his flight towards the Alps.
457. Julius Valerius Majorianus; murdered at the instance of his minister, Ricimer, who raises 461. Libius Severus to the throne, but holds the supreme power; Severus poisoned by Ricimer.
465. [Interregnum. Ricimer retains the authority, without assuming the title of emperor.]
467. Anthemius, chosen by the joint suffrages of the senate and army; murdered by Ricimer, who dies soon after.
473. Flavius Aetilius Olybrius; slain by the Goths soon after his accession.
473. Glycerius; forced to abdicate by his successor,
474. Julius Nepos; deposed by his general, Orestes, and retires to Salona.
475. Romulus (called Augustulus, or Little Augustus), son of Orestes. Orestes is slain, and the emperor deposed by
476. Odoacer, king of the Heruli; takes Rome, assumes the style of king of Italy, and completes the fall of the Western empire.

(See Italy, Rome, and Germany.)

Westminster, so called on account of its western situation with regard to St. Paul's cathedral, or from there being formerly a monastery named East Minster on the hill now called Great Tower-hill. This city joins London at Temple Bar. Formerly Westminster was called Thorney, or Thorney Island; and in ancient times Canute had a palace here, burned in 1263. Westminster and London were one mile asunder in 1608, when the houses were thatched, and there were mud walls in the Strand. It is said that the great number of Scotsmen who came over after the accession of James I. occasioned the building of Westminster, and united it with London.—Howell's Londinopolis. See Palace of Westminster and Parliament.

Westminster Bishopric and Deanery. At the dissolution of monasteries, Westminster Abbey was valued at 3977*l.* per annum; king Henry VIII., in 1539, erected it into a deanery, and in 1540 into a bishopric, and appointed Thomas Thirlby prelate. He was translated to Norwich in 1550, and with him ended the bishopric of Westminster; Middlesex, his diocese, being restored to London. The dean presided until the accession of Mary, who restored the abbot. Elizabeth displaced the abbot, and erected the abbey into a collegiate church of a dean and twelve prebendaries, as it still continues. On the revival of the order of the Bath, in 1725, the dean of Westminster was appointed dean of that order, which honor has been continued. Dr. Nicholas Wiseman was created archbishop of Westminster by the pope Pius IX., 30 Sept. 1850; see Papal Aggression. Dr. Wiseman died 8 Feb. 1865; Henry Manning was consecrated his successor 8 June following. Dr. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, an eminent dean, died 18 July, and was buried in the abbey, 25 July, 1881.

Westminster Bridges. The handsome old bridge was begun (after a design of M. Labeley), 13 Sept. 1738; the first stone laid, 29 Jan. 1738-9; opened for passengers, 18 Nov. 1750; cost 428,650*l.* It was built of Portland stone, and crossed the river where the breadth is 1223 feet.

Owing to the sinking of several of its piers, most of the balustrades on both sides were removed, to relieve the structure of its weight.
By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 44, the estates of its commissioners were transferred to her majesty's commissioners of works, who were empowered to remove the then existing bridge, and build a new narrow (near the old one),..... 4 Aug. 1858
The contract required the completion of the works by 1 June, 1897

The works were suspended for a time in consequence of the failure of Messrs. Marc, the contractors. The government eventually undertook the building, which they intrusted to Mr. Thomas Page, the engineer. One half of the new bridge was opened for use early in 1860; the whole on.....24 May, 1862

Westminster Confession of Faith and Catechisms were drawn up by the "Assembly of Divines" (partly consisting of laymen), who sat by authority of parliament, in Henry VII.'s chapel, Westminster, from 1643 to 1647. These have ever since been the doctrinal standards of Scotch Presbyterians.

Westminster Hall (London), first built by William Rufus in 1097, for a banqueting-hall; and here, in 1099, on his return from Normandy, "he kept his feast of Whitsuntide very royally." The hall became ruinous before the reign of Richard II., who repaired it in 1397, raised the walls, altered the windows, and added a new roof, as well as a stately porch and other buildings. In 1236, Henry III., on New Year's Day, caused 6000 poor persons to be entertained in this hall, and in the other rooms of his palace, as a celebration of queen Eleanor's coronation; and here Richard II. held his Christmas festival in 1397, when the number of the guests each day the feast lasted was 10,000.—Stow. The courts of law were established here by king John.—Idem. Westminster Hall was stated to be the largest room in Europe unsupported by pillars (except a hall of justice at Padua); it is 270 feet in length, 74 feet broad. The hall underwent a general repair in 1802. Concurrently with the erection of the palace of Westminster, many improvements and alterations have lately been made in this magnificent hall. The Volunteer Rifle Corps were drilled in the hall in the winter of 1859, and since.

Westminster Hospital, founded 1719; chartered, 1836.

Westminster Palace, see under Palace of Westminster, and Parliament.

"Westminster Review," liberal in religion and politics, first appeared, 1824, as the organ of the philosophic radicals, termed the Westminster school, friends of Jeremy Bentham; see Utilitarianism.

Westminster School, or St. Peter's College, was founded by queen Elizabeth in 1560, for the education of forty boys, denominated the queen's scholars, who are prepared for the university. It is situated within the abbey enclosure. Besides the scholars on the foundation, many of the nobility and gentry send their sons to Westminster for instruction. A proposal in 1860 to remove the school was disapproved of in 1861.

Westminster Schools, United, comprise Emanuel and St. Margaret's hospitals, and rev. James Palmer's and Emery Hill's school charities, which were abolished by the endowed school commissioners, 27 June, 1873. New schools are to be erected.

Westminster, STATUTES OF, are 3 and 13 Edward I., 1275-90; see Acts of Parliament.

Westmoreland. This county and Cumberland were granted as a fief to Malcolm of Scotland by Edward the Elder in 945; but resumed by Henry III. in 1237. Neville, earl of Westmoreland, revolted against Elizabeth in 1569, and was attainted in 1570.

Westphalia (German). This duchy belonged in former times to the dukes of Saxony, and afterwards became subject to the archbishop of Cologne. On the secularization, in 1802, it was made over to Hesse-Darmstadt; and in 1814 was ceded for an equivalent to Prussia. The kingdom of Westphalia, one of the temporary kingdoms of Bonaparte, composed of conquests from Prussia, Hesse-Cassel, Hanover, and the smaller states to the west of the Elbe, was created by decree 18 Aug. 1806, and Jerome Bonaparte appointed king 1 Dec. 1807. Hanover was annexed to it, 1 March, 1810. The kingdom was abolished in 1813, and the countries were restored to their former rulers.

Westphalia, or MUNSTER, PEACE OF, the treaties signed at Osnaburg, 6 Aug., and at Munster, 24 Oct.

1648, between France, the emperor, and Sweden; Spain continuing the war against France. By this peace (ending the Thirty Years' war) the principle of a balance of power in Europe was first recognized; Alsace given to France, and part of Pomerania and some other districts to Sweden; the Lower Palatinate restored to the elector palatine; the religious and political rights of the German states established; and the independence of the Swiss Confederation recognized by Germany.

Weymouth (Dorsetshire) was given by Henry I. to St. Swithin's, Winchester. Taken from Charles I. by the parliamentarians, 1644; visited and brought into note by George III., 1789. First Dorset industrial exhibition was opened here, 25 July, 1878.

Whale-fishery, it is said, was first carried on by the Norwegians in the ninth century.—Lenglet. Whales were killed at Newfoundland and Iceland, for their oil only, 1578; the use of their fins and bones was not yet known, consequently (a writer adds) no stays were worn by the ladies. The English whale-fishing commenced at Spitzbergen in 1598; but the Dutch had been previously fishing there. The fishery was much promoted by an act of parliament passed in 1749. From 1800 to 2000 whales have been killed annually on the coast of Greenland, etc. The quantity of whale-oil imported in 1814 was 33,567 tuns; in 1826, when gas-light became general, 25,000 tuns; in 1840, about 22,000 tuns; in 1850, 21,360 tuns; in 1861, 19,176 tuns; in 1864, 14,701 tuns; in 1867, 15,945 tuns; in 1871, 24,679 tuns; in 1872, 18,719 tuns; in 1877, 19,365 tuns. A living whale from Labrador, 9 feet 6 inches long, placed in the Westminster Aquarium, 26 Sept.; died 29 Sept. 1877. White whale (Beluga), arrived 28 May; died in the latter part of June.

Wharnccliffe Meetings of public companies (held to give enlarged powers under certain prescribed conditions) are so called because the standing orders of the house of lords, under which they are held, were introduced by Lord Wharnccliffe, about 1846.

Wheat. The Chinese ascribe to their emperor Ching-Noung, who succeeded Fohi, the art of husbandry, and method of making bread from wheat, about 2000 years before the Christian era. Wheat was introduced into Britain in the sixth century, by Coll ap Coll Frewi.—Roberts. The first wheat imported into England of which we have a note was in 1347. Various statutes have regulated the sales of wheat, and restrained its importation, in order to encourage its being raised at home. In 1862 attention was drawn to the probable utility of considering the pedigree of wheat. In 1871 it was estimated that 3,571,894 acres in the United Kingdom were devoted to wheat: in 1876, 3,124,342; see Bread and Corn Laws. Greatest producers (in order), United States, Russia, France, Great Britain, etc. The wheat crop of the United States for 1880 was 480,849,723 bushels. The following table shows the value, in dollars, of the exports of wheat and flour from the United States in the several years named:

Wheel, BREAKING ON THE. A barbarous mode of death, of great antiquity, ordered by Francis I. for robbers, about 1535; see Rouillac.

Wheel-work, see Spinning, Looms, Automaton.

Whigs. In the reign of Charles II. the name Whig was a term of reproach given by the court party to their antagonists for holding the principles of the "whigs," or fanatical Covenanters in Scotland; and in return the name Tory was given to the court party, comparing them to the Tories, or popish robbers in Ireland.—Ruber. The distinction arose out of the discovery of the Meal-tub plot (which see) in 1678. Upon bringing up the meal plot before parliament, two parties were formed: those who doubted the plot styled those who believed in it Whigs; these styled their adversaries Tories. In time these names, given as marks of opprobrium, became honored distinctions.—Hume. The Whigs brought about the revolution of 1688-9, and established the Protestant succession. They were chiefly instrumental in obtaining the abolition of the slave-trade and slavery, the repeal of the Test and Corporation act, Catholic emancipation, parliamentary and municipal reform, the repeal of the corn laws, and similar measures. The Whig Club was established by Charles James Fox; one of its original members was the great Francis, duke of Bedford, who died in 1802. For the principal Whig ministries, see Godolphin, Halifax, Walpole, Rockingham, Grenville, Grey, Melbourne, Russell, Palmerston, and Gladstone.

Whip, the popular title of the patronage secretary of the treasury, whose duty it is to collect members to make a house on important occasions, etc. Sir Wm. Hayter, the Liberal "whip," 1850-8, received a testimonial for his energetic services, early in 1861. The right hon. Wm. P. Adams, an able whip, died governor of Madras, 24 May, 1881.

The management of the house of commons by bribery is said to have begun with Clifford of the "Cabal" ministry and continued by Whigs and Tories. Mr Roberts (under Henry Pelham), is said to have paid members sums of 1000l. 500l., etc. to each at the close of a session for their support.—Wrasell.

Whiskey, the spirit distilled from malt and other corn in Scotland and Ireland, of which about eight millions of gallons have been distilled annually in the former, and upwards of nine millions of gallons in the latter. The duty upon this article once produced annually about three millions. The distillation of whiskey is referred to the sixteenth century; but some authors state it to have been earlier; see Distillation. In 1855 the duties on spirits distilled in Scotland and Ireland were equalized with those distilled in England. Woman's Whisky War, see United States, 1874.

Whiskey Insurrection, a popular outbreak in Western Pennsylvania, in the summer of 1794, on account of the imposition of duties on domestic distilled spirits. The people of Western Pennsylvania, where large quantities of whiskey were manufactured, resisted the collection of the revenue by excise officers with force of arms. The insurrection became general in several counties. Many outrages were committed. Buildings were burned, the mails were rifled, and government officers were insulted and abused. At one time there were 6000 or 7000 insurgents under arms, and 7000 or 8000 more in reserve. The president of the United States (Washington) finally called out the military force of the country to put down the insurgents, and was successful. Great leniency was shown to the offenders, and the excitement died away.

White House (Washington), the residence of the president, gives name to the United States government, as St. James's palace does to that of Great Britain. The corner-stone was laid 1792; building first occupied, by president Adams, 1800; burned by the British, 1814; restoration completed, 1818.

White League, formed in Louisiana and other southern states of North America, to resist the aggressions of the emancipated negroes and their friends, termed "carpet-baggers;" see New Orleans, 1874.

White Plains (New York state, U. S.), where a battle was fought 28 Oct. 1776, between the revolted Americans and the British forces under sir William Howe. It terminated in the defeat of the Americans, both sides suffering considerable loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners.

White Sheep, a name given to the Turcomans who conquered Persia about 1468, and persecuted the Shiites, but were expelled by Ismail, who founded the Sophi dynasty in 1501.

White Tower, the keep or citadel in the Tower of London, a large, square, irregular building, erected in 1070 by abbot Gundulph, afterwards bishop of Rochester. It measures 116 feet by 96, and is 93 feet in height; the walls, which are 11 feet thick, having a winding staircase continued along two of the sides, like that in Dover Castle. It contains an extensive armory. Within this tower is the ancient chapel of St. John, originally used by the English monarchs. The turret at the northeast angle, the highest of the four by which the White Tower is surmounted, was used for astronomical purposes by Flamsteed previous to the erection of the royal observatory at Greenwich.

Whitebait Dinner, when the cabinet ministers met at the end of each session, is said to have begun at the end of the last century, through sir Robert Prentiss and Mr. George Ross inviting Mr. Pitt and his colleagues to dine at Dagenham, and afterwards at Greenwich. Another account dates its origin in 1721. The annual whitebait dinner, stopped by the Gladstone ministry, was revived by the Disraeli ministry, 1 Aug. 1874, and continued by the Gladstone, 1 Sept. 1880. The whitebait (clupea alba) is a subject of controversy. Albert Günther, of the British Museum, in his "Catalogue of Fishes," says the whitebait is "a purely nominal species," and that all the examples which he has examined were young herrings (1868).

At the inquiry in June, 1878, James Henry Cannon, fisherman, claimed the discovery of the fish for his grandfather, Richard, who named it 1780. It was mentioned in a letter in the life of lord Malmesbury, 2 July, 1783.

Whiteboys, a body of ruffians in Ireland, so called on account of their wearing linen frocks over their coats. They committed dreadful outrages in 1761, but were suppressed by a military force, and their ringleaders executed in 1762. They rose and were again suppressed in 1786-7. The Insurrection act was passed on their account in 1822.

Whitechapel, a parish in East London, was part of Stepney till 1329. The church, built in 1673, was replaced by one consecrated 2 Feb. 1877, which was burned 26 Aug. 1880.

Whitechapel Murder. Henry Wainwright, a brushmaker, murdered Harriet Lane, his mistress, on his premises, 215 Whitechapel road, and buried the body, Sept. 1874.

While conveying the mutilated remains to be concealed in his cellars in Southwark, Wainwright and Alice Day were apprehended, through the courage and activity of Alfred Philip Stokes, 11 Sept. Day was discharged; Henry and his brother Thomas were committed for trial.

13 Oct. 1875
Nine days' trial before chief justice Cockburn: Henry convicted of murder; Thomas as accessory after the fact (seven years' penal servitude), 22 Nov.-1 Dec.; Henry executed, 21 Dec. 1875
1292l. subscribed for Henry's family.
30l. awarded to Stokes.

Whitefieldites. George Whitefield, the founder of the "Calvinistic Methodists," born 1714, was the son of an innkeeper at Gloucester, where he received his first education. He was admitted a servitor at Oxford in 1732, became a companion of the Wesleys there, and aided them in establishing Methodism. He parted from them in 1741, on account of their rejection of the doctrine of election. He was the most eloquent preacher of his day. His first sermon was preached in 1736, and he commenced field-preaching in 1739. He is said to have delivered 18,000 sermons during his career of 34 years. He visited America in 1787, 1739, and 1744. His followers are termed "the countess of Huntingdon's connection," from his having become her chaplain in 1748, and from her energetic support of the sect by establishing a college at Trevecca, 1767. There were 109 chapels of this connection in 1851; but many of his followers have joined the Independents. He died 30 Sept. 1770, and the countess died 17 June, 1791; see Tabernacle.

Whitehall (London), built by Hubert de Burgh, earl of Kent, before the middle of the thirteenth century. It afterwards devolved, by bequest, to the Black Friars of Holborn, who sold it to the archbishop of York, whence it received the name of York place, and continued to be the town residence of the archbishops till taken by Henry VIII. from cardinal Wolsey, in 1530. At this period it became the residence of the court. Queen Elizabeth, who died at Richmond in 1603, was brought from thence to Whitehall, by water, in a grand procession. It was on this occasion, Camden informs us, that the following quaint panegyric on her majesty was written:

"The queen was brought by water to Whitehall,
At every stroke the oars did fears let fall.
More clung about the barge: fish under water
Wept out their eyes of pearl, and swam blind after.
I think the bargemen might, with easier thighs,
Have rowed her thither in her people's eyes;
For howsoever thus much my thoughts have scanned,
She had come by water, had she come by land."

Whitehall was partly burned, 9-10 April, 1691; totally destroyed by fire, 4 Jan. 1697-8, except the banqueting-house, which had been added to the palace of Whitehall by James I., according to a design of Inigo Jones, in 1619. In the front of Whitehall Charles I. was beheaded, 30 Jan. 1649. George I. converted the hall into a chapel, 1723-4. The exterior of this edifice underwent repair between 1829 and 1833.

Whitsuntide, a festival appointed to commemorate the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles: the newly baptized persons, or catechumens, are said to have worn white garments on Whit-Sunday. This feast is movable, being always exactly seven weeks after Easter. Rogation week (which see) is the week before Whit-Sunday. Whit-Sunday, 1881, 5 June; 1882, 28 May; 1883, 13 May; 1884, 1 June; 1885, 24 May.

Whitsuntide, a Scotch quarter-day, is always on 15 May, as settled by an act of 1693, but local usage varies.

Whittington's Charities. Sir Richard Whittington, a citizen and mercer of London, served the office of lord mayor three times, the last in 1419. Many false stories are connected with his name, and his munificent charities are little known. He founded his college, dedicated to the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, in 1424; and his almshouses in 1429; the latter, originally built in London, now stand on Highgate hill (built 1808) near the supposed site of the supposed famous stone which commemorated the legend of his return to London, after leaving it in despair.

Whitworth Foundations. Mr. (afterwards sir) Joseph Whitworth, the eminent engineer, in a letter to the first lord of the treasury, dated 18 March, 1868, offered to found 30 scholarships of the annual value of 100l. each, to be applied for the further instruction of young men, natives of the United Kingdom, selected by open competition for their intelligence and proficiency in the theory and practice of mechanics and its cognate sciences, with a view to the promotion of engineering and mechanical industry in this country; and he expressed hopes that means might be found for bringing science and industry into closer relation with each other than at present obtains here. This offer was accepted by the lords of the committee of the privy council, 28 March, 1868. In 1875, sir Joseph assigned an estate to support these scholarships.

"Whole Duty of Man" (the authorship doubtfully attributed to archbishops Sancroft, Frewen, and Sterne; to bishops Fell and Chapel; to Dorothy, lady Packington, and others); first published, 1659.—Locusts. It is attributed by some to John Ischam.

Wickliffites, the followers of John Wickliffe (born 1324), a professor of divinity in the university of Oxford and rector of Lutterworth in Leicestershire. He was a forerunner of the reformation of the English church from popery, being among the first who opposed the authority of the pope, transubstantiation, the celibacy of the clergy, etc. Wickliffe, protected by John of Gaunt, Edward's son and Richard's uncle, was virulently persecuted by the church, and only saved from martyrdom by a paralytic attack, which caused his death, 31 Dec. 1384, in his 60th year. The Council of Constance, in 1414, decreed his bones to be disinterred and burned, which was done by the bishop of Lincoln, and his dust was cast into the river Swift, 1415. Wickliffe's English version of the Bible was commenced in 1380; a noble edition of it was printed at Oxford in 1850; see Lollards.

Widows. The Jewish law required a man's brother to marry his widow (1490 B.C.). For the burning of widows in India, see Suttles. Among the numerous associations in London for the relief of widows are, one for the widows of musicians, instituted in 1788; for widows of naval men, founded in 1789; for widows of medical men, 1788; a law society, for widows of professional gentlemen, 1817; and a society for artist's widows, 1827.—Widowkns were taxed in England as follows: a duke, 12l. 10s.; lower peers, smaller sums; a common person, 1s.; 7 Will. III. 1695.

Wigan (Lancashire). The king's troops, commanded by the earl of Derby, were defeated and driven out of the town in 1648 by the parliamentary forces under sir John Smeston. The earl was again defeated by col. Ashton, who raised the fortifications of Wigton to the ground, same year; and once more, by a greatly superior force commanded by col. Lilburne, 1651. In this last engagement, sir Thomas Tildesley, an ardent royalist, was slain; a pillar was erected to his memory in 1678. The colliers in the neighborhood struck, and acting riotously 17, 18 April, 1868, were quelled by the military. Arrangements were soon after made with the employers. The prince and princess of Wales at their visit, 4 June, 1878, opened a new hospital, etc., and received a hearty welcome; see Railway Accidents, 2 Aug. 1878.

Wight, Isle of, the Roman Vedra, or Victis, was conquered by Vespasian in the reign of Claudius. It was conquered by the Saxons under Cerdic about 580; by the Danes, 787, and in 1001, when they held it for several years. It was invaded by the French, July, 1377, and has several times suffered from invasion by them. In 1442, Henry VI. alienated the isle to Henry de Beauchamp, first premier earl of England and then duke of Warwick, and afterwards crowned him king of the Isle of Wight, with his own hands; but dying without heirs male, his regal title died with him, and the lordship of the isle returned to the crown. Charles I., after his flight from Hampton court, was a prisoner in Carisbrooke castle, in 1647. In the time of Charles II. timber was very plentiful. In this isle is the queen's marine residence, Osborne house.

Wills and Testaments are of very high antiquity (see Gen. xlviii.). Solon introduced them at Athens, 578 a.c. There are regulations respecting wills in the Koran. Trebatius Testa, the civilian, introduced codicils to wills at Rome, 81 a.c. The power of bequeathing lands by the last will and testament of the owner was confirmed to English subjects 1 Hen. I. 1100; but with great restrictions and limitations respecting the feudal system, which were taken off by the statute of 82 Hen. VIII. 1541.—Blackstone's Commentaries. The first will of a sovereign on record is stated (but in error) to be that of Richard II. 1399; Edward the Confessor made a will, 1066. Various laws have regulated the wills and testaments of British subjects. All previous statutes were repealed by the "Wills act," 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26, 1837, and the laws with relation to wills amended.* The present PROBATE COURT (which see) was established in 1857. An office for the reception of the wills of living persons was opened in Jan. 1861; see Thelluson's Will. In 1869 twenty probates of wills or letters of administration were stamped for personal property, each exceeding a quarter of a million; one had a stamp of £1,000. The Wills Office, removed

* By this act the testator must be above 21, not a lunatic or idiot, not deaf and dumb, not drunk at the time of signing, not an outlawed or unpardoned felon. All kinds of property may be devised. The will must be written legibly and intelligibly and signed by the testator, or by his direction, in the presence of two or more witnesses, who also must sign. from Doctors' Commons to Somerset House, was opened 24 Oct. 1874.

The will of Peter the Great, described in the "Minutary de la Chancellerie d'Etat" as a "plan for composing European supremacy" left for his uncomprehending and dependent in the archives of the palace of Peterhof near St. Petersburg. It advocated "approach as near as possible to Constantinople, and towards the Indies, wars with Turkey and Persia; possession of the shores of the Black Sea, and the Baltic," etc. The existence of the will (denied by the emperors), was first announced by M. Lottin in his "Progrès de la Puissance Russe," published at Paris in 1813. In 1828, Dr. Berthold of Riga asserted that the will was a forgery, probably dictated by Napoleon I. Mr W. J. Thoms, the antiquary, and others, contend for the genuineness of the will, June, 1836.

EXTRACTS FROM THE LAST WILL OF NAPOLEON I., EMPEROR OF FRANCE.

[He died 5 May, 1821, eleven days after he had signed these documents. The original in French occupies about twenty-six pages in Faguet's "Testaments Remarquables," 1881.]

"This day, 26 April, 1821, at Longwood, in the island of St. Helena. This is my testament, or act of my last will."

"I leave the counts de Montholon 2,000,000 francs as a proof of my satisfaction for the attention he has paid to me for these 2 years, and to indemnify him for the losses which my residence in St. Helena has occasioned him. I leave to the countess Bertrand 800,000 francs. I leave to Marchand, my first valet-de-chambre, 500,000 francs; the services he has performed for me are those of a friend. I desire that he may marry a widow, sister, or daughter of an officer or soldier of my old guard. To St. Denis, 100,000 francs. To Novère, 100,000 francs. To Pijeron, 100,000 francs. To Archambaud, 50,000 francs. To Cuvier, 50,000 francs. To Chaudelle, 50,000 francs. To the Abbé Vigiani, 100,000 francs. I desire that he may build his house near Forte Neve de Roncione. To the countess Las Cases, 100,000 francs. To countess Lavalette, 100,000 francs. To the surgeon-in-chief, Larrey, 100,000 francs. He is the most virtuous man I have known. To gen. Brayer, 100,000 francs.

"To gen. Laffitte Dumesnil, 100,000 francs. To gen. Drouot, 100,000 francs. To gen. Camille, 100,000 francs. To the children of gen. Wion Duvivier, 100,000 francs. To the children of the brave Labédoyère, 100,000 francs. To the children of gen. Girard, killed at Ligny, 100,000 francs. To the children of gen. Chartrand, 100,000 francs. To the children of the virtuous gen. Travot, 100,000 francs. To gen. Lallemand, the elder, 100,000 francs. To gen. Clausel, 100,000 francs. To Costa Bastillon, also 100,000 francs. To the baron de Montvalle, 100,000 francs. To Arnault, author of "Martin," 100,000 francs.

"To col. Marbot, 100,000 francs; I request him to continue to write for the defense and glory of the French armies, and to confound the calumniators and the apostates. To the baron Bignon, 100,000 francs, I request him to write the history of French Diplomacy from 1772 to 1818. To Faggi de Talara, 100,000 francs. To the surgeon Emery, 100,000 francs.

These sums shall be taken from the six millions which I deposited on leaving Paris in 1814, and from the interest at the rate of 6 per cent. since July, 1818; the amount of which shall be adjusted with the bankers by the counts Montholon and Bertrand and by Marchand.

"These legacies, in case of death, shall be paid to the widows and children, and in their default, shall revert to the capital. I institute the counts Montholon, Bertrand, and Marchand my testamentary executors. This present testament written entirely by my own hand, is signed and sealed with my arms."

"NAPOLEON."

"24 April, 1821, Longwood."

The following are part of the eight codicils to the preceding will of the emperor:

On the liquidation of my civil list of Italy—such as money, jewels, plate, linen, coffers, cabinets of which the victuaries in the depository, and which belong to me—I dispose of two millions, which I leave to my most faithful servants. I hope that without their showing any enmity, my son Eugene Napoleon will discharge them faithfully. He cannot forget the forty millions which I have given him in Italy, or by the right (paraph) of his mother's inheritance.

From the funds reunited to paid to the empress Marie Louise, my very dear and well-beloved spouse, at Orleans, in 1814 there remains due to me two millions, which I dispose of by the present codicil, in order to recompense my most faithful servants, whom I desire recommended to the protection of my dear Marie Louise. I leave 200,000 francs to count Montholon 100,000 francs of which he shall pay into the chest of the treasurer (Las Cases) for the same purpose as the above, to be employed according to my dispositions in legacies of consolation.

"10,000 francs to the sub-officer Cantillon (died July, 1805), who has undergone a privation, being accused of a desire to assassinate lord Wellington, of which he has been declared innocent. Cantillon had as much right to assassinate that of garb, as the latter had to send me to perish on the rock of St. Helena, etc., etc., etc."

† These documents, dated from 15 to 24 April, deposited since 1831 in England, have been given up to the authorities at Paris, at the request of the French government.

LETTER TO M. LAFITTE.

"MONSIEUR LAFITTE.—I remitted to you in 1815, at the moment of my departure from Paris, a sum of nearly six millions, for which you gave me a double receipt. I have cancelled one of these receipts, and I have charged comte de Montholon to present to you the other receipt, in order that you may, after my death, deliver to him the said sum with interest at the rate of five per cent., from the 1st of July, 1815, deducting the payments with which you have been charged in virtue of my order. I have also remitted to you a box containing my medallion. I beg you will deliver it to comte Montholon.

"This letter having no other object, I pray God, Monsieur Lafitte, that he may have you in his holy and worthy keeping.

"NAPOLEON.

"Longwood, in the Island of St. Helena, 25 April, 1821."

The following WILL of NAPOLEON III. was published in the Times, 30 April, 1873:

"April 24, 1865.

"This is my will. I commend my son and my wife to the high constituted authorities of the state (aux grands corps de l'Etat), to the people, and the army. The empress Eugénie possesses all the qualities requisite for conducting the regency well, and my son displays a disposition and judgment which will render him worthy of his high destinies. Let him never forget the motto of the head of our family, 'Everything for the French people.' Let him fix in his mind the writings of the prisoner of St. Helena; let him study the emperor's deeds and correspondence; finally, let him remember, when circumstances so permit, that the cause of the peoples is the cause of France. Power is a heavy burden, because one cannot always do all the good one could wish, and because your contemporaries seldom render you justice, so that, in order to fulfil one's mission, one must have faith in, and consciousness of, one's duty. It is necessary to consider that from heaven on high those whom you have loved regard and protect you; it is the soul of my illustrious uncle that has always inspired and sustained me. The like will apply to my son, for he will always be worthy of his name. I leave to the empress Eugénie all my private property. It is my desire that on the majority of my son she shall inhabit the Elysée and Biarritz. I trust that my memory will be dear to her, and that after my death she will forget the griefs I may have caused her. With regard to my son, let him keep as a talisman the seal I used to wear attached to my watch, and which comes from my mother; let him carefully preserve everything that comes to me from the emperor, my uncle, and let him be convinced that my heart and my soul remain with him. I make no mention of my faithful servants. I am convinced that the empress and my son will never abandon them. I shall die in the Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman religion, which my son will always honor by his piety. Done, written, and signed with my hand at the palace of the Tuilleries, the 24th of April, 1865.

"NAPOLEON."

The WILL of PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON was written with his own hand, and signed 25 Feb. 1879, the night before he sailed for South Africa (where he was killed while on a reconnoitring party, 1 June, 1879). He states that he dies in the Catholic religion; expresses his love for his country, his mother the empress, and his friends; and his gratitude to the queen and royal family of England, and to the English people for their cordial hospitality. He constitutes his mother sole legatee; bequeaths legacies and memorials to prince J. N. Murat, M. F. Pietri, baron Corswart, M. Rouher, and others; and assigns to Victor, the eldest son of prince Napoleon Jérôme, the task of continuing the work of Napoleon I. and Napoleon III. Executors, MM. Rouher and Pietri.

Wilmot Proviso. When a bill was pending in congress to authorize the president to purchase territory in connection with negotiations for peace with Mexico, David Wilmot of Pennsylvania offered an amendment, 8 Aug. 1846, providing, "that as an express and fundamental condition to the acquisition of any territory from the republic of Mexico, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude should ever exist in any part of said territory." This "proviso" was adopted by the house of representatives, but rejected by the senate. It became the doctrinal foundation of the free-soil party in 1848, and of the republican party in 1856.

Wilmot's Act (sir E.), 3 & 4 Vict. c. 77 (1840) relates to schools.

Winchester (Hampshire), a most ancient city, whose erection may reasonably be ascribed to the Celtic Britons, with the fabulous date 392 B.C. It was made the capital of the West Saxon kingdom under Cerdic, about 520; and of England by Egbert, 827; it became the residence of Alfred, 879-991. In the reign of William I. London began to rival it; and the destruction of religious houses by Henry VIII. almost ruined it. Several kings resided at Winchester, and many parliaments were held there. Memorials of its ancient superiority exist in the national denomination of measures of quantity, as Winchester ell, Winchester bushel, etc., the use of which has but recently been replaced by imperial measures. The cathedral church was first founded and endowed by Cynegils, or Kenegilsus, the first Christian king of the West Saxons. Becoming ruinous, the present fabric was begun by bishop Walkelyn, the 34th bishop, 1073. The church was first dedicated to St. Amphibalus, then to St. Peter, and afterwards to St. Swithin, once bishop here. Dedicated to the Holy Trinity by Henry VIII. St. Birinus was the first bishop of the West Saxons, his seat Dorchester, 636; Wins, in 660, was the first bishop of Winchester. The see is valued in the king's books at 279*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* annually. Present income, 10,500*l.*

Winchester (Va.). This town is situated in the Shenandoah valley. During the American civil war there were several conflicts here of greater or less importance. Here, on 23 March, 1862, gen. Shields repulsed "Stonewall" Jackson. Jackson attacked gen. Banks at this place, 25 May, and forced him to retreat. Gen. Milroy held the town with 7000 men at the time of Lee's invasion, June, 1863. On the approach of the confederates he retreated 15 June, and a column of the enemy gaining his rear, while another attacked in front, he was defeated, his whole force dispersed, and 2300 captured. In the autumn of 1864, gen. Sheridan, commanding the army of the Upper Potomac, held a strong position near the railroad from Harper's Ferry towards Winchester. The confederate general Early commanded a large force in the valley of the Shenandoah, and on 18 Sept. was posted on the Opequan Creek near Winchester. Sheridan gained the rear of the confederates, and on 19 Sept. defeated them, capturing 4500 prisoners. On the confederate side gens. Rodes and Gordon were killed; on the national, gen. D. A. Russell was killed, and gens. Upton, McIntosh, and Chapman were wounded. The national loss was over 3000. The confederate loss in killed and wounded was 3500.

Winchester School, the oldest of our great schools, "Seinte Marie College of Wynchestre," the charter of which is dated Oct. 1882, was founded in 1387 by William (Long) of Wykeham, bishop of Winchester, who had established a school here in 1373. The ancient statutes were revised in 1855; and still further altered by the Public Schools act of 1868. In Nov.-Dec. 1872 there was much published correspondence respecting the tunding—the excessive punishment of the boys by boy prefects.

Winding-up Acts (to facilitate the winding-up the affairs of joint-stock companies which are unable to meet their engagements) were passed in 1848, 1849, 1857, and 1862.

Windmills are of great antiquity, and stated to be of Roman or Saracen invention. They are said to have been originally introduced into Europe by the knights of St. John, who took the hint from what they had seen in the crusades.—Baker. Windmills were first known in Spain, France, and Germany, in 1299.—Anderson. Wind saw-mills were invented by a Dutchman in 1633, when one was erected near the Strand, in London.

Windows. There were glass windows in Pompeii, A.D. 79, as is evident from its ruins. It is certain that windows of some kind were glazed so early as the third century, if not before, though the fashion was not introduced until it was done by Benedict Biscop, about 650. Windows of glass were used in private houses, but the glass was imported, 1177.—Anderson. In England, in 1851, about 6000 houses had fifty windows and upwards in each; about 275,000 had ten windows and upwards; and 725,000 had seven windows, or less than seven.

Window tax first enacted in order to defray the expense of and delinquency in the recoinage of gold. 1695
The tax increased, 5 Feb. 1746-7; again in 1778; and again on the commutation-tax for tea. 1 Oct. 1784
The tax again increased in. 1797, 1802, and 1808
Reduced. 1823
The revenue derived from windows was in 1840 about a million and a quarter sterling; and in 1850 (to 5 April), 1,832,654.
The tax repealed by act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36 (which act imposed a duty upon inhabited houses in lieu thereof).

Windsor Castle (Berkshire), a residence of the British sovereigns, begun by William the Conqueror, and enlarged by Henry I. about 1110. Edward III., who was born here, 13 Nov. 1312, caused the old building, with the exception of three towers at the west end, to be taken down, and re-erected the whole castle under the direction of William of Wykeham, 1356, and built St. George's chapel. He assessed every county in England to send him workmen. James I. of Scotland was imprisoned here, 1406-23. Several additions were made by Henry VIII. Elizabeth made the grand north terrace; and Charles II. repaired and beautified it, 1676-80.

The chapel repaired and opened. Oct. 1790

Windsor Forest, situated to the south and west of the town of Windsor, was formerly 120 miles in circumference; in 1867 it was 77½ miles round, but it has since been reduced in its bounds to about 56 miles. It was surveyed in 1789, and found to contain 59,600 acres.
Virginia Water and the plantations about it were taken out of the forest.

The marshes were drained and the trees planted for William, duke of Cumberland, about 1746; and much was done by George IV., who often resided at the lodge.

On the south side is Windsor Great Park; it contains about 3800 acres.

The Little Park, on the north and east sides of the castle, contains about 500 acres. The gardens are elegant, and have been considerably improved by the addition of the house and gardens of the duke of St. Albans, purchased by the crown.

Wine. "Noah planted a vineyard, and drank of the wine," 2347 B.C. (Gen. ix. 20); see Vine. Ching-Noung, emperor of China, is said to have made rice-wine, 1998 B.C. The art of making wine is said to have been brought from India by Bacchus. Christ changed water into wine at the marriage of Cana in Galilee, A.D. 30 (John ii. 3-10).

Wine sold in England by apothecaries as a cordial in 1300, and so continued for some time after, although there is mention of "wine for the king" so early as John.

Winter, see Frosts.

Winter Assizes Act, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 57 (11 Aug. 1876), gives power, by order in council, to unite counties for the purpose of winter assizes, for more speedy trials of prisoners.

Wire. The invention of drawing wire is ascribed to Rodolph of Nuremberg, about 1410. Mills for this purpose were first set up at Nuremberg in 1563. The first wire-mill in England was erected in Mortlake in 1663.—Mortimer.

Wirtemberg, see Württemberg.

Wisconsin, a northwestern state of the United States was organized as a territory in 1836; and received into the Union 29 May, 1848.

Wissembourg, or WEISSENBURG, N. E. France, in the department of the Lower Rhine, situate on the right bank of the river Lauter, the boundary of France and the Palatinate. It was formerly an imperial city of Alsace, and was seized by Louis XIV. in 1673, and annexed to France by the treaty of Ryswick, 1697. The "lines" of Wissembourg, erected by Villars 1705, were taken by the Austrians and retaken by the French 1793, after Hoche's victory at Geisberg. On 4 Aug. 1870, the crown-prince of Prussia crossed the Lauter and gained a brilliant but bloody victory over the French (a part of MacMahon's division), storming the lines, and the Geisberg. Gen. Abel Douay was mortally wounded, and about 500 prisoners were made. The killed and wounded on both sides appear to have been nearly equal. The German army, composed of Prussians, Bavarians, and Württembergers, were, it is said, about 40,000 against about 10,000 French, who fought with desperate bravery.

Witchcraft. The Jewish law (Exodus xxii. 18), 1491 B.C., decreed, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Saul, after banishing or condemning witchcraft, consulted the witch of Endor, 1056 B.C. (1 Sam. xxviii.). Bishop Hutchinson's historical "Essay on Witchcraft" was published in 1718. Pope Innocent VIII. issued a bull against witchcraft in 1484. Thousands of innocent persons were burned, and others killed by the tests applied.

Many Templars burned at Paris for witchcraft, etc., 1309.

Joan of Arc burned at Rouen as a witch, 30 May, 1431.

About five hundred witches burned in Geneva in three months, 1515.

Many burned in the diocese of Como in a year, about 1524.

A great number in France, about 1520, when one sorcerer confessed to having 1200 associates.

Nine hundred burned in Lorraine, 1580-1595.

One hundred and fifty-seven burned at Würzburg, old and young, learned and ignorant, between 1627 and 1629.

Grandier, the parish priest at Loudon, burned on a charge of having bewitched a whole convent of nuns, 1634.

In Bretagne, twenty poor women put to death as witches, 1654.

Disturbances commenced on charges of witchcraft in America, in Massachusetts, 1648-9; and persecutions raged dreadfully in Pennsylvania in 1683; see infra.

At Salem, in New England, nineteen persons hanged (by the Puritans) for witchcraft, eight more condemned; fifty confessed themselves to be witches and were pardoned, 1692; see infra.

Marin Roneta burned at Würzburg in 1749.

At Kalisk, in Poland, nine old women, charged with having bewitched and rendered unfruitful the lands belonging to that palatinate, were burned 17 Jan. 1775.

Five women condemned to death by the Brahmins, at Patna, for sorcery, and executed, 15 Dec. 1802.

WITCHCRAFT IN ENGLAND.

A statute enacted declaring all witchcraft and sorcery to be felony without benefit of clergy, 33 Hen. VIII. 1541. Again, 5 Eliz. 1562, and 1 James I. 1603.

The 73d canon of the church prohibits the clergy from casting out devils, 1603.

Barrington estimates the judicial murders for witchcraft in England in 200 years at 30,000.

Matthew Hopkins, the "witch-finder," causes the judicial murder of about 100 persons in Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk, 1645-7.

Sir Matthew Hale burned two persons for witchcraft in 1664. Seventeen or eighteen persons burned at St. Oystins, in Essex, about 1676.

Two pretended witches were executed at Northampton in 1705, and five others seven years afterwards.

In 1716, Mrs. Hicks, and her daughter, aged nine, were hanged at Huntingdon.

Northamptonshire and Huntingdon preserved the superstition about witchcraft later than other counties.

In Scotland, thousands of persons were burned in the period of about a hundred years. Among the victims were persons of the highest rank, while all orders in the state concurred. James I. even caused a whole assize to be prosecuted for an acquittal. The king published his Demonologie in Edinburgh, 1597. The last sufferer in Scotland was at Dornoch in 1722.

The lives against witchcraft had lain dormant for many years, when an ignorant person attempting to revive them (by finding a bill against a poor old woman in Surrey for the practice of witchcraft), they were revived, 10 Geo. II. 1736.

Credulity in witchcraft still abounds in the country districts of England. On 4 Sept. 1863, a poor old paralyzed Frenchman died in consequence of having been ducked as a wizard at Castle Hedingham, Essex, and similar cases have since occurred.

Ann Turner, old; killed as a witch by a half-insane man at Long Compton, Warwickshire, 17 Sept. 1875.

Witchcraft, SALEM. A curious chapter in the history of popular delusions is the record of that which is known in American history as Salem witchcraft. The people of Massachusetts, from the rulers to the most humble, generally believed in witchcraft. It had taken strong hold upon their feelings, and in the early spring of 1692 excitement suddenly broke out at Danvers (part of Salem), Mass., and spread like an epidemic. It commenced in the family of the parish minister. His niece or daughter acted strangely, and an old Indian servant-woman was accused of having bewitched her. Fasting and prayer were resorted to, to break the "spell." The malady increased. The alarm spread over the whole community, and the idea seized the colonists that evil spirits, having ministering servants among them, overshadowed the land. Old and ill-favored women were suspected and accused of practicing sorcery. Even the lady of governor Phipps did not escape suspicion. Many excellent persons, suspected, were imprisoned, and Mr. Burroughs, a minister, was executed. Men of strong minds and scholarly attainments were thoroughly deluded. For six months the dreadful delusion prevailed, and during that time 20 persons suffered death, 55 were tortured or frightened into a confession of witchcraft, and when a special court was convened in October, 1692, no less than 150 accused persons were in prison. A sudden reaction took place, and many of the accusers shrunk abashed from the public gaze.

Witena-mot, or WITENA-GE MOT, the assembling of the wise men, the great council of the Anglo-Saxons. A witena-mot was called in Winchester by Egbert, 800, and in London, 833, to consult on the proper means to repel the Danes; see Parliament.

Witapak (in Russia), where a battle was fought between the French under marshal Victor, duke of Belluno, and the Russians, commanded by gen. Wittgenstein. The French were defeated after a desperate engagement, with the loss of about 3000 men on both sides, 14 Nov. 1812.

Witnesses. Two or more witnesses were required by the law of Moses, 1451 B.C. (Deut. xvi. 6), and by the early Christian church in cases of discipline (2 Cor. xiii. 1), A.D. 60. The evidence of two witnesses required to attain for high-treason, 25 Edw. III. 1352. In civil actions between party and party, if a man be subpoenaed as a witness on a trial, he must appear in court on pain of 100*l.* to be forfeited to the king, and 10*l.*, together with the damages equivalent to the loss sustained by the want of his evidence to the party aggrieved. Lord Ellenborough ruled that no witness is obliged to answer questions which may tend to degrade himself, 10 Dec. 1802. New act relating to the examination of witnesses passed 13 Geo. III. 1778. Act to enable courts of law to order the examination of witnesses upon interrogations and otherwise, 1 Will. IV. 30 March, 1831.

Wives, see Marriage. By the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes act, passed in 1857, the condition of married women have been much benefited. When ill-used they can obtain a divorce or judicial separation; and while in the latter state any property they may acquire is secured to them personally, as if unmarried. By another act passed in 1857, they are enabled to dispose of reversionary interests in personal property or estates. An act to amend the law relating to the property of married women was passed 9 Aug. 1870. By it the separate earnings of a wife were secured to her own use, as well as personal and freehold property bequeathed to her. She may maintain an action at law, and acquires other rights. The husband is declared not liable for debts contracted by his wife prior to marriage, and she may be sued for them. This act was amended in 1874. Husband and wife may be jointly sued for her debts before marriage. By the Matrimonial Causes act, 1878, a magistrate can grant judicial separation, with maintenance, to a wife suffering from her husband's ill-usage.

House of lords decide that the husband is not responsible for his wife's debts if he allow sufficient for dress, etc. (Drabkam v. Mellon).....27 Nov. 1880

Woerth sur Sauer, a town in the department of the Lower Rhine, N.E. France. After storming Wissembourg (which see) on 4 Aug. 1870, the crown-prince of Prussia, with the 3d army (about 150,000), marched rapidly forward and surprised part of the French army under marshal MacMahon, including the corps of Canrobert and part of that of Faily (about 47,000), and defeated it in a long, desperate, and sanguinary engagement near this place, 6 Aug. The battle lasted from 9 A.M. till 4 P.M. The chief struggles occurred in the country round Reichshoffen and in the village of Frœschweiler; the French are said to have charged the German line eleven times, each time breaking it, but always finding a fresh mass behind. The ridge on which Wuerth stands was not captured until the French were taken in flank by the Bavarians and Wurtembergers. Nearly all MacMahon's staff were killed, and the marshal himself, unhorsed, fell fainting into a ditch, from which he was rescued by a soldier. He then, on foot, directed the retreat towards Saverne, to cover the passes of the Vosges. The victory is attributed to the very great numerical superiority of the Germans as well as to their excellent strategy. The French loss has been estimated at 5000 killed and wounded, and 55,000 prisoners, 2 eagles, 6 mitrailleuses, 35 cannon, and much baggage. The Germans are stated to have had above 8000 men put hors de combat. It was admitted that MacMahon had acted as an able and brave commander.

Wolverhampton (Staffordshire), an old town formerly named Hamton, owes its present name to the foundation of a college here by Wulfrana, sister of king Edgar, and widow of Aldhelm, duke of Northampton, 996. The queen was present at the inauguration of the prince-consort's statue here, 30 Nov. 1866; and the church congress was opened here, 1 Oct. 1867. Wolverhampton is eminent for its manufactures in metal. Statue of C. P. Villiers (its M.P., 1835-7) was uncovered, 6 June, 1879.

Wolves were once very numerous in England. Their heads were demanded as a tribute, particularly 300 yearly from Wales, by king Edgar, 961, by which step they were falsely said to be totally destroyed.—Carte. Edward I. issued his mandate for the destruction of wolves in several counties of England, 1289. Ireland was infested by wolves for many centuries after their extirpation in England; for there are accounts of some being found there so late as 1710, when the last presentment for killing wolves was made in the county of Cork. Wolves still infest France, in which kingdom 8384 wolves and cubs were killed in 1828-9. They were troublesome in the Vosges, Oct. 1875.

Wood Pavement was laid down at Whitehall in 1839; and in Oxford street, the Strand, and other streets. The principal part was soon taken up. In Nov. 1872, the Improved Wood-pavement Company put forth a prospectus; and in May, 1876, wood had been largely laid down, and was said to be the best pavement in London.

The oversight of works and public buildings was added to its duties in 1832, but transferred to a separate board of commissioners in 1851. In 1874 the annual revenue of the crown woods and forests was 487,695*l*; expenditure, 35,875*l*.

Wood's Half-pence, for circulation in Ireland and America, were coined by virtue of a patent, passed 1722-3. Against them, Dr. Jonathan Swift, by his "Drapier's Letters," raised such a spirit that Wood was virtually banished the kingdom. The half-pence were assayed in England by sir Isaac Newton, and proved to be genuine, in 1724.

Woodstock (Oxfordshire). In Woodstock, now Blenheim Park, originally stood a royal palace, in which king Ethelred held a parliament, and Alfred the Great translated "Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiæ," 888. Henry I. beautified the palace; and here resided Rosamond, mistress of Henry II., 1154. In it were born Edmund, second son of Edward I., 1301, and Edward, eldest son of Edward III., 1330; and here the princess Elizabeth was confined by her sister Mary, 1554. A splendid mansion, built at the expense of the nation for the duke of Marlborough, was erected here to commemorate his victory at Blenheim in 1704. At that time every trace of the ancient edifice was removed, and two elms were planted on its site; see Blenheim. Scott's romance, "Woodstock," was published June, 1826. Marshall's "History of Woodstock," 1873.

Wool. From the earliest times to the reign of queen Elizabeth the wool of Great Britain was not only superior to that of Spain, but accounted the finest in the universe; and even in the times of the Romans a manufacture of woollen cloths was established at Winchester for the use of the emperors.—Anderson. In later times wool was manufactured in England, and is mentioned 1185, but not in any quantity until 1381, when the weaving of it was introduced by John Kempe and other artisans from Flanders. This was the real origin of our now unrivalled manufacture, 6 Edw. III. 1331.—Rymer's Fœdera.

Woolsack, the seat of the lord high chancellor of England in the house of lords, so called from its being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. Wool was the staple commodity of England in the reign of Edward III., when the woolsack first came into use.

Woolwich (Kent), the most ancient military and naval arsenal in England. Its royal dockyard, where men-of-war were built in the reign of Henry VIII., was closed 1 Oct. 1869. Here Harry Grace de Dieu was built, 1512; and here she was burned in 1552. The royal arsenal was formed about 1720, on the site of a rabbit-warren; it contains vast magazines of great guns, mortars, bombs, powder, and other warlike stores; a foundry, with many furnaces, for casting ordnance; and a great laboratory, where fireworks, cartridges, grenades, etc., are made for the public service. The Royal Military Academy was erected in the royal arsenal, but the institution was not completely formed until 19 Geo. II. 1745.

Worcester, successively an important British, Roman, and Saxon town, was burned by the Danes (1041) for resisting the tribute called Danegelt. William I. built a castle, 1090. The city was frequently taken and retaken during the civil wars of the middle ages, and by Cromwell in 1651.—The Bishopric was founded by Ethelred, king of the Mercians, 680, and taken from the see of Lichfield, of which it composed a part. The married priests of the cathedral were displaced, and monks settled in their stead, 964. The church was rebuilt by Wolstan, 25th bishop, 1030. The see has yielded to the church of Rome four saints, and to the English nation five lord-chancellors and three lord-treasurers. It is valued in the king's books at 1049*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* per annum. Present income, 5000*l.*

Worms, a city on the Rhine, in Hesse-Darmstadt. The Roman city, Borbetomagus, was plundered by the Alemanni, 354, and by Attila, 451; rebuilt by Clovis I. about 475. Here Charlemagne resided in 806 B.C. Here was held the imperial diet before which Martin Luther was summoned, 4 April, 1521, and by which he was proscribed. Luther was met by 2000 persons on foot and on horseback, at the distance of a league from Worms. When Spalatini sent to warn him of his danger, he answered, "If there were as many devils in Worms as there are tiles upon the roofs of its houses, I would go on." He appeared before the emperor, the archduke Ferdinand, six electors, twenty-four dukes, seven margraves, thirty bishops and prelates, and many princes, counts, lords, and ambassadors, 17 April, acknowledged his writings and opinions, and left Worms, in fact, a conqueror. Yet, to save his life, he had to remain in seclusion under the protection of the elector of Saxony for about a year. The edict putting him under the ban of the empire was issued 26 May, 1521. Worms was burned, by order of Louis XIV., 1689, the cathedral excepted; and was taken by the French, under Custine, 4 Oct. 1792. A memorial statue of Luther at Worms was uncovered, 25 June, 1868, in the presence of the king of Prussia and other sovereigns.

Worship. The first worship mentioned is that of Abel, 3872 B.C. (Gen. iv.). "Men began to call on the name of the Lord," 3769 B.C. (Gen. iv.). The Jewish order of worship was set up by Moses, 1490 B.C. Solomon consecrated the temple, 1004 B.C. To the corruptions of the simple worship of the patriarchs all the Egyptian and Greek idolatries owed their origin. Athotex, son of Menes, king of Upper Egypt, is supposed to be the Copt of the Egyptians, and the Toth, or Hermes, of the Greeks, the Mercury of the Latins, and the Teutates of the Celts or Gauls, 2112 B.C.—Usher.

Worship IN ENGLAND. The Druids were the priests here, at the invasion of the Romans (55 B.C.), who eventually introduced Christianity, which was almost extirpated by the victorious Saxons (455), who were pagans. The Roman Catholic form of Christianity was introduced by Augustine, 596, and continued till the Reformation (which see). See Hymns, Liturgies, Prayers, Public Worship, Ritualists.

Worsted, spun wool, obtained its name from having been first spun at a town called Worsted, in Norfolk, in which the inventor lived, and where manufactures of worsted are still extensively carried on, 14 Edw. III. 1340.—Aulerson. "A worsted-stocking knave" is a term of reproach or contempt used by Shakespeare.

Wounded in Battle, see Geneva Convention, and Aid to Sick and Wounded.

Wounding. Malicious wounding of another was adjudged death by the English statutes. The Coventry act was passed in 1671; see Coventry Act. By lord Ellenborough's act, persons who stab or cut with intent to murder, maim, or disfigure another were declared guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. Those guilty of maliciously shooting at another, in any dwelling-house or other place, are also punishable under the same statute in the same degree, 43 Geo. III. 1802. This offence is met by some later statutes, particularly the act for consolidating and amending the acts relating to offences against the person, 9 Geo. IV., June, 1828. This last act is extended to Ireland by 10 Geo. IV. 1829. An act for the prevention of malicious shooting, stabbing, etc., in Scotland, 6 Geo. IV. 1825; amended by 10 Geo. IV., 4 June, 1829, for the prevention and punishment of assaults on women and children.

Wreck Commission, a new court established to inquire into the causes of shipwrecks; first sat, 30 Oct. 1876, Mr. H. C. Rothery president.

Wrecks. The loss of merchant and other ships by wreck upon lee-shores, coasts, and disasters in the open sea, was estimated at Lloyd's, in 1800, to be about an average of 365 ships a year. In 1830, it appeared by Lloyd's Lists that 677 British vessels were totally lost, under various circumstances, in that year. The laws respecting wrecks were consolidated in 1846 and 1851; see Seamen (commission of inquiry.)

British vessels wrecked in 1848 were, sailing vessels, 501; steamers, 13; tonnage, 96,920.

In 1851, there were wrecked 611 vessels, of which number 11 were steamers; the tonnage of the whole being 111,976. The year 1852-3, particularly the winter months (Dec. and Jan.), was very remarkable for the number of dreadful shipwrecks and fires at sea; but a few of them are recorded.

Wrecks in 25 years (1854-79), 49,322; lives lost, 18,319. Many vessels were lost in the great storms, 25, 26 Oct. 1859; 28 May, 1861; 19, 20 Oct. 1861; and 13, 14 Nov. 1862; by a cyclone, India, 5 Oct. 1864; in the West Indies, Oct. 1867.

From the establishment of the Royal National Life Boat Institution, in 1824, to the end of 1867, 16,987 lives had been saved by its life-boats; to 1890, 27,663; 577 in 1890.

Lives saved, principally by the life-boats, in 1867, 5445; in 1869, 5121; in 1871, 4336; in year 1875-6, 4358; in 1878-9, 3302.

La Lutine was a French ship captured by admiral Duncan. She contained much bullion and money belonging to merchants; a great loss to the underwriters at Lloyd's. The Dutch government claimed the wreck, and granted one third of the salvage in 1801 to the bullion bankers. After much discussion and occasional recoveries, the king of the Netherlands ceded to Great Britain (for Lloyd's) half the remainder of the wreck. A Dutch salvage company began operations in Aug. 1857. At the end of 1859, Lloyd's had received 22,122, 6s. 7d. About 99,833s. recovered; about 1,175,000s. remaining. A chair and table at Lloyd's were made of the rudder, recovered in 1859.—Martin's History of Lloyd's.

(See New Style, Phonetic Year, Sabbatical Year, French Revolutionary Calendar.)

YEAR OF OUR LORD; see Anno Domini.

YEAR OF THE REIGN. From the time of William the Conqueror, 1066, the year of the sovereign's reign has been given to all public instruments. The king's patents, charters, proclamations, and all acts of parliament have since then been generally so dated. The same manner of dating is used in most of the European states for all similar documents and records; see List of Kings under England.

YEAR AND A DAY. A space of time in law, and in many cases establishes and fixes a right; as in an estray, on proclamation being made, if the owner does not claim it within the time, it is forfeited. The term arose in the Norman law, which enacted that a beast found on another's land, if unclaimed for a year and a day, belonged to the lord of the soil. It is otherwise a legal space of time.

Year-books contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the courts of common-law. The printed volumes extend from the beginning of the reign of Edward II. to nearly the end of the reign of Henry VIII., a period of about 220 years; but in this series there are many omissions. These books are the first in the long line of legal reports in which England is so rich, and may be considered as, to a great extent, the foundation of our unwritten law, "Lex non scripta." In 1863 et seq., various year-books of Edward I. (1292-1304), edited by Mr. A. J. Horwood, for the series of the Chronicles and Memorials, were published at the expense of the British government.

Yeast, a substance causing fermentation, was discovered by Cagniard de la Tour and Schwann, independently, in 1836, to be a vegetable cell or fungus.

Yellow-fever, an American pestilence, made its appearance at Philadelphia, where it committed great ravages, 1699. It appeared in several islands of the West Indies in 1732, 1739, and 1745. It raged with unparalleled violence at Philadelphia in Oct. 1762; and most awfully at New York in the beginning of Aug. 1791. This fever again spread great devastation at Philadelphia in July, 1793; carrying off several thousand persons.—Hardie. It again appeared in Oct. 1797; and spread its ravages over the northern coast of America, Sept. 1798. It reappeared at Philadelphia in the summer of 1802; and broke out in Spain, in Sept. 1803. The yellow fever was very violent at Gibraltar in 1804 and 1814; in the Mauritius, July, 1815; at Antigua, in Sept. 1816; and it raged with dreadful consequences at Cadiz, and the isle of St. Leon, in Sept. 1819. A malignant fever raged at Gibraltar in Sept. 1828, and did not terminate until the following year. Yellow fever ravaged Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., in 1855; Wilmington, N. C., in 1862; and Savannah, Ga., in 1876. It has been epidemic at New Orleans many times.

YELLOW FEVER IN NEW ORLEANS.

Memphis was almost depopulated by this scourge in 1878-9. During 1878 there were 5160 deaths there from the fever; and during 1879, although the population was reduced to 18,500, there were 1532 cases and 485 deaths. The fever appeared as an epidemic in New Orleans, 12 July, 1878, and spread rapidly to interior towns, some of which were depopulated. The total number of cases in the United States during 1878 was 65,976, with 14,809 deaths. The first case in 1879 was reported 5 July; first case in Memphis, 8 July.

Yellowstone National Park, about 3000 square miles, in territory of Wyoming.

It includes Yellowstone lake, about 350 square miles, with numerous geysers, and rugged mountains, forests, meadows, rivers, and other beautiful scenery. Its formation was authorized by congress in March, 1872.

Yeomanry, see under Volunteers.

Yeomen of the Guard, a peculiar body of foot-guards to the king's person, instituted at the coronation of Henry VII., 30 Oct. 1485, which originally consisted of fifty men under a captain. They were called buffet-eaters, a corruption of buffetiers, being attendants on the king's buffet or sideboard; see Battle-axe. They were of a larger stature than other guards, being required to be over six feet in height, and were armed with arquebuses and other arms. The band was increased by Henry's successors to one hundred men, and seventy supernumeraries; and, when one of the hundred died, it was ordered that his place should be supplied out of the seventy. They were clad after the manner of king Henry VIII.—Aschmole's Instit. This is said to have been the first permanent military band instituted in England. John, earl of Oxford, was the first captain in 1486.—Beaton's Pol. Index.

Yermuk (Syria). Near here the emperor Heraclius was totally defeated by the Saracens, after a fierce engagement, Nov. 636. Damascus was taken, and his army expelled from Syria.

Yew-tree (Taxus). The origin of planting yew-trees in church-yards was (these latter being fenced) to secure the trees from cattle, and in this manner preserve them for the encouragement of archery. A general plantation of them for the use of archers was ordered by Richard III., 1483.—Stow's Chron. Near Fountains Abbey, Yorkshire, were seven yew-trees, called the Seven Sisters, supposed to have been planted before 1088; the circumference of the largest thirty-four feet seven inches round the trunk. In 1851 a yew-tree was said to be growing in the church-yard of Gresford, North Wales, whose circumference was nine yards nine inches, being the largest and oldest yew-tree in the British dominions; but tradition states that there are some yews in England older than the introduction of Christianity. The old yew-tree mentioned in the survey taken of Richmond palace, in 1649, is said to be still existing.

Yezdegird, or PERSIAN ERA, was formerly universally adopted in Persia, and is still used by the Parsees in India, and by the Arabs, in certain computations. This era began on 26 June, 632, when Yezdegird was elected king of Persia. The year consisted of 365 days only, and therefore its commencement, like that of the old Egyptian and Armenian year, anticipated the Julian year by one day in every four years. This difference amounted to nearly 112 days in the year 1075, when it was reformed by Jelaledin, who ordered that in future the Persian year should receive an additional day whenever it should appear necessary to postpone the commencement of the following year, that it might occur on the day of the sun's passing the same degree of the ecliptic.

Yezidis, an Eastern tribe, living near the Euphrates, visited by Mr. Layard in 1841; see Devil Worship.

Ynglings (youths, or offshoots), descendant; of the Scandinavian hero Odin, ruled Sweden till 830, when the last of the pontiff kings, Olaf Trætella, being expelled, led to the foundation of the Norwegian monarchy.

Yoke is spoken of as a type of servitude. The ceremony of making prisoners pass under it was practised by the Samnites towards the Romans, 321 a.c.; see Caudine Forks. This disgrace was afterwards inflicted by the Romans upon their vanquished enemies.—Infresnoy.

Yokohama, see Japan.

York (North of England), a town of the Brigantes, named Eborac, settled by the Romans during the second campaign of Agricola, about 79, and named Eboracum or Eburacum, and became the metropolis of the north.

York (Upper Canada), founded in 1794; since 1804 named Toronto. In the war between America and Great Britain, the United States forces made several attacks upon the province of Upper Canada, and succeeded in taking York, the seat of the government, 27 April, 1813; but it was soon afterwards again retaken by the British.

York and Lancaster, WARS OF, see ROSES.

York, ARCHBISHOPRIC OF. The most ancient metropolitan see in England, being, it is said, so made by king Lucius about 180, when Christianity was first partly established in England. The bishop Eborac was present at the council of Arles, 314. The see was overturned by the Saxons, and was revived by pope Gregory on their conversion, and Paulinus is said to have been consecrated archbishop, 21 July, 625. York and Durham were long the only two sees in the north of England, until Henry I. erected a bishopric at Carlisle, and Henry VIII. another at Chester. York was the metropolitan see of the Scottish bishops; but during the time of archbishop Nevil, 1404, they withdrew their obedience, and had archbishops of their own. Much dispute arose between the two English metropolitans about precedence, as by pope Gregory's institutions it was thought he meant that whichever of them was first confirmed should be superior; appeal was made to the court of Rome by both parties, and it was determined in favor of Canterbury. The archbishop of York was allowed to style himself primate of England, while the archbishop of Canterbury styles himself primate of all England. The province of York now contains the dioceses of York, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Eborac and Man, Manchester, and Ripon (which see). York has yielded to the Church of Rome eight saints and three cardinals, and to England twelve lord-chancellors, two lord-treasurers, and two lord-presidents of the north. It is rated in the king's books, 30 Hen. VIII., 1546, at 1400*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* per annum.—Baltimore. Present income, 10,000*l.*

York Minster (dedicated to St. Peter). The first Christian church erected here, which appears to have been preceded by a Roman temple, was built by Edwin, king of Northumbria, of wood, about 625, and of stone about 656. It was damaged by fire in 741, and was rebuilt by archbishop Albert about 780. It was again destroyed by fire in the year 1069, and rebuilt by archbishop Thomas, of Bayeux. It was once more burned down in 1127, with St. Mary's abbey, and 20 parish churches in York. Archbishop Roger built the choir, 1164-81; Walter Gray added the south transept in 1227; John de Romayne, the treasurer of the cathedral, built the north transept in 1260. His son, archbishop Emonnus, laid the foundation of the nave in 1281. In 1300, William de Malton built the two western towers, which were finished by John de Birmingham in 1342. Arch-bishop Thoraby, in 1361, began to rebuild the choir in accordance with the magnificence of the nave, and he also rebuilt the lantern-tower. The minster was set on fire by Jonathan Martia, a lunatic, and the roof of the choir and its internal fittings destroyed, 3 Feb. 1279; the damage, estimated at 60,000*l.*, was repaired in 1283 under sir Robert Smirke. An accidental fire broke out, and in one hour reduced the belfry to a shell, destroyed the roof of the nave, and much damaged the edifice, 20 May, 1840. This was restored by Sidney Smirke, at a cost of 25,000*l.*, 1841.

Yorkshire Exhibition of Arts and Manufactures, opened at Leeds, by the duke of Edinburgh, 13 May, 1875.

Yorktown (Virginia, U. S.). Lord Cornwallis had taken possession of Yorktown in Aug. 1781; but, after sustaining a disastrous siege, he was obliged to surrender his army, consisting of about 7000 men, to the allied armies of France and America, under the command of gen. Washington and count Rochambeau, 19 Oct. 1781. This mischance was attributed to sir Henry Clinton, who had not given the garrison the necessary succor they expected; and it mainly led to the close of the war. The town was strongly fortified by the confederates in the American civil war, but surrendered to McClellan, May, 1862. Celebration of the centenary of the British surrender, Oct. 1881; British flag saluted.

Young Ireland, see Ireland, Young.

Young Men's Christian Association, for improvement of young men by means of classes, meetings, etc., founded 1844. Exeter-hall, Strand, was bought for the association about July, 1880. It met there 29 March, 1881.

Yttrium, a rare metal. The earth yttria was discovered by prof. Gadolin in a mineral at Ytterby, in Sweden, 1794. The metal was first obtained by Wöhler in 1828. It is of a dark-gray color, and brittle.

Yucatan, discovered by Francis Fernandez Cordova, 1517; conquered by Bernal Diaz, 1522; declared for independence, 1813. Its ancient cities are described in works by the American traveller Stephens, 1838 and 1842.

Yvres (now IVRY, N.W. France), where a battle was fought, 14 March, 1590, between Henry IV. of France, aided by his chief nobility, and the generals of the Catholic League, over whom the king obtained a complete victory.

Z.

Zagrab (Hungary). Here Andrew II. defeated the invader Charles Martel, to whom the pope had assigned his crown, 1292.

Zähringen (Baden), the seat of dukes, ancestors of the grand-dukes of Baden, descended from Herman I., margrave, 1074; see Baden.

Zama (near Carthage, N. Africa), the scene of the battle between the two greatest commanders in the world at the time, Hannibal and Scipio Africanus. The victory was won by Scipio, and was decisive of the fate of Carthage; it led to an ignominious peace the year after, which closed the second Punic war. The Romans lost about 2000 killed and wounded, while the Carthaginians lost in killed and prisoners more than 40,000; some historians make the loss greater; 202 B.C.

Zambesi, river of E. Africa, explored by Livingstone 1851-6, 1858-64. His book published Nov. 1865.

Zamora (Spain). Here Alphonso the Great defeated the Moors in 901.

Zante. One of the Ionian Islands (which see).

Zanzaleens. This sect rose in Syria, under Zanzalee, 535; he taught that water baptism was of no efficacy, and that it was necessary to be baptized by fire, with the application of a red-hot iron. The sect was at one time very numerous.

Zanzibar, or ZANGUEBAR, an island (E. Africa), metropolis of the possessions of the imaum of Muscat, and chief market for ivory, gum, coral, and cloves, and also for slaves. At the death of the seyyid (or lord), misnamed "imaum" and "sultan," of Muscat, 1856, his dominions were divided between his sons; see Muscat. Majid obtained Zanzibar, after a contest with his brother, Barghash Seyyid, who, however, succeeded at his death, 7 Oct. 1870. An expedition for the purpose of suppressing the slave-trade was sent to Zanzibar, under the command of sir Bartle Frere, 20 Nov. 1872; arrived about 12 Jan. 1873. After some delay and negotiation by Dr. Kirke, a treaty was signed abolishing the trade, 5 June, 1873. The contract for the mail to Zanzibar was censured as too expensive in July, 1873, and altered. The seyyid Barghash visited England in 1875; arrived, 9 June; received by the queen, 21 June; received freedom of London, 12 July; sailed for France, 15 July. He decreed confiscation of slaves brought to Zanzibar, 18 April, 1876.

Zara, capital of Dalmatia, a Roman colony under Augustus. It revolted from Venice, and was recaptured 18 Nov. 1202; unsuccessfully besieged by the Turks, 1572, 1577; given up to Austria, 1791.

Ze, Zow, Zieres, for ye, you, and yours. The letter z was retained in Scotland, and was commonly written for the letter y so late as the reign of queen Mary, up to which period many books in the Scottish language were printed in Edinburgh with these words, 1543.

Zealand, one of the thirteen provinces which formed the League of Utrecht, 1579; see Holland and New Zealand.

Zela (N.E. Asia Minor), where Julius Cæsar defeated Pharnaces, king of Pontus, son of Mithridates. Cæsar, in announcing his victory, sent his famous despatch to the senate of Rome in these words: Veni, vidi, vici—"I came, I saw, I conquered" (perhaps the shortest despatch on record). This battle ended the war; Pharnaces escaped into Bosphorus, where he was slain by his lieutenant, Asander; Pontus was made a Roman province, and Bosphorus given to Mithridates of Pergamus, 47 B.C.

Zell (Hanover), see Denmark, 1772.

Zend-avesta, ancient sacred books of the Parsees, of which three out of twenty-one are extant. The age of these books is much disputed. Prof. Max Müller says that the MSS. had been preserved by the Parsee priests at Bomlay, where a colony of fire-worshippers had fled in the tenth century. Anquetil Duperron's French translation, from a modern Persian version, was published in 1771; edition by Eugene Burnouf, 1829-43.

Zeno, or ZENON, see Stoics.

Zenobia, Queen of the East, see Palmyra.

Zenta (in Hungary), the scene of a battle where the Germans, under prince Eugene, defeated the Turks, 11 Sept. 1697. This victory led to the peace of Carlowitz, ratified Jan. 1699.

Zetetical Society, established in 1878, to afford opportunities for the unrestricted discussion of a variety of questions, held its fourth session in Oct. 1881.

Zetunium. After defeating Samuel, king of Bulgaria, here, 29 July, 1014, the emperor Basil II. blinded his 15,000 prisoners, except one in a hundred, to whom he left one eye. The king died of grief.

Zidon, see Sidon.

Zinc. The ore of zinc, calamine or spelter, known to the Greeks, who used it in the manufacture of brass. It is said to have been known in China also, and is noticed by European writers as early as 1281; though the method of extracting it from the ore was unknown for nearly 500 years after. The metal zinc is mentioned by Paracelsus (died 1541). A mine of zinc was discovered on lord Ribblesdale's estate, Craven, Yorkshire, in 1808. Zincography was introduced in London shortly after lithography became known in England, in 1817; see Lithography. Zinc is much used in voltaic batteries, and its application in manufactures has greatly increased of late years; see Photocynography.

Zirconium, the metallic base of the earth zirconia, which was discovered by Klaproth in 1789; from this Berzelius obtained the metal in 1824. Zirconia is found in the sand of the rivers of Ceylon. The metal exists in the form of a black powder.

Zizyphus vulgaris. A shrub brought from the south of Europe about 1640. The Zizyphus Pakiurus shrub (Christ's Thorn), was brought from Africa about 1596; see Flowers.

Zodiac. Its obliquity was discovered, its twelve signs named, and their situations assigned them by Anaximander, about 560 B.C. The Greeks and Arabians borrowed the zodiac from the Hindoos.—Sir W. Jones. The zodiacal light was observed by Tycho Brahe, Descartes, and others, and named by Cassini, 1683.

Zollverein (Customs Union), the name given to the German commercial union, projected by Prussia 1818, and gradually joined by nearly all the German states except Austria. On 19 Feb. 1853, an important treaty of commerce and navigation between Austria and Prussia, to last from Jan. 1854 to Dec. 1865, was signed, to which the other states of the Zollverein gave in their adhesion on 5 April, 1853. In Nov. 1861, Prussia threatened to withdraw unless certain changes were made. By the treaty of 8 July, 1867, between the North German confederation and the southern states (Bavaria, Württemberg, Baden, and Hesse), various changes were made, and by other treaties signed in Oct. these states agreed to send delegates to a customs parliament to be held at Berlin. A session of this parliament was opened by the king of Prussia, 27 April, and closed 23 May, 1868. Federal chancellor, the count von Bismarck. Imports, 1876, valued at 191,000,000*l.*; exports, 1874, 120,500,000*l.*

Zoology (from Zōon, Greek for animal) is the division of biology which treats of animals; Aristotle 322–284 B.C., the founder of the science. Systems of classification have been made by John Ray (1628–1705), Charles Linne (1707–78), G. Buffon (1707–88), and George Cuvier (1769–1832).

Linnaeus divided the animal kingdom into six classes—Mammalia, which includes all animals that suckle their young; Aves, birds; Amphibia, or amphibious animals; Pisces, fishes; Insecta, insects; Vermes, worms; 1741.

Cuvier (died in Paris, 13 May, 1832) in his great work, "Règne Animal," published in 1816, distributed the animals into four great divisions—the Vertebrata (back-boned); the Mollusca (soft-bodied); the Articulata (jointed); and the Radiata (the organs disposed round a centre).

In 1859, prof. Owen made known a system of arranging the class Mammalia according to the nature of their brains.

The Zoological Society of London (originally the Zoological Club) was founded in 1826, and its gardens in the Regent's Park were opened in April, 1827; the society was chartered 27 March, 1829. 2072 animals in the gardens, 31 Dec. 1871; about 500 animals from India given by the prince of Wales, May, 1876.

Dr. James Murie was appointed by the society to be their first "anatomical prospector," 3 May, 1865.

On the demolition of Exeter Change, in 1829, the menagerie of Mr. Cross was temporarily lodged in the King's Mews, whence it was removed to the Surrey Zoological Gardens, 1832.

The Zoological Gardens of Dublin were opened, 1832.

Zoological station for study, open to the public, established at Naples by prof. Anton Dohrn; opened 1 Oct. 1873.

(See Aquarium, Hippopotamus, Giraffe, and Acclimatization, etc.)

Zorndorff (Prussia), where a battle was fought between the Prussian and Russian armies; the former, commanded by the king of Prussia, obtained a victory over the forces of the czarina, whose loss amounted to 21,529 men, while that of the Prussians was about 11,000; 25, 26 Aug. 1758.

Zouaves and Foot-chasseurs. When the French established a regency at Algiers in 1830, they hoped to find the employment of native troops advantageous, and selected the Zouaouas, a congregation of daring Arab tribes. In time numbers of red republicans and other enthusiastic Frenchmen joined the regiments, adopting the costume, etc.; eventually the Africans disappeared from the ranks, and no more were added. Among their colonels were Lamoricière and Cavaignac. The French Zouaves formed an important part of the army in the Crimean war, 1854–5.*

Zug, the smallest canton of Switzerland, joined the confederation 1852, and the Sonderbund 1846.

Zuider Zee, or SOUTH SEA, a gulf in the Netherlands, formerly a lake, united with the North Sea by inundations in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. In 1875 the Dutch chamber voted 9,500,000*l.* to reclaim the submerged land by drainage, and to erect a dike 26 feet high above the water, and 25 miles long; thus adding 759 square miles to the country. The Dutch Texel fleet here surrendered to admiral Mitchell, 30 Aug. 1799.

Zuinglians, the followers of the reformer Ulric Zuingli, who at Zurich declaimed against the church of Rome, and effected the same separation for Switzerland from the papal dominion which Luther did for Saxony. He procured two assemblies to be called: by the first he was authorized to proceed, by the second the ceremonies of the Romish church were abolished 1519. Zuingli died in arms, being slain in a skirmish against his popish opponents, 11 Oct. 1531. The Zuinglians were also called Sacramentarians.

Zullichau (Prussia). Here the Russians, under Soltikow, severely defeated the Prussians under Wedel, 23 July, 1759.

Zulpich, see Tolbiac.

Zulu Celibate Military System, founded by Godongwana, confirmed by Chaka and Durgan; completed by Cetwayo.

Zululand (Southeast Africa), near the British colony Natal. In the last century the Zulus were a peaceful, pastoral people.

Godongwana, a chief (termed Dingiswayo, "the Wanderer," from his early life), began a military organization by forming a celibate army; killed in battle and succeeded by his vigorous and merciless ally, Chaka, styled king, by whom Zulu supremacy was mainly established over the Fingoes and other tribes. . . . about 1812 Chaka assassinated; succeeded by his brother Durgan, crafty, treacherous, and cruel; at first friendly with the British at Natal (which see); made treaty with capt. Allen Gardiner. . . . 6 May, 1835 Massacres, Retief, 70 Boers, and their servants (who had recovered his stolen cattle), 2 Feb., and about 600 afterwards; defeats the British and Dutch in several encounters; but is severely beaten by Andries Pretorius, Dec. 1838

Durgan again defeated; killed by one of his chiefs; succeeded by his brother Umpana, peaceful and crafty, who keeps peace with the English and Dutch. . . 1840 et seq.

Cetwayo (pronounced Ketchwayo), his eldest son, kills his brothers; succeeds at his father's death; organizes still further his army, named by Frere "the celibate man-slaying war-machine". . . . Oct. 1872

Recognized on behalf of the British by Mr. Shepstone; crowned. . . . 1 Sept. 1873

Opposes missionaries; organizes armed resistance to the British; when remonstrated with for outrages, defies them. . . . 1876

Sir Bartle Frere, governor of the Cape, requests help from England; 90th regiment and a battery sent. Jan. 1878

Cetwayo refuses to give up leaders of a raid on British territory (in July), and tenders a fine; sir Bartle Frere demands as an ultimatum their surrender within 30 days. . . . Dec. "

The time (extended) having elapsed, 11 Jan., the British, under lord Chelmsford, cross the Tugela and enter Zululand. . . . 12 Jan. 1879

Col. Pearson defeats the Zulus and advances to Eshowe (which he fortifies). . . . 21 Jan. "

British camp at Isandula, or Isandlwana, about 10 miles from Rorke's Drift (on the Tugela), surprised and attacked by about 18,000 Zulus; 5 companies of the 24th regiment and many natives killed, with col.

Durnford and Pulleine, and other officers; total loss about 837; 2000 Zulus said to have been killed (Lieut. Melville and Coghill said to have perished while preserving the colors). . . . 22 Jan. "

* The Zouave organization and drill were introduced into the federal army in the great civil war in America by Ephraim E. Ellsworth, early in 1861. He was killed on 24 May, same year, at Alexandria, just after taking down a secession flag.
